Sullivan Scraps $7,500 'Ceiling' For Acts; Goes After Longterm Pacts

Strategy by Ed Sullivan in view of the changing conditions brought on by the competing Steve Allen Show on NBC-TV, has changed considerably within the past few weeks.

Custodian of the CBS-TV Sunday night variety show seemingly has adopted Las Vegas tactics, both from the viewpoint of price and in the practice of signing up a performer for comparatively long periods of time, for a period of four shots within a few months time.

Aside from the record-breaking $50,000 to be paid for three shots by Elvis Presley, Sullivan has gone beyond the $7,500 ceiling which was the former rule. For example, Imogene Coca has been pacted for three shows at $8,500 a clip. First appearance is Oct. 1 and final one will be by April 1 of next year. Sullivan has also lined up a promising pair of nitery comics, Davis & Reese for a foursome starting Oct. 14 and thence Dec. 2, Jan. 30 and March 25. Mitzi Green has been set for four shows starting Oct. 21, and then to Jan. 13, March 3 and June 2.

Curiously, the bulk of the names he's contracted for are not of the headliner type that will bring in more Nielsen points, but are supposed to be the reliable type that can offer entertainment. Sullivan apparently hopes that he'll create a situation like the first exhibit of Ricky Lane, which caught on handsomely. Indications point to the possibility that Sullivan may be shooting for big initial impacts so that he can again build up the show's status as a starmaker.

44 Years Later

At the time of the Andrea Doria-Stockholm collision at sea last week, Gen. David Sarnoff, RCA board chairman, was within 40 miles of duplicating his historic feat of being the first man to pick up the distress signal from the SS Titanic in the days (1912) when he was a Marconi Wireless apprentice.

When last weeks tragedy was flashed to the world, Sarnoff was on Nantucket Island. He still spends considerable leisure time with his favorite hobby of shore-to-ship tinkering—but on this occasion he was just relaxing.

Billy Graham Makes Good Vs. Rin-Tin-Tin, Etc., At Mpls. Aqua—20,000-Plus

Minneapolis, July 31.

Along with its stage, water and numerous other shows and parades, the just-ended local 10-day Aquatennial, annual summer mardi gras, came up this time with its most unusual attraction, evangelist Billy Graham.

Graham proved that he merited the big billing he received along with "Aqua Follies," the WCCO Radio big stage and air show headlined by Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy, the water ski circus, the Star-Tribune newspapers' outdoor show, Rin-Tin-Tin in person and "Grand Ole' Opry" as one of the festival's principal lures.

The evangelist drew an overflow crowd of more than 20,000 for his morning outdoor preaching at the municipal stadium Sunday (29) morning. His success was dated on a par with that of the various top shows.

Aquatennial directors will try to bring Graham back again next year for the one-day stand.

M-G About Set For $5,000,000 10 Yr., 16M Deal

Metro is on the verge of signing a $5,000,000 deal with Films Inc. for the non-theatrical distribution of M-G's 16m product in the U.S.

Arrangement would run for 10 years and also would give Metro a percentage of the profits. In addition, Films Inc. would extend to Metro something akin to a "favorite nations" clause, guaranteeing that 60% of the playdates garnered by Films Inc. would go to the M-G pix. Basic payment would be $500,000 a year.

There are upwards of 18,000 non-theatrical situations in the U.S., taking in schools, hospitals, convents, shutins, etc. Films Inc. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Encyclopedia Britannica. It also handles the Warner Bros. and 20th-Fox 16m films.

Apart from negotiating for the

If Democrats Overlap GOP—What Gives?

Washington, July 31.

Biggest headache of the networks is how to handle the situation if the Democratic National Convention should snarl up and keep running past the start of the G.O.P. Convention.

Since it would be the peak of the Democratic sessions, the party's hassle in Chicago would take precedence over the preliminary features of the Republican meeting in San Francisco. Latter would be cut in from time to time, the networks figure. Which has given birth to a new gag line going the rounds here

"We interrupt this convention to bring you a convention."

PIX SLOW TO END DOWNTOWN KICK

By FRED HIFT

Hogtied by the courts, snarled in red tape and held down by tradition, the film business continues to give the suburbs the brush.

Industry's unwillingness—or inability—to keep pace with shifting population patterns, which in recent years have seen suburbia emerging as a prime market, is costing Hollywood many millions of dollars in potential boxoffice revenue each year.

Big questions asked are: Why can't the big pix preem day-and-date in selected suburban firstruns and the downtown houses? What good are the suburban "saturation" playdates? Why are films lagging behind other industries in recognizing the new trends in the flight of population to the suburbs?

The distributors know they're missing out on a good bet and that, in the light of changing conditions, their merchandising approach ignores the new and stringent dictates of "convenience" for the public, which no longer treats "downtown" as its entertainment mecca. But exhibition is slow to rise to the occasion.

The only exception, of course, has been the drive-ins, which have blossomed out to a total of close to 5,000 since 1946 and which—to an inadequate extent—are an ex-

Amusements Big Segment of U.S.

Entertainment added $2,695,000,000 to the national income last year.

Radio and television broadcasting contributed $612,000,000 to the total, an all-time high for broadcasting. Motion pictures, on the upbeat, provided $1,003,000,000 of the total, and all other amusements added $1,080,000,000, says the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Film industry paid a total of $754,000,000 in wages and salaries last year, compared with $456,000,000 in broadcasting and $804,000,000 for all other amusements and recreations combined.

All branches of motion pictures provided the equivalent of 205,000 full-time jobs for 228,000 men and women in 1955. Radio and tv broadcasting had the equivalent of 72,000 jobs spread among 79,000 employees. In all recreation and amusement, about 238,000 full-time jobs were provided.

Broadcasting continues to hold its top position in the amusement field in wages and salaries. Its fulltime employees averaged $6,333 last year. The comparable figure in motion pictures was $3,678.

Zeckendorf, CBS in Huddles On 5-Block N.Y. Television City for '59

The talk about a Television City in New York for CBS has again cropped up and this time it's reported that serious discussions are now under way between network chieftains William S. Paley and Frank Stanton, and realtor William Zeckendorf which could lead to a deal in the very near future.

Proposed site for the Television City is the area extending from 30th to 37th Sts., fronting on 11th Ave., on which now run the New York Central tracks. It's understood that the tentative blueprints for the project are so massive in scope that Columbia's TV City on the Coast is dwarfed in comparison. The plaza alone, it's estimated, is five times as large as the one at Rockefeller Plaza.

CBS-TV is understood 'o be shooting for a 1959 occupancy.

Problem of where to locate has long been a vexing one to CBS. Last serious proposal was to build in the West 60s in the area of the proposed Lincoln Square cultural centre, but this hit a succession of snags.

Apparently NBC looks all set to build opposite Radio City on Avenue of the Americas between 50th and 51st streets, extending back to the Roxy Theatre in a project to be undertaken by the Rockefeller interests.

James Mason on Actors

Here's actor James Mason on the actor's role in films:

"It's difficult to be a fine actor in pictures. As a matter of fact, the best performances are very often given by those who don't know they're acting —the 'natural' actors.

"They're either the child actors, or those who act on a child's level. And for that matter—a dog can give a darn interesting performance sometimes."

$150,200,000 In '55 Profits For TV Broadcasters

Washington, July 31.

A whopping $150,200,000 in profits (before Federal taxes) was registered by the television broadcasting industry last year for a gain of approximately 67% over 1954, according to the annual report issued by the FCC last week on financial operations of stations and networks.

Earnings of the networks, including their owned and operated stations totaled $68,000,000 and accounted for about 45% of the industry's profits. The year's earnings compared with $36,500,000 in 1954.

The industry's gross business reached a new peak of $744,700,000, an increase of approximately 25% over 1954. The nets, with revenues of $374,000,000, accounted for about half of the business. In 1954 their gross was $306,700,000.

Of 377 stations which were in operation the full year, the Commission reported that 228 were in the black, including 28 UHF

He has set up Foremost Records, with two affiliates, Sandusky Music to handle BMI tunes, and Jennings Music, as the ASCAP firm. ## Bourbon on the Rocks When Cops Claim Rae's No Lady in Coast Bow

Hollywood, July 31.

Rae Bourbon's debut as a "femme" entertainer has run afoul of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's office. Formerly Ray Bourbon, a singer of risque songs, Miss Bourbon who was "christined" several months ago in a series of operations in Mexico, was arrested last night (Mon.) in her bow at the Melody Room here on a charge of impersonating a woman.

Defendant insisted she is a woman and spent the night in the county jail wearing a velvet gown. She pleaded not guilty at a hearing held this morning (Tues.) in the Beverly Hills Muncipal Court and a jury trial was set for Sept. 21.

It's recalled that when the Sahara Hotel, Las Vegas, wanted to dump the contract of Christine Jorgensen, the Las Vegas police dept. wrote the former GI-turned-femme that he would be arrested if he showed up in the town. Letter was addressed "Dear Sir." However, when contractual difficulties were straightened out, Miss Jorgensen became persona grata and has since played several Vegas engagements.

'Our Films Permeated With Love For the Ordinary Man,' Says USSR Spokesman at Czech Festival

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Karlovy Vary, July 31.

East Europe plays its film festivals straight; the Karlovy Vary outing had the spotlight only on pictures with none of the social diversions, such as visits by flashy stars of Hollywood, Rome or Paris, that are typical of the western fests. No celebrities, no political frictions, just films. And the latter mostly were of light interest, meaning a dull time was had by all.

It was the first Karlovy Vary Festival with Western coverage and the Babel of lingos left many statements subject to confused interpretations. Herewith a few quotes jotted down at random—

"We went to make humorous films without them being comedies in the very sense of the word. . . . That Eastern German film showed the war was won only by the Russians. It should not have been called Ernst Thallmann but 'All Quiet on the Western Front'. . . . You stay here and I'll Go to America. That is the only way I'll ever get a car."

And some notes—

At a visit to a local glassworks the visitors were given little glass pigs. One guide innocently remarked that a year ago the memento would have been an image of Stalin. . . . Igor Rachuk, head of the Soviet Delegation, in his speech before the screening of the first Russo pic said, "I do not wish to speak now of Soviet films which you will see at the festival. They will speak for themselves. All I want to say is that all our films are guided by one idea, fully in keeping with the festival motto; they are permeated with love for the ordinary man, with our striving for noble relations among the peoples, which will guarantee lasting friendship between nations."

Karlovy Vary was a famous in-

NATKE's Tom O'Brien Influences BBC-TV Canceling Gridcasts

London, July 31.

Appeals from Sir Tom O'Brien, MP, general secretary of the National Association of Theatrical & Kine Employees, British Actors' Equity and the British Variety Artists' Federation urging the Football League to call off proposals to network football matches for Saturday night tv, influenced the decision to postpone the matter indefinitely.

An offer of $280,000 from the commercial network was rejected along with a BBC-TV bid of $160,000.

Sir Tom had stressed that, besides dealing a lethal blow to many provincial theatres, the networking of Saturday night games could ultimately lead to a complete breakdown of British film production.

'Reincarnation' Can't Last, So Liberace Does a Switch

Hollywood, July 31.

On theory that the reincarnation fad will be dead by January, Liberace is dropping his "Bridey Murphy" revue, "Come as You Were," which was planned for opening on Broadway that month. Instead he will do "An Evening With Liberace," showcasing pianist and his brother George and orchestra for a limited engagement.

Liberace is retaining "Come" for his return in October to the Riviera, Las Vegas, where unit broke in.

Olga Tschechowa, Vet German Pix Star, Runs OK Cosmetic Biz at 60

Munich, July 24.

What to do when youth and career are waning? An answer has been found by Olga Tschechowa, reigning queen of the German film industry for some 20 years, circa 1925-45.

Parallel with her pic career, Miss Tschechowa took up the science of cosmetics in Germany. After the war, she took advantage of a legit engagement in Paris to continue biology studies at the University of Paris. Two years ago, she opened a chic salon in Munich and started manufacturing beauty creams, with her name and fame as chief promotional plus. The biz is doing fine.

Miss Tschechowa, now approaching her 60th birthday, became a star in Germany in the mid-20s. She has 178 films to her credit, mainly starring roles, under directors like Rene Clair and Willi Forst.

Though her film activities have declined from the pre-war rate of five a year, she still makes an occasional flick. Next screen assignment will be in the fall, together with daughter Ada and granddaughter, Vera, now 16.

Reported Hilton Eyeing The Breakers, Palm Bch.

Palm Beach, July 31.

Reported that Conrad N. Hilton is negotiating to take over the snooty and historic old Breakers Hotel, through whose portals only an aged, "restricted" clientele is permitted to pass. Under Hilton operation, the Breakers would break all barriers.

Just the reverse is expected to happen to the luxury Boca Raton Hotel, near here. Since the Schines sold out to Arthur Vining Davis it is expected that Boca Raton, winter home of many New York film moguls, will now become a restricted private "club."

Ellen Terry Memorial

London, July 31.

A lineup of topflight legit stars on Sunday (22) commemorated the first stage appearance 100 years ago of Ellen Terry, who died in 1928. The event, put on by the Ellen Terry Fellowship, comprised a biography in dramatic form with extracts from some of the plays she acted in, and was staged at her former home in Kent.

Sir Lewis Casson, Sybil Thorndie, Margaret Johnston, Peggy Ashcrof, Irene Worth, Emlyn Williams and Sir John Gielgud (Miss Terry's great nephew) were among those who took part; Clemence Dane scripted the proceedings.

Show People On The Andrea Doria

A batch of show people and other notables were involved in the collision of the Italian luxury liner, Andrea Doria and the S.S. Stockholm of the Swedish Line last Wednesday (25) night.

Camille M. Cianfarra, N. Y. Times Madrid correspondent who was on his way home aboard the Andrea Doria, and his eight-year old daughter, Joan, were killed immediately. Mrs. Cianfarra, the former wife of the American Broadcasting Co.'s Washington correspondent Edward P. Morgan, was seriously injured and Morgan's 14-year old daughter, Linda, adopted by Cianfarra, was less seriously hurt. Her escape was termed a "miracle" by many.

Morgan, having been told that his daughter Linda was killed, did a report on the collision the same night for the network. Though he spoke of the "dead girl," he didn't mention that she was his daughter. The "miracle" ending resulted when Linda who was in the same cabin which her stepfather, N. Y. Times correspondent Camille Cianfara was killed, was found on the Stockholm immediately after the crash—and before any life boats had passed between the two ships. Authorities believe that one of two things happened: the violent collision catapulted her out of her bed aboard the Doria to the forward deck of the Stockholm, or else the Swedish liner's smashed bow scooped her to safety as it withdrew after the crash. Juve suffered a broken collarbone and bruised legs, but will reportedly make a full recovery.

Ballet dancers, Istvan Rabovsky and his wife, Nora Kovack, who recently escaped from Hungary, were close to the spot where the Doria was rammed, but they escaped to safety in their underclothes.

Fewer Features Fret Mexicans

Mexico City, July 31.

Mexican producers' accent on more quality and fewer pictures has the unions worried.

Joblessness so far this year is a matter of concern to the Picture Production Workers Union (STPC) whose officials have been huddling with the Banco Nacional Cinematografico in an effort to force up the level of production.

According to union, it now has only 13 units—with a crew of 20 each—at work. However, producers aren't worried. They say it pays for them to take 162 weeks to make 40 pictures this year as against the 129 weeks it took to produce the same number of films in 1955.

Republic Screen-Crediting Veit Harlan, Maker of Notorious 'Jew Suess' Film

Political past of foreign filmmakers may worry the public in the countries concerned, but it doesn't necessarily concern the American distributors.

Republic has in release a film called "Circus Girl," a combination of two German pictures made by Veit Harlan, who gets directing credits on the screen. The duo—"Stars Over Colombo" and "The Prisoner of the Maharaja"—was released in Germany by the Gloria.

Harlan is the man who made the infamous and viciously anti-Semitic "Jew Suess" for Hitler's propaganda chief, Josef Goebbels. Film, a distortion of a Lionel Feuchtwanger novel, served to inflame racial hatred in Germany and other countries.

Following the war, there were riots in various cities in Germany when Harlan pictures were released. Sentiment has now died down somewhat.

Nevertheless, a prominent German producer recently ditched Ernst von Solomon as a script-writer on the upcoming film, "On Order of Canaris," fearing Solomon's past record. Solomon was a good Nazi and after the war wrote "Der Fragebogen," (The Questionnaire) which had a strongly anti-American bias.

Republic has another German picture with a director who has openly avowed his Nazi leanings. It is "The Congress Dances," lensed by Franz Antel, an Austrian active in both local and German production. Antel recently proclaimed (VARIETY, July 18, p. 2) in a Vienna bar that he was "an old Nazi and proud of it." He, too, was charged with making anti-Semitic remarks. As a result, there was a move to bar him from work in Germany.

Harlan's first film since the war was "The Undying Beloved," made in 1951. It died. In 1954, he destroyed—in the presence of a notary—one of the two existing negatives of "Jew Suess." The other is held by the U. S. Government in Washington. Even as he burned the film, Harlan said he had many offers, including one from Egypt, for the footage.

French Nudes Is Bad News for Choristers

Newcastle, July 31.

Choristers in "The French Revue" here received anonymous letters threatening "death" if they appeared in the nude at the Opera House, Belfast, during week of July 30. Letters, all typewritten, bore Belfast, Northern Ireland, postmarks. Police are treating them fairly seriously.

Slim Ingram, manager of the show, said: "I know this looks like a publicity stunt. Believe me, it isn't."

The threatening letters included such phrases as "Even a corpse wears a shroud in a coffin" and "If you want to be a martyr, take off your clothes and die." Threat of death was by shooting.

Metro's 'Dance' Plus 3 Other Yank Pix Slated For Edinburgh Festival

London, July 31.

"Invitation to the Dance," made by Metro in Britain, which captured the top award as an American entry at the recent Berlin Film fest, has been accepted for showing at the coming Edinburgh Film fest, under the British banner. Three U.S. productions are included in the first issued list of selections: "The Brave One" (RKO), "The King and I" (20th-Fox), and "On The Bowery" (originally titled "Skid Row"), (AA).

Also chosen were "Reach for the Sky," "A Hill in Korea" and "Seven Years in Tibet" (British); "Les Assassins du Dimanche," "Marguerite de la Nuit" and "Les Mauvaises Rencontres" (French); "The Rumyantsev Case" (Russia); "Oedipus Rex" (Canada) and "Der Richter von Zalamea" (East Germany).

Other entries from these countries are being reviewed by the Festival Advisory Committee which will issue further lists at intervals.

Arrangements have been made to present "Reach for the Sky" in connection with a special series of performances to celebrate the 21st anniversary of the Rank organization.

Billy Rose Talks Talent Exchange With Russians

Billy Rose, after a week's negotiating in Moscow with the Russian government, has got the Reds to agree in principle to an exchange of talent between the two nations. Impresario, who acted on his own, will try to clear with the U.S. government on the barter of talent; in time to get showcasings open in both countries by New Year's.

Rose, seeking the Bolshoi Ballet, Obraztzov's Puppet Show and the Soviet Army Ensemble of 200 voices (who have appeared in London), has the interest of ABC-TV in doing a video show. Plans, concluded in Moscow this week, blueprint an exchange of four companies to play six cities in the respective countries.

He will try to line up Marian Anderson, Vladmir Horowitz, Louis Armstrong, perhaps Emmett Kelly and a "couple of dozen American beauties." He suggested other names, including Ann Miller, Ray Bolger, Benny Goodman and Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey.

Soviet agreed on tv performance for its stars if it proves "necessary for economic reasons."

Hilton Looks Hot For New Hotel in Frisco; Means 2 New Legits?

San Francisco, July 31.

Conrad Hilton's plan to build a 1,200-room hotel in Frisco, in the talk stage for many months, appears on the verge of jelling. It would, as one result, give the Bay City a pair of new theatres to replace the 30-year-old Curran and Geary.

Main wheel in the project, aside from Hilton, is financier Louis Lurie, who owns the Curran and leases the Geary.

He has insisted all along that there can be no deal for his property unless Hilton replaces the two theatres.

Ordinarily, Hilton might be tempted to look elsewhere for a location, but it's known that:

He wants a flat piece of land close to the heart of the downtown sector of Union Square;

Contractor Robert Cahill, who owns a 99-year lease on the Geary's land (Lurie sub-leases from him) and owns the building next door, is eager to sell to Hilton, because it will help the business of his adjacent nine-story garage, and,

Cahill and Lurie will presumably give Hilton better terms than anyone else in Frisco.

The land included in the Hilton deal would result in demolition of both theatres. It is the same site on which Matson Navigation Co. held an option last winter. The ship-

Dean Martin's London Palladium Negotiation

London, July 31.

Dean Martin has been in communication with London Palladium impresario Val Parnell concerning stage dates in Britain as a solo attraction, sans Jerry Lewis.

Martin clicked here with his recent record "Memories Are Made of This," and is anxious to play the Palladium and provincial music halls.

Pix Stars 'Suckered' Into TV?

Hollywood, July 31.

Screen Producers Guild roundtable on television brought out these comments:

Stars were being "suckered" into deals for telefilm series which were cutting the throat of the film industry, and of the stars, too.

Television was a promising, but just another, source of literary supply but tv scripts are deceptive and must be carefully translated into theatre screen terms of impact.

Agents use talent as pawns, shifting them from screen to video. But established boxoffice figures should stick with their home team and have no truck with the broadcasters.

BACKLOG DEALS BOOMERANG

Suburbs Grow 6/1 Over Towns

The American suburbs are growing six times as fast as the population outside of metropolitan areas.

As of the first of this year, the population in the suburbs of 162 key cities was estimated at 44,000,000. That's a 17,000,000—or 63% increase over 1940.

By comparison, the population in the metropolitan areas has gone up only by 10,600,000, or 25%, during the same 16 year span, and there has been an 11% increase in the number of people living outside the metropolitan and suburban areas.

Semenenko's Personal WB Holdings

Not Fully Evident Yet Where Boston's First National Bank Comes In On Warner Deal

Serge Semenenko, senior v.p. of the First National Bank of Boston, is listed as owning 160,000 shares of Warner Bros. common stock in a corporate notice relating to the sellout of Harry M. and Maj. Albert Warner. The shares are in Semenenko's name personally and not in the bank's.

This suggests that First of Boston is not actually an investor in WB and would be consistent with early suspicion that such a money institution, on the basis of precedent, would not want to buy into a picture company. There was no immediate clarification of the situation and no hint as to whether Semenenko, if indeed he has the stock in his personal portfolio, was financed by the Boston institution.

Deal for the 160,000 shares, consummated on July 10, makes Semenenko the second largest stockholder of WB, Jack Warner being the first. Basis of the transaction was payment by Semenenko of $4,800,000 for the stock.

Amount of stock taken by Wall Streeter Charles Allen and other Semenenko associates has yet to be revealed.

SANDERS FRERES PREP JAMES MASON FILM

Hollywood, July 31.

Denis and Terry Sanders, Academy Award winning brother team, will launch independent feature production with "Bellingham," starring James Mason. Deal is contingent upon final script approval and Mason's ability to fit the project into his freelance schedule.

"Bellingham," Elliot West's Collier's mag story of about three years ago, was purchased by the brothers for $15,000. It is the story of an Oxford University professor who is an international undercover killer. West is now screenplaying.

Brothers, who won an Oscar for their short "A Time Out of War," will share production chores. Denis will direct and Terry will be in charge of photography and production design. Brothers currently are scripting "The Naked and the Dead" for Paul Gregory.

HARRY WARNER'S HEALTH

Pioneer Active at NAG Parks—Walks With Cane

Hollywood, July 31.

Harry M. Warner, since his retirement as head of Warner Bros., has been the subject of many rumors as to his health. Efforts to get an inside line a couple of weeks back were not successful. It is now known that he entered Cedars of Lebanon Hospital for a checkup the same day Jack Warner assumed the WB presidency.

Now 75, Harry Warner has left the hospital and is much in evidence at racetrack. He is involved in large scale breeding of thoroughbreds and intimates think this rather than motion pictures has been his predominant zest in past two years.

One of the authentic pioneers of the film industry and the daddy of Vitaphone, which was to sound what Cinerama is to widescreen, the beginning of a technical revolution, Harry Warner now walks with a cane but rumors of a breakdown of health are not supported by his mobility and activity.

Just Like Pop (In-Law)

Hollywood, July 31.

Robert L. Jacks, son-in-law of Darryl Zanuck, appears to be following the latter's lead in the matter of subject matter for feature films.

Zanuck has announced "The Secret Crimes of Joseph Stalin" as an upcoming production. Now, Jacks has registered "Trotsky" and "The Assassination of Trotsky" for film properties.

Italian Hunch: For Magic Slant, Use U.S. Writer

Making a major bid for the international, and particularly the American, market via its tieup with Paramount on "War and Peace," the Italian production firm of Ponti-DeLaurentiis is seeking to make similar arrangements on future productions.

In its desire to obtain story material suitable for international appeal, the Italo production company is aiming to team topnotch American writers with Italian directors. It feels that American scripters, experienced in writing for the world-wide market, can provide the ingredients for the European directors to transform to the screen.

In line with this thinking, Ponti-DeLaurentiis is arranging meetings between U. S. scribs and European directors to discuss story ideas. It recently flew Helen Deutsch, now a freelance scripter after being with Metro for 12 years, to Europe to confer with Rene Clement and Vittorio DeSica. As a result of these conversations, Miss Deutsch has a tentative deal with the Italo company to script two pictures.

Miss Deutsch is currently in New York to confer with NBC on the spectacular, "Jack and the Bean Stalk," which she is writing for November airing. She expects to tackle the Ponti-DeLaurentiis projects sometime next year. Meanwhile, she has a bid from Hecht-Lancaster to convert Irwin Shaw's "Lucy Crown" to the screen.

Jules Schermer Off M-G

Hollywood, July 31.

After an association of approximately one year, Jules Schermer departed Metro and is negotiating a new deal with another major. Producer is taking with him, to launch his new affiliation, "The Street," an original screenplay by Leo Townsend.

While at Metro, Schermer produced "These Wilder Years" and conceived and prepared a musical version of "Anna Christie." Studio subsequently decided to produce it first as a Broadway musical.

Hitchy Back From Africa

Alfred Hitchcock arrived in Gotham on the Queen Elizabeth yesterday (Tues.) and after a three-day stay heads for Hollywood.

Producer-director had been in Africa scouting locations for his next, "Flamingo Feather," for Paramount.

OLD U.S. PRODUCT VS. NEW FILMS

Old, largely pre-1948, features which American film companies sold in block to "television" will soon begin playing South American and European theatres in competition with current U.S. features.

Also negotiations are under way between at least one of the tv distributors of Hollywood backlog product and representatives of Iron Curtain countries to buy a group of U.S. oldies.

Furthermore, it now looks more than likely that pix from at least one of the libraries will go into Spain, where—as of the moment—the official American industry boycott against imports continues.

Norman Katz, sales chief for Dominant Pictures, the theatrical release arm of PRM Inc., which bought the Warner Brothers library, said last week in N. Y. that he was going to South America first to make theatrical deals, and that he planned to leave Aug. 21 for a trip to Eastern Europe, starting with Prague, Czechoslovakia.

He noted that, quite apart from the theatres, European tv also offered an important and growing market for American product. Same is true of the tv chains in the Soviet satellite nations.

The Warner library, acquired by PRM for $21,000,000, consisted of 750 features. Of these, Warners repurchased the theatrical foreign rights to only 250, leaving Katz free to sell the remaining 500 as he pleases. He made it plain that he had no misgivings whatever

Hypnosis Fad Fades, So Par Speeds Up 'Bridey' To Get In on Ballyhoo

Paramount is speeding work on "The Search for Bridey Murphy" with the intent of getting the production into release before interest in the hypnotic-regressive excursion back to Ireland of the years ago dies down much more. Film is now in the editing stage and chances are its release will be set for late summer.

It was just a few months ago

Too Consciously Aiming to Please (Others) Trips Many: Jean Renoir

Metro Lot Tells This—

Hollywood, July 31.

Director Tony Mann had as a visitor on the set where "Men in War" is shooting a Boston brain surgeon with whom Mann attended Newark's Central High School.

Medico reminded Mann that they had appeared together in a high school production of "Alcestis."

"That's right," Mann said, "and do you remember another kid in the play named Dore Schary?"

"Yeah," responded the sawbones, "Whatever happened to him?"

No End to That Summer-Autumn Timing Argument

Comparative lack of "big" pictures currently available to the theatres is causing unhappiness among exhibitors.

"What's the use of having an 'Eddy Duchin Story' and a 'King and I' a couple of months from now?" complained one theatreman. "I look down the list of upcoming features, and it looks good. Meanwhile, what do we have to play right now?"

Isn't it wise for the industry to release its big product in the fall, when the tv shows come back on the air and competition will be stiff?

"Yes," he said, "but right now people are going to the theatres. That's when we need the pictures. I prefer my money in the pocket to a pot o' gold at the end of a rainbow."

Exhib, who asked to remain anonymous, said some of the deficiences in distribution and exhibition were obvious, "but nothing will be done about them because

Making pictures "consciously designed to please the public" is a mistake and frequently backfires, says French director Jean Renoir.

In Manhattan to discuss release of "French Can-Can" and to put the finishing touches on his latest, the Ingrid Bergman starrer "Elena and the Men," Renoir said he was not at all happy with a tendency in Europe to aim for a treatment that would please American audiences.

"I don't think we do it so much in France," he noted. "Most French directors seem to have made up their mind that they'll never 'conquer' the American market. That's the best way of making pictures. As for myself, I even think it's wrong to try too hard to please the public. The main thing is to make good pictures that will satisfy and meet the artistic standards of the men behind the camera."

Commenting on the release of his "French Can-Can" in the U.S., where it wasn't an outstanding success at the Fine Arts in New York, Renoir angrily pointed out that the picture had been badly edited.

"Can-Can in essence is a contrast between corny postcards and cynical observations about making money," he said. "In this version, they took out a lot of the money aspect. With my pictures it is dangerous to cut. I am like a painter. My pictures need color and contrast. It the contrast is removed, the film suffers."

Always a top craftsman in the color lensing field, (he made "The River" in India), Renoir said he was disappointed in the quality of the color being turned out by the labs today. "They used to do good work," he commented, "but they no longer do. It's become too much of a factory proposition."

Renoir said he had made actually two versions — one French and one English — on the Bergman picture. Warner Bros. will release the film in the U.S., but only in the English version. "There are various estimates of how much

National Boxoffice Survey

'King' Still Wears Crown as Biz Keeps Up Pace; 'Moby' Close 2d, 'Duchin' 3rd, 'Cinerama' 4th

Most first-runs in the key cities covered by VARIETY had another good session this week with last week's. Big Three winners copping the boxoffice sweepstakes in the same order of finish. Champ again is "King and I" (20th) with "Moby Dick" (WB) in very close second position and "Eddy Duchin Story" taking show money.

All three are now in wide showcase circulation but none of them appears to be hurt by the competition of the others.

"Cinerama Holiday" (C'rama) continues loud at the b.o. in all situations where it's on view and replaces "Trapeze" (UA) in the fourth spot. Latter circus entry, first of the tall money-makers to go into circulation, is now in late stages of several of its runs but nonetheless showing sufficient staying power to rate fifth in this week's roundup.

"Pardners" (Par) received only a mention last week, since it was playing only in Chicago. It's now in seven of the covered keys and on the basis of this makes seventh spot. "Seven Wonders of the World" is eighth. Next is "Somebody Up There Likes Me" which, although moderate in New York, is doing good to lofty business in many other cities. Tenth on the list is "Fastest Gun Alive" (M-G) which is taking nice income in most locations.

"Oklahoma" (Magna) is playing too few dates to make the Top Ten but looks a cinch to take the spotlight when it gets around. "Away All Boats" (U) is drawing tall coin but in this instance, too, exhibition has been too limited to warrant listing.

"Fantasia," Walt Disney reissue, is doing remarkable business in San Francisco, L. A., and a couple of the other keys reported on.

"Earth vs. Flying Saucers" and "Werewolf," Col combo, are strong in Louisville. U's "Rawhide Years" is good in N. Y. and Indianapolis, but slow in Detroit.

"Ambassador's Daughter" (UA), is showing plenty of strength in Chicago.

Senators Flatly Reject Allied Plea For Film Rental or Other Controls

Washington, July 31.

A Senate Committee has unanimously rejected exhibitor-recommended (1) arbitration of film rentals, (2) government control of film rentals, and (3) production by the divorced circuits as solutions to the problems of the theatre owners.

Instead, just as it did three years ago, the committee has recommended that the industry handle its own problems, and that it set up an all-industry arbitration system (excluding film rental arbitration) as the principal tool. It also favored elimination of the admission tax.

The Senate Small Business Committee, in a report based on its hearings of exhibitor complaints last spring, agreed sympathetically that film exhibition is badly off, even worse off than it was during the 1953 hearings by the committee.

However, the Committee said it didn't believe the problems were caused by villainy of the distributors or failure of the Justice Dept.'s Anti-Trust Division to enforce the law, as alleged by independent exhibitors. Rather, it found the difficulties due to new competition—principally television—and changed economic conditions.

Significantly, the subcommittee which conducted the hearings this past spring was dominated by the Democratic Party. Three years ago, the hearings were held by a Republican-controlled subcommittee. But both produced almost identical findings.

Berger Disappointed

Minneapolis, July 31.

Greatly disappointed over Senate Small Business subcommittee's unfavorable report on all Allied States' exhibitors relief proposals, Bennie Berger, chairman of Allied's emergency committee which led fight for them, says other action must and will be taken to help small theatre owners.

Need for relief is greater than ever because situation is becoming progressively worse, he claims.

Berger is confident that at allied's board meeting this month new steps will be adopted.

Film Biz Tensely Awaits 90c Bill; Will Ike Veto?

Washington, July 31.

The eyes of the entire motion picture industry are on the White House this week, waiting to learn whether President Eisenhower will sign or veto the admissions tax bill.

The measure, approved unanimously by both the House and Senate, would eliminate the 10% bite on all tickets costing 90c or less. Present law exempts tickets priced at 50c or less.

The Treasury estimates that the measure would lose the government $60,000,000 of revenue annually.

Before the bill passed, the Treasury opposed it in any form, contending that the cut was unnecessary and the tax revenue was needed. When the bill was before the Senate, spokesmen said assurance had been received from Administration circles that the 90c figure would be acceptable. Since then, the Treasury Department has refused to confirm any change in its earlier position. Thus, it may still be urging the President to veto the bill.

On the other hand, the White House is certain to be impressed by the fact, that the bill was supported unanimously in both houses of Congress and that several G.O.P. senators who face nip-and-tuck reelection races, have been strongly for the bill.

Finally, the speed with which the bill whipped through The House and Senate, in the busy closing days of the session, indicates that Lady Luck was riding with it. Some industry figures have a strong feeling that the same luck will not fail it now.

Regardless of the outcome, some significant figures have been unearthed by COMPO. This all-industry organization reports that only 350 theatres have admission scales exceeding $1—meaning the great majority of situations would be free from all admission taxes if the measure now before Congress is approved.

At present a 10% tax is levied on tickets costing over 50c. New bill would exempt admissions up to over $1.

Hal R. Makelim's 'Peacemaker' To United Artists

Independent producer Hal R. Makelim claimed in New York this week he spent a little under $400,000 in making "The Peacemaker," as the first of a projected series of features in participation, via the so-called Makelim Plan, with exhibitors. He said he shelled out an additional $334,000 in "trying to put the plan over." As previously reported, the scheme was dropped because of inadequate theatre support, and Makelim was left with "Peacemaker" on his hands without a distributor.

But that's the past; Makelim now has a deal with United Artists for release of his picture, which has James Mitchell and Rosemarie Bowe in the leads.

Makelim spent months on tour of the country, visiting exhibitors individually and in groups in quest of their backing. A total of 3,447 houses pledged to play his product through pre-production contracts but he was still $500,000 short of his objective, said Makelim. He claimed all money poured into both the plan and the initial film was his own.

Film-maker said he's confident that all those who entered the now-abandoned contracts will book his picture in addition to the operator of 6,000 other theatres who had expressed interest in his plan.

Graham Greene Scripts For Preminger's 'Saint'

Otto Preminger, now in London, yesterday (Tues.) signed British (Catholic) novelist Graham Greene to do the screenplay for "Saint Joan."

Preminger will produce and direct the adaptation of the Bernard Shaw play for United Artists release.

CATHOLIC MEN PROTEST

Say Swedish "Witch" Degrades Womanhood

San Antonio, July 31.

The Archdiocesan Council of Catholic Men protested the showing of a Scandinavian film the council terms licentious and degrading to womenhood.

Rev. Erwin A. Juraschek, moderator, said the film is also indecent and uses suggestive dialog. The pic is "The Witch" which opened here at the Empire Theatre on Thursday (26).

Censured by an AACM reviewing committee, the pic has also come under fire of the San Antonio Movie Advisory board. Juraschek said the council has protested to George Kaczmar, manager of the Empire, operated by Trans-Texas Theatres, Inc.

The film is showing to adults only at $1 admission charge.

Alfred Katz in N.Y.

Alfred Katz, United Artists foreign department exec, returned to his New York office last week after six weeks in the Far East and Australasia.

He discussed sales and promotion plans with the company's managers and distributors.

SKOURAS SCIONS' UNITED ARTISTS PIX

Hollywood, July 31.

Plato and Spyros Skouras Jr., sons of 20th-Fox topper, have set a deal with Max Youngstein to make one-to-three pix annually for United Artists release beginning with "Sierra Baron" under Artists Productions banner.

Brothers previously were in on a coproduction deal with Robert L. Jacks and Bob Goldstein, making "Killer Is Loose" and "Kiss Before Dying" for U.A. under Crown Productions tag.

Court Restrains Early Release Of 'Bus Stop'

Playwright William Inge won his case vs. 20th-Fox yesterday (Tues.) when Federal Judge Richard H. Levet granted an injunction to Inge and the limited partnership of the W-S Bus Stop Co., restraining the motion picture company from release of the film version of the play prior to Dec. 1, 1956.

Order extends to the U. S. and Canada, but can be vacated should Inge & Co. fail to live up to the stipulations of the contract, i.e. to have a first-class road company operating until Dec. 1. If no such company is functioning, 20th would have the right to release the film within 30 days.

Judge Levet ruled that not only could 20th not release the film till December, but no theatres could advertise the starting date of the picture until four weeks prior to the opening.

Inge was required to put up a $50,000 bond, should 20th in the end be entitled to damages. Court was told that a road company would start presenting "Bus Stop" in Chicago Aug. 13.

20th faced a similar dilemma once before, in the instance of George Axelrod's "Seven Year Itch." Like "Bus Stop," the film also starred Marilyn Monroe. To get an earlier release for "Itch," 20th reportedly paid $175,000. It's indicated that, with Inge, 20th will appeal the decision.

New York Sound Track

Spyros P. Skouras told this one on himself at a recent London luncheon in his honor: "For years my assistant, Ulric Bell, had trouble with his hearing and I wanted him to buy a hearing aid. Finally he got one and I asked him if he could hear me, 'Yes, I can Mr. Skouras,' Ulric said, 'but now I don't understand you.' "

Four-column cartoon in the Hindusthan Standard, New Delhi, has the new Russian leaders standing over Stalin's grave. Caption is, "The Trouble With Harry," from the Alfred Hitchcock picture about a corpse that kept disinterring . . . Jerry Reed, of the cast of "Inherit the Wind," which is now on summer layoff, signed by Gold Medal Productions . . . "Assassination of Trotsky" registered as title for a feature by Robert L. Jacks . . . Some important European films got made recently despite dark fiscal clouds. "Monte Carlo Story," with Marlene Dietrich had money problems and almost didn't get finished. Ditto "Gervaise," the Maria Schell starrer. Latter had additional difficulties since Miss Schell insisted on dubbing her own voice in French and the producer didn't think she was right for it.

Columbia acquiring the French "Papa, Mama, the Maid and I" for U. S. release, with Edward L. Kingsley handling sales as per usual. Pic has a partly-English soundtrack . . . Warner Bros. honored the passing of its newsreel with a big announcement—exactly five lines. Reel folds Aug. 23 . . . David O. Selznick interested in signing Canadian actor Christopher Plummer for films. Plummer is currently appearing at the Canadian Stratford Shakespeare fest. French producer George Loureau arrived last Friday

Controversial nude footage in Norman Krasna's "The Ambassador's Daughter," snipped from domestic footage, has also been excised from the version to be released overseas. United Artists execs, after conferring with French exhibitors, decided the material was a little too broad even for European tastes. Scene in question was shot by Krasna in a Paris nitery and shows a line of cuties nude from the waist up. Footage was to underline a story revolving around the blushes of leading man John Forsythe.

Metro admen, making big plans to promote "Tea and Sympathy," refer to the film as the "boy-meets-boy" picture. It's the first American-made pic to deal frankly with the subject of suspected homosexuality.

Groucho Marx was invited by the London Observer to comment on the 60th anniversary of motion pictures in connection with the paper's film exhibition. The reply came from Gummo Marx, who explained that Groucho was home with a cold. He added that Groucho was not in a position to write 1,000 words for $200. "As a matter of fact," he added, "he has $200 and he doesn't know 1,000 words."

French film director Jean Renoir writing a book on his father, the painter Renoir who died in 1919. Book will be in the form of personal recollections. Gallic film vet spent six months with him towards the end of World War I when Jean was wounded in the legs and couldn't walk. "We had much time for a great many talks then," recollects Renoir. No publisher has been chosen yet for the tome which should be out next year.

Jean Renoir, asked on Bill Leonard's "Eye on New York" CBS-TV show whether he believed in worrying about the U. S. when making his pictures, replied: "The American public is like a pretty girl. If you court her too much, she may reject you" . . . Same picture was advertised with two different titles in N. Y. last week. One ad, taken from the 20th-Fox pressbook, read: "D Day, Sixth of June." The RKO ad just read "Sixth of June." And that's the way 20th originally had it . . . French Government now forces all French producers to process their color work at the new Technicolor lab near Paris . . . MPEA's Robert Corkery on the sick list . . . London's New Chronicle took a second look at Marilyn Monroe, this time through a woman's eyes. Conclusion: Miss Monroe wears dresses that are too tight, and she should lose weight . . . Leo Pillot, 20th exploitation topper and magazine contact, leaving the company.

Sam Spiegel has his long-distance problems, with "End As A Man" now shooting in Florida and "Bridge Over the River Kwai" set to roll in Ceylon in a few weeks. . . . Sam Katzman has made the big-time. His production of "Earth vs. Flying Saucers" is set for the Paramount, on a two-week locked booking. . . . October issue of Cosmopolitan giving a heavy play to various aspects of the film industry.

While RKO was working overtime on a buildup for Diana Dors, Allied Artists quietly snared distribution rights to "Yield to the Night," which the British actress made in England. . . . Jack Cohn now owns 62,156 shares of Columbia stock, having collected 1,516 via the recent stock dividend and sold 3,100. . . . Morey Reden, formerly with Disney, went to the animation department of Film Creations. . . . Leonard Wayne left Paramount, joined the Arthur Jacobs p.r. company. . . . "Moon is Blue," current, is the first reissue to play the Little Carnegie in its 30-year history.

Paramount's "Ten Commandments" (four hours) and "War and Peace" (three and a half) both will have 10-minute intermissions, with "Commandments" playing two a day and "Peace" continues. . . . Most Broadway showcases sluggish over the past weekends, which was regarded as the ebb tide of the tourist influx. Number of visitors is expected to pick up again within a couple of days. . . . New seven-year pact given Abe Schneider at Columbia provides for a weekly payoff of $2,750 to Sept. 14, 1957, and then $3,000 per for the balance of the deal and an option on 35,000 Col shares at $17.76 per share.

Herman Weinberg on the committee to pick the six foreign films for the TOA film fair in September. Museum of Modern Art, incidentally, is charging TOA $175 a night for its screening room. . . . Earl I. Sponable, 20th-Fox research topper, facing printing equipment problems in his effort to put out a magoptical combination print. Latter should now be ready by the first of the year. . . . "Oklahoma" won't open abroad in the Todd-AO version before Christmas. . . . Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy, due back from Europe Aug. 15. . . . Edward L. Kingsley and Duncan McGregor joined with France's Jean Renoir in a discussion of foreign films on CBS-TV Sunday (29). . . . France's "Si Tous les gars du Monde," which won the prize at the Czech Karlovy Vary film fest, will be released in the U.S. by Disney's Bueno Vista outfit. . . . Big theatrical b.o. danger this fall are the many films skedded to go on television, opines Spyros P. Skouras Jr. of the Skouras circuit. . . . German star Cornell Borchers and producer Toni A. Schelkopf send word of their marriage at Garmisch-Partenkirchen.

Hal Makelim's indie production of "The Peacemaker" credits screenplay to a Hal Richards. Richards and Makelim are one and the same. . . . Frank Sinatra is in from Madrid, starts his p. a. stand at the Paramount Aug. 15.

DEAN—DEAD STAR WHO 'LIVES'

Civilian Shudders For 'Next War'

By KAY CAMPBELL

Hollywood, July 31.

From Hollywood to the hinterlands of Camp Pendleton is a short hop, geographically speaking, but to the fourth estaters who junketed down the coast to attend the world premiere of Allied's "Hold Back the Night," it was a trip to never-never land. The Hollywood press is not exactly unaccustomed to junkets, premieres or war films, but the spectacular show staged by the U.S. Marine Corps in various sections of its 200 square-mile-base was an eye-opener.

It is one thing to glimpse a new but dormant weapon and hear tall tales about its possible performance in actual combat and something else again to watch a realistic assault against the enemy from an up front observation post. It's a far cry from sitting on the edge of your seat in a theatre while the hero conquers all dangers to sitting on a hilltop with bombs bursting on the right, flame throwers searing the earth on the left, and jet planes diving to within 35 feet overhead. The impact on civilian eyes, ears and nerves is shattering. The Marine Corps' newest concept of amphibious warfare is something out of science fiction.

Credits for the pre-premiere program for press and personalities go to Allied Artists, Major General George F. Good and his troops, and the Santa Fe R.R. It was a fine example of showmanship from beginning to end, a conversation piece packed with inside headline material for members of the Hollywood contingent, and loaded with thrills. The opening at the Cresta Theatre in Oceanside netted $2,500 for the local USO.

Renoir Restoring Cuts, Will Re-Issue, Perhaps Re-Make His Pacifist Film

Rights to the French film classic, "Grand Illusion" (The Great Illusion), have been bought back by the picture's director, Jean Renoir, who intends to reisue it in its original version.

Renoir, in N. Y. last week, said he was collecting all the footage that had been cut from the film when it was first released in 1938 and intended to restore it to the negative. After that, possibly in a year, he may remake the film which he described as set in a time "when war still seemed to be fought by gentlemen." "Grand Illusion" has a World War I background.

Renoir and a partner bought back the rights to "Illusion" for $20,000. He's now trying to stop the global distribution of the film, which is still making the rounds, in anticipation of the release of the new version. Pic stars Jean Gabin, Pierre Fresnay and Eric von Stroheim. It was based on a Renoir story.

Coming at a time when the world was getting ready for World War II, the pacifist message of "Illusion" caused many countries to delete footage from the picture. "It was edited differently in practically every country," noted Renoir.

In the U. S., for instance, the role of the Jewish character in the film was eliminated completely. It was played by Dalio. Renoir intends to restore it.

Buffalo, Town of Origin, 21st City to Install Todd-AO 'Oklahoma'

Buffalo, July 31.

The Century (Buhawk) closed Sunday (28) for installation of new equipment and screen for the showing of "Oklahoma" beginning Aug. 15. Although preliminary tests for the Todd-AO projection process were held by the American Optical Co. here over a year ago, Buffalo will be the 21st city to see the picture.

Expected run of "Oklahoma" will probably free for exhibition in other local first runs the product nominally earmarked for Century.

BRITAIN GETS ONLY C'SCOPE 'OKLAHOMA'

London, July 31.

Only the CinemaScope version of "Oklahoma" is to be shown in Britain. RKO has set Rodgers and Hammerstein tuner to premiere at the Odeon, Leicester Square, during the first week in September.

There is, apparently, no intention of showing the alternative Todd-AO version which, of course, would involve a major theatre conversion.

Some World War I Cowards Theme of 'Glory' Film

Hollywood, July 31.

"Paths of Glory," Humphrey Cobb tome about purported cowardice of some French troops in World War I, has been bought by producer-director-writer team of Jim Harris and Stanley Kubrick, who will probably film it as an indie venture.

Pair are currently working on a tri-ply deal on Metro's "The Burning Secret," and will begin screenplaying "Glory" thereafter.

They are repped by Ronnie Lubin of the Jaffe agency.

Eastman Kodak Up 6% Over '55

Eastman Kodak Company's sales and earnings for the first half of 1956 hit a record level. Sales for the 24-week period totalled $325,110,431 with a corresponding net of $38,753,316. Latter represents a 6.6% rise over the same period in 1955.

Sales rose 2.9% over last year's $315,850,102. Net was equal to $2.11 per share on 18,277,260 common shares outstanding, compared with $1.97 per share last year. Earnings before taxes stood at $83,274,031, compared with $79,544,759 in 1955.

DRIVE-INS SAVIOUR FOR 'B' FEATURES

Minneapolis, July 31.

"B" pictures, which almost invariably nowadays experience tough boxoffice sledding if they're able to crash a firstrun downtown theatre here, may be finding a profitable haven in the local drive-ins.

At least, in several instances during the past two seasons such fare, after being rejected by the downtown conventional houses, has had its initial showings in the ozoners to healthy business.

Latest example is Allied Artists' "Shack Out on 101" which recently finished a big grossing first-run engagement at the local 101 Drive-in theatre. The distributor had been unsuccessful in making a satisfactory loop deal for it.

Development stacks up as akin to that which has occurred for foreign films here. Unable to get downtown first-run playing time, many of them have been yielding big rental payments to their distributors from initial and other engagements in the city's four neighborhood "fine arts" theatres.

WARNERS' EERIE TEST OF TACT

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Nearly a year after his death (Sept. 30, 1955) the late James Dean is not only Warner Bros. most "alive" star but he is at the moment the company's No. 1 public relations problem now that the young actor's third and last feature film, "Giant" is going into release.

Recognizing that the James Dean cult is nothing to trifle with and aware that this phenomenon "goes way beyond ordinary pressagentry" Warners will this week confer with outside psychologists, public relations counsel and funds-raising experts. The latter are included because of the possibility of all the James Dean fan clubs being united behind some sort of a "Foundation."

It is thought desirable—if a practical plan can be devised—to channel the adoration of Dean (5,000 to 6,000 letters a week still coming in) into affirmative directions rather than let the macabre aspects get out of control.

Psychologists will almost certainly get into the act immediately Warners third James Dean film is exposed publicly. The quacks would take care of that even if the more reputable members of the head-shrinking fraternity waited to be invited.

Religious Overtones

The amazing popularity of Dean goes beyond ordinary dimensions. He is some sort of a symbol, though exactly what sort is not fully evaluated. The intensity of the mourning and some disturbing "resurrection" and "reincarnation" themes recurring in the fan mail are the more remarkable in the light of Dean having appeared before the American public in but two films—"East of Eden" and "Rebel Without a Cause." In each he played a soul-tortured, insecure, sensitive and parent-fighting youth.

Just as the young actor zoomed across the national horizon, generally marked as one of the new boxoffice bets, he died in an automobile crash which carried neurotic implications of personal recklessness bordering on self-destructive urges. The nature of the death seems to have inflamed the mysticism since evident in his following.

Warners this week will decide which is psychologically-best of the alternatives of:

1) Ignoring Dean's death (as do great numbers of the Dean fans who write him letters as if he were still alive).

2) Making exploitation capital of the brilliant promise and the tragically short career.

Not Like Valentino

Plainly there is something unprecedented in the Dean phenomenon. Oldtimers groping for a comparison go back to Rudolph Valentino in the 1920's. The current observers wonder if the fabulous success of another modern youth—"Elvis the Pelvis" Presley—doesn't have an affinity. But neither example is pat. First of all the offbeat singer is still very much alive and shooting for his dream of owning a different Cadillac for each day of the week. Dean is in the grave though that grave is piled high with floral tributes day after day.

The Valentino episode is not comparable with Dean worship save only in the intensity of the mourning. Valentino leaped to fame playing an Oxford-educated sheik of Araby. He could get away with that as his films were silent. He was an ex-waiter from Italy whose myopia gave his gaze a come-thither irresistable to American women 30 years ago. There's no doubt that Valentino combined two daydreams of the gals—the dream of the masterful man who takes by force and the dream of the man of exquisite courtesy. As a brute-who-was-also-a-gentleman Valentino was the great symbol of romance when Coolidge was the great symbol of prosperity. Valentino in the deep appeal of Valentine in the deep appeal of

Producer Must Completely Package For 'Independence,' Says Frank Ross

Frank Ross, Independent producer who made "The Robe" and "Rains of Ranchipur" for 20th-Fox, is bent on averting control on his pictures exercised by the distributors. Companies' power lies in the fact that they provide the financing and thus call the turns on budget, which in turn means the caliber of talent that can be hired.

Film-maker's idea now is to assemble the full pre-production package before seeking out a releasing agency and the financing. He has the rights to "Kings Go Forth" and has Merle Miller now at work on the screenplay. Upon completion of this, Ross will do the casting. Thereupon, as per current schedule, he'll look for a distributor and the production money.

Several companies, particularly United Artists, emphasize that they refrain from interfering with a picture once a deal is set. But it's in the negotiation of the deal that Ross feels the distributor has too much voice.

His new approach means he'll have to shell out his own coin for the pre-production preliminary work.

One Man's Career

Hollywood, July 31.

In the growing age of specialization, Tommy Kingston has achieved fame by a rigid demeanor. He plays corpses.

Kingston marked his 20th year in this career with an assignment to play a murder victim in Columbia's "The Missing Witness." A favorite of Alfred Hitchcock, Kingston specializes in doubling corpses on all of the director's murder pix.

Recently, he brought his talents to tv and worked the entire drama as a corpse on a slab in the morgue—with only his tagged toe showing.

Cinerama Paying Top Scoring Fee

Hollywood, July 31.

Dimitri Tiomkin will receive $60,000, reportedly an all-time high, for scoring Cinerama's new "Search for Shangri-La." He will both compose and conduct.

Tiomkin currently is working on George Stevens' production of "Giant" at Warner Brothers. When he completes it, he'll report to Lowell Thomas in New York to begin working on the Cinerama entry.

ABOLISHING MATINEES MIDWEEK IN HARTFORD

Hartford, July 31.

Effective tomorrow (Wednesday) Loew's Poli Palace here becomes the first downtown filmer to drop weekday matinee shows. However, the first run and also holdover house for Loew's Poli Theatre here, will run mats on Saturdays and Sundays. Poor business is reason.

Some two years ago, all of Hartford's nabe houses did away with weekday matinee shows. The 1,600-seat theatre has been operated by the Loew's Theatres Inc. since 1934. It is one of more than a 100 houses operated by its parent company. At one time, the house operated as a vaudeer and later for legit.

'Great Concert' for Todd; Russians, Alone, Making Tolstoy's 'War and Peace'

Karlovy Vary, July 31.

Mike Todd's first coproduction film in Russia is to be "The Great Concert," not "War and Peace," according to the head of the Soviet film delegation, Igor Rachuk, here for the Karlovy Vary Film Fest.

"Peace" is now being made as a completely Russo film. He also added that Russia was open for any U.S. coproduction offers, and they would supply all production facilities while the U.S. had only to foot the technical and artistic prices via technicians, writers or actors desired in the pix. Two versions would be made. Distrib rights would of course be on an East and West basis.

Todd is now wrapping up the deal in Washington where he is confering with Russo film head M. Sourine. Russia had six coproductions this year, with France on the Victor Hugo novel "Nine Nine Three," China (Red), Bulgaria, Greece, Norway and India. Over 13 are planned next year.

Rachuck asserts that Russia usually buys outright and pays from $30,000 to $50,000 depending on the film. About 500 copies are normally made of a film for its eventual distrib through the over 60,000 theatres in Russia. Television runs 2-11 p.m. daily save Wednesday, but is of no competition to pix.

The Ambassador's Daughter
(C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Frothy, Paris-lensed, romantic comedy with Olivia de Havilland, others, accounting for pleasant round of fun.

Hollywood, July 26.

United Artists release of Norman Krasna production, written and directed by Krasna. Stars Olivia de Havilland, John Forsythe, Myrna Loy, Adolphe Menjou, costars Tommy Noonan, Francis Lederer, Edward Arnold, Minor Watson. Camera (Technicolor), Michael Kelber; editor, Roger Dwyre; music, Jacques Metehen. Previewed July 24, '56. Running time, 102 MINS.

Joan ..... Olivia de Havilland
Danny ..... John Forsythe
Mrs. Cartwright ..... Myrna Loy
Senator Cartwright ..... Adolphe Menjou
Al ..... Tommy Noonan
Prince Nicholas Obelski ..Francis Lederer
Ambassador Fiske ..... Edward Arnold
General Harvey ..... Minor Watson

This is one of those lightweight, romantic comedy affairs usually designated as good summer filmfare. It is engaging enough in spinning its familiarly-plotted antics to earn a fair share of titters. The frothy diversion whipped together by producer-director-writer Norman Krasna plays pleasantly against a Paris setting, thanks to an able cast of funsters flipping through the lines and situations, while CinemaScope and Technicolor make it visibly worthwhile.

'Olivia de Havilland heads the cast and obviously enjoys her first venture into light comedy in some time. The good time she has gets through to the audience and she looks terrific in the Christian Dior outfits. John Forsythe also appears to enjoy his romantic chores opposite her, and they are an expert team in foiling for each other and in lifting a story that basically has very few surprise twists and turns.

Myrna Loy, long absent from the screen, is back in the type of breezy thing she does very well, pairing with Adolphe Menjou as his wife and the duo account for chuckles. Tommy Noonan scores strongly on the laugh end as Forsythe's G. I. buddy, while Francis Lederer, Edward Arnold and Minor Watson go along easily with the light plotting.

Krasna draws out his story for an unnecessary hour and 42 minutes, but mostly manages to keep the quips coming often enough to pick up the pace when material thinness starts slowing things down. Idea behind the fun is for Miss de Havilland, daughter of Ambassador Arnold, to test the good manners of American military personnel in Paris and prove that Senator Menjou is not justified in having the city declared off-limits. Forsythe is the chosen G. I., who believes Miss de Havilland is just a working girl. The ending is easily foreseeable, but most won't mind watching while Krasna and cast work it out.

Michel Kelber's lensing is excellent, capturing some intriguing vistas of Paris. Art direction, settings and background score are expert. Footage has an occasional flaw in the sound with some dubbed dialog effects coming through. Brog.

Lisbon
(NATURAMA-SONG-COLOR)

Ray Milland, Maureen O'Hara in Lisbon-locaied nefarious adventure meller with okay prospects.

Hollywood, July 31.

Republic release of Ray Milland production, directed by Milland. Stars Milland, Maureen O'Hara, Claude Rains, Yvonne Furneaux; features Francis Lederer, Percy Marmont, Jay Novello, Edward Chapman, Harold Jamieson, Humberto Madeira. Screenplay, John Tucker Battle; story, Martin Rackin; camera (Trucolor), Jack Marta; editor, Richard L. Van Enger; music, Nelson Riddle; filmed through the facilities of Amateau, Lda, Tobis Studios, Lisbon, Portugal. Previewed July 26, '56. Running time, 90 MINS.

Capt. Robert John Evans ... Ray Milland
Sylvia Merrill ..... Maureen O'Hara
Aristides Mavros ..... Claude Rains
Marla Maddalena Masanet ..... Yvonne Furneaux
Serafim ..... Francis Lederer
Lloyd Merrill ..... Percy Marmont
Joao Casimiro Fonseca ..... Jay Novello
Edgar Selwyn ..... Edward Chapman
Phillip Norworth ..... Harold Jamieson
Tio Rablo ..... Humberto Madeira

Lisbon makes a colorful setting for this tale of nefarious adventure among the international intrigue set. It's an interesting plot that, while not always well done from a writing or directing standpoint, has the melodramatic ingredients to carry it through to okay prospects generally. Republic's anamorphic Naturama process and Trucolor go a long way towards visual impressiveness, particularly in showing off the Lisbon scene.

Ray Milland stars, produces and directs. As a smooth, romantically-inclined American amusing himself with smuggling operations in the Lisbon area, his trouping comes off very well. As a production, the picture is rich in pictorial effects, but could have used a little sharper overseeing of story material, particularly that opening sequence in which sadistic Claude Rains, international crook, smashes a song bird with a tennis racket so his hungry cat can have breakfast. That's hard to take and completely unnecessary to set the Rains character. As director, Milland lets the suspense-building intrigue falter on occasion, with some staginess and obvious action to lessen tension.

Maureen O'Hara advantageously plays the young wife of a rich, old man who has been prisoner behind the Iron Curtain for two years. She wants him back, but dead so she can claim his fortune, and Rains is the big operator who arranges the details, including hiring Milland and his boat for the pickup. Miss O'Hara makes the mistake of revealing her intensions to Milland during some amatory byplay and he switches romantic interest to Yvonne Furneaux, a very interesting young lady who is one of the beauties Rains keeps around to satisfy his esthetic tastes. Climax has its thrills as Milland upsets the plans of Miss O'Hara and Rains and takes off with Miss Furneaux.

The starring foursome are quite glib and pleasing at the principal roles, and giving performance assists are Francis Lederer, Rains' killer; Percy Marmont, the old man; Jay Novello, Lisbon official; Edward Chapman, Rains' butler, and other characters in the script by John Tucker Battle from a story by Martin Rackin.

Jack Marta's color lensing is a major asset, and Nelson Riddle's music makes a strong point, too. Score includes "Lisbon Antigua," sung behind the titles by a chorus and Roby Charmandy in English, and again in Portuguese during a cafe sequence. Art direction, settings, costumes and other physical assists are excellent. Brog.

Gunslinger
(COLOR)

Sharpshooting Beverly Garland enforcing law a la Annie Oakly. An oater with corn mixed in liberally.

Hollywood, July 30.

American Releasing Corp. release of Roger Corman production, directed by Corman. Stars John Ireland, Beverly Garland, Allison Hayes; features Martin Kingsley, Jonathan Haze, Chris Alcaide. Screenplay, Charles B. Griffith, Mark Hanna; camera (Pathe Color), Fred West; editor, Charles Gross; music, Ronald Stein. Previewed July 27, '56. Running time, 77 MINS.

Cane Miro ..... John Ireland
Rose Hood ..... Beverly Garland
Gideon Polk ..... Martin Kingsley
Jack Hays ..... Jonathan Haze
Joshua Tate ..... Chris Alcaide
Jimmy Ponto ..... Richard Miller
Zebeon Tabb ..... Bruno Ve Sota
Felicity Polk ..... Margaret Campbell
Scott Hood ..... William Schallert
Nate Signo ..... Aaron Saxon
Tessie-Belle ..... Chris Miller

It's a gal wearing the marshal's badge in "Gunslinger" and Beverly Garland is a right pretty enforcer of law and order, as well as being a sharpshooter whose gun doesn't miss in the line of duty, even when she's beading down on the man she loves at the finale. With this twist to the conventional western plot, the Roger Corman production should get its share of playing time attention in the program market.

John Ireland and Allison Hayes also star with Miss Garland and represent the heavies of the Charles B. Griffith-Mark Hanna plot. He's a killer imported by Miss Hayes to bump off the marshal, and she's the town saloon operator who has been buying up property in the hope the railroad's coming through. Miss Garland has that badge because Miss Hayes' men have bumped off her husband, William Schallert, at the film's opening and she is determined to clean up Oracle, Tex., not knowing that Ireland has been paid to get her if the railroad goes elsewhere. What that has to do with events is never clear but, while they wait, she and Ireland fall in love and indulge in heavy smooching when he's not busy doing the same thing with Miss Hayes. When the truth comes out, though, duty is strong and she guns down Ireland, just like any other crook.

The script and Corman's direction lean heavily on sex, sometimes justifiably in view of the story twist, and sometimes ludicrously, and the Garland-Hayes combo backs up whatever is asked in the s.a. department. Since the material isn't very believable, the star performances are on the same level, although individual personalities help some. Martin Kingsley is seen as the town mayor and Jonathan Haze as Miss Hayes' handyman who loves her.

Corman unwisely tries to dress up values with a chorus line in Miss Hayes' saloon, but since there are only three femmes doing poor routines it adds up to nothing.

Storm Center

"Principle" rendered dull. Much ado about civil liberties angle. Spotty boxoffice prospects.

Hollywood, July 31.

Columbia release of Julian Blaustein (Phoenix) production. Stars Bette Davis; features Brian Keith, Kim Hunter, Paul Kelly. Directed by Daniel Taradash. Story, screenplay, Taradash and Elick Moll; camera, Burnett Guffey; editor, William A. Lyon; music, George Dunning. Previewed July 11, '56. Running time, 86 MINS.

Alice Hull ..... Bette Davis
Paul Duncan ..... Brian Keith
Martha Lockridge ..... Kim Hunter
Judge Robert Ellerbe ..... Paul Kelly
Freddie Slater ..... Kevin Coughlin
George Slater ..... Joe Mantell
Mrs. Slater ..... Sallie Brophy
Mayor Levering ..... Howard Wierum
Stacey Martin ..... Curtis Cooksey
Edgar Greenbaum ..... Michael Raffetto
Reverend Wilson ..... Edward Platt
Librarian ..... Kathryn Grant
Senator Bascomb ..... Howard Wendell
Carl ..... Burt Mustin
Mrs. Simmons ..... Edith Evanson
Mr. Morrisey ..... Joseph Kearns
Bert ..... Ted Marc
Charlie ..... Rudy Lee
Joe ..... Phillip Crampton

Failure of "Storm Center" to dress its civil liberties theme in attractive attire nullifies the controversy to be anticipated from its release. The pro and con, already being fanned in some quarters, may result in some initial wicket interest, but the pic will short change those buying it as entertainment. Overall prospects are spotty at best.

The Phoenix presentation, produced by Julian Blaustein for Columbia distribution, never gets the grip of reality on the viewer as it weaves through a wordy, slowly-paced account of the storm that develops when a smalltown librarian defies her employer, the City Council, after being instructed to remove a piece of Communist propaganda from her book shelves. The storm is a dull one, despite the contrived efforts to make it tempestuous, and never generates the kind of believable dramatic impact that might have put the show over and made the civil liberties message effective.

Director Daniel Taradash, who also did the story and script with Elick Moll, has a cast of able performers to work with and they deliver what is asked of them competently, even if the characters and situations rarely get below the surface. Bette Davis stars as the librarian, so long entrenched in her job she has come to look on the library almost as her own. Fired from her post, she decides not to fight back even though some bigotry and gossip put a Red label on her and the town's children she loves turn against her. The townspeople see the error of their ways when a child burns the library and she's promised her old job when a new building is completed.

Brian Keith plays a young politician who seizes on Miss Davis' defiance to make himself some headlines. In doing so, he loses his fiancee, Kim Hunter, who had taken over the librarian post. Paul Kelly does the City Council member who tries to back Miss Davis. Joe Mantell, an unimaginative boor who fosters the gossip against the librarian; Kevin Coughlin, his too-imaginative young son who fires the library; Sallie Brophy, his intelligent wife, are among others who take sides in the controversy.

George Dunning's score provides the footage with a rousing background, and Burnett Guffey's photography is good. Technical credits measure up to standard. Brog.

The Baby and the Battleship
(BRITISH-COLOR)

Wholesome British comedy of baby smuggled aboard a battleship during exercises. Spoof at Naval brass and traditions. Good fun anywhere.

London, July 10.

British Lion release of Jay Lewis production. Stars John Mills and Richard Attenborough. Produced by Anthony Darnborough; directed by Jay Lewis; screenplay, Jay Lewis and Gilbert Hackforth Jones based on novel by Anthony Thorne; camera, Harry Waxman; editor, Manuel del Campo; music, James Stevens and Humphrey Searle. At Warner Theatre, London, July 10, '56. Running time, 96 MINS.

Puncher Roberts ..... John Mills
Knocker White ..... Richard Attenborough
Professor ..... Bryan Forbes
Whiskers ..... Harold Siddons
Salls ..... Clifford Mollison
George ..... Lionel Jeffries
Perry ..... Gordon Jackson
Joe ..... Michael Howard
Captain ..... Michael Hordern
Commander Digby ..... Ernest. Clark
Gunnery Officer ..... John Forbes-Robertson
Master-At-Arms ..... Duncan Lamont
C.P.O. Blades ..... Harry Locke
P.M.O. ..... Cyril Raymond
Marshal ..... Andre Morell
Aide ..... John Le Mesurier
Interpreter ..... Ferdy Mayne
Maria ..... Lisa Gastoni
Paolo ..... Martin Miller
The Admiral ..... D. A. Clarke-Smith
The Baby ..... Martyn Garrett

As an example of good wholesome British fun, "The Baby and the Battleship" should be hard to beat, but as always when there's a moppet around on the screen, the adult actors are too frequently left in the shade. Nonetheless, release should garner steady results overseas.

Jay Lewis and Gilbert Hackforth Jones have shrewdly exploited the laugh angles in their screenplay, which is taken from Anthony Thorne's novel. It's no more than a frolic which frequently makes good-humored fun at the expense of naval traditions. Most of the action takes place on a battleship but location shots of Naples are shown to good advantage in handsome Eastman Color lensing.

There's not much to the basic plot, but the incident which it develops provides for hilarious situations. John Mills, a veteran of the British navy, while ashore at Naples, accidently finds himself with a baby boy in his care. Not wanting to leave the infant he takes it aboard, then suddenly finds that the ship is sailing ahead of schedule and the child cannot be returned to his family. From then he and his messmates of the lower deck are involved in a game of hide and seek, trying to conceal the child from their superior officers. Their adventures become more involved when a distinguished marshal from a foreign power makes a tour of inspection of the ship.

Richard Attenborough, now consistently type cast as a ranker in the British services, is the lower deck hand, mainly responsible for all the trouble. It was he who took John Mills along on a date to meet the baker's daughter in Naples, but the girl (Lisa Gastoni) was not allowed out unless she took care of her infant brother. While the other couple are dancing and Mills is literally left holding the baby, he becomes involved in a free-for-all, and when the roughouse is over he finds himself alone with the child. Attenborough and the girl return to find the ship has sailed.

John Mills, one of the most dependable of British screen actors, more than adequately succeeds in standing up to the infant's inevitable scene stealing, while Attenborough makes the best of his role of a lower deck racketeer. Too. Myro.

At Czech Film Festival

Karlovy Vary, July 24.

Egy Pikolo Vilagos (A Half Pint of Beer) (HUNGARIAN). Enterprise Magyar release and production. Directed by Felix Maarlassy. Screenplay, J. Maryassy; camera, I. Eiben; editor, I. Vincze. With Eva Ruttkay, T. Bitskey, E. Bull, M. Sulyok, E. Schubert. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

Hungarian film shapes as a pleasant comedy about two young lovers, held apart by moral differences, who finally come of age for a happy ending. Cleverly mounted, with telling notations of character and place, this is an entertaining film in the neo-realist vein and might matter enough for U.S. lingo marts. Some curio values in its closeup of daily life there in Red Hungary and its looksee at the delinquent element. Acting is excellent especially in the case of Eva Ruttkay as the wife-like fun loving girl who finds chastening in love. Direction is subtle and knowing and if this is not a lyrical pic it makes up for a familiar denouement in its progression, types and well fashioned screenplay.

Mahiru No Ankoku (Darkness at Midday) (JAPANESE). Gendai release and production. Directed by Tadashi Imai. Screenplay, Shinobu Hashimoto; camera, Shunichiro Nakao; editor, Akira Ifukube. With Kajiro Kusunagi, S. Uemura, Terno Matsuyama, T. Kojima. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 120 MINS.

Hardboiled film journalism makes this an offbeat negative. Based on a real case still going on in Japan this details how police brutality breaks down a confessed murderer, of two old people, into saying that he had accomplices. Film follows through the confessions extracted from these men and their trial, also weaving in the effect on their relations. Somewhat long this is still stark, telling and actionful and might be of U.S. interest for specialized theatres though somber theme is limiting. Direction is sharp and incisive and technical credits and acting all combine to make this a staccato absorbing pic.

Hemsoborna (The People of Hesmo) (SWEDISH; COLOR). Nordisk Tonefilm release and production. Directed by Arne Mattsson. Screenplay, Rune Lindstrom from the novel by Auguste Strindberg; camera (EastmanColor), Max Wilan; editor, Lennart Linderen. With Birik Strandmark, Hjordis Petterson, Nils Hallberg, John Norrmann, Curt Lowgren. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Rustic and rugged pic deals with a group of islanders during the late 19th century. It concerns an opportunist who marries an older woman to get her estate, but meets his comeuppance at the hands of her son and the elements. Somewhat literary and sprawling, with violent bucolic and bawdy overtones, it spins a rabelasian looksee at the earthy actions of these people. Acting is somewhat too theatrical and direction sometimes tasteless, but color and story combine to make this an offbeater that may be of value for special theatres in the U.S. on its rawboned drama and humor. It spills its tale of an uncouth, insular people well.

THE WEDDING OF THE FAIRY PRINCESS (RED CHINESE; OPERA). Chinese State release and production. Directed by Sh'Chuey. Screenplay from opera by Sang Chu; camera, Lo Tsung Chou; editor, Feng; music and songs, Shte'Lin. With Yen Feng-Ying, Wang Shao Fung, Chang Yun Feng. At Karlovy Vary Film Festival. Running time, 100 MINS.

The very conception of this film, a Chinese opera, limits this for the U.S. However, its delicate and lyrical charm might make this an unusual offbeater though it is primarily for those familiar with the sing song chanted Chinese opera. It concerns a fairy princess living in Heaven who descends to earth and marries a mortal. She helps out of bonded servitude and they are at the height of happiness, with an expected child, when she is called back by her father. Simply told in song and gesture it reaches a poetic level and moving ending. Rare chances for the U.S., but unusual enough for extremely specialized placing. Technical credits and special effects all blend into making this a successful folk opera, with actors and actresses properly stylized, and their high keyed singing is soon acceptable via the well done visuals.

DEVDAS (INDIAN). Mohan release and production. Directed by Bimal Roy. Screenplay, Nabendu Ghosh; camera, Kamal Bose; editor, Singh Bedi; music, S. D. Burman. With Dilip Kumar, Vijayantimala, Suchitra Sen. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

Film is slowly outlined and played in native fashion, but has the technique and storytelling manner of the west. It emerges a lyrical love story of a rich, weak boy separated from his poorer sweetheart by convention and social differences. The seemingly mawkish story line never gets sentimental or dreary, and the deft visuals, acting and direction strike a poignant note that slant this for possible chances in specialized theatre setups in the U.S.

THREE IN ONE (AUSTRALIAN). Tradition Film release and production. Directed by Cecil Holmes. Screenplay, Rex Reinit from stories by Henry Lawson, Frank Hardy, Ralph Peterson; camera, Ross Wood; editor, Raymond Hanson. With John McCallum, Edmund Allison, Jerome Levy, Leonard Thiele, Joan Landor, Brian Viary. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Film ties together three stories and is the first neo-realist film from Australia. Tales are offbeat, and though direction does not give them an original air it has a flair that might make this an okay filler for secondary U.S. spots. One concerns the burial of an unknown visitor who gets a fancy sendoff by a group of miners, another is about depression days which lead a burly, individualistic worker to steal wood for his friends, on a cold night, from a hoarding landowner, and third concerns how a young boy and girl decide to overcome financial fears and marry after a fight one night and their individual self realization of their love. Though sketchy, this is a looksee at another aspect of Australian life. Direction is fair with the story lines making for the most interest. Technical credits are good.

La Gata (The Cat) (SPANISH; COLOR; C'SCOPE). Hispano-Fox release and production. Directed by Marguerite Alexandre, Rafael Torrecilla. Screenplay, Cesar Ardavin; camera, (Eastmancolor), Juan Marine; editor, Meeedes Alonzo. With Aurora Bautista, Jorge Mistral, Nani Fernandez, Jose Nieto, Felipe Simon. At Karlovy Vary Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

First Hispano C'Scoper is a familiar tune played with fiery passions, bull fighting and flamenco. For the U.S. its simple tale and mounting limit this for the lingo circuits where its action and color might make this of interest. Direction, acting and general aspects are ordinary, but C'Scope does well by the landscapes. Mosk.

BOY-MEETS-TRACTOR UPDATED

Has Video Staled Screen Quipping?

Are jokes becoming a stale commodity at film theatres?

Regarded as a striking example of this is "That Certain Feeling," new Bob Hope starrer, which is doing only fair business despite the big "sell" job Hope is doing on the picture. Further, it's his first since "Seven Little Foys," which was smash, thus indicating that the followup pic, "Feeling," would meet with average success.

Trade analysts have it figured that Hope's quips—even though "Feeling" has some plot material—are too much the type of entertainment he offers on television. On the other hand, "Foys" had a wide assortment of believable characters, mainly Hope as Eddie Foy, engaged in a sentimental comedy and there was no "tv feeling."

Leather-Jackets Ahoy, New Sell for Metro's Rough Graziano Biopic

There'll be no "soft-peddling" of Metro's "Somebody Up There Likes Me." Because of the results of its campaign switch with the picture in New York, M-G has now decided to play up all the leather jacket-angles—that is, lay it on the line with the public that the film is about Rocky Graziano as a young hoodlum who did a reform school stretch and went AWOL from the Army before becoming a successful boxer.

At the outset M-G played down the rough-&-tough aspects of the film's content, suggesting instead romance and the influence which a gal had on a man's career, all designed to lure femme ticket-buyers. With this kind of backing "Likes Me" did modestly upon opening at Loew's State Theatre, N.Y., but the boxoffice picked up when the campaign change was made.

Now M-G is going all out with the raw material. The switched-to ad approach in Gotham is to be used nationally.

YANK ADVICE ON CRASHING U.S. MARKET

Foreign-Language Films Should Either (A) Go for Circuit Bookings (In Which Case, Dub English Voices) Or (B) Stay Cozy In Arties (In Which Case, Use Titles Only)—Each Film Judged Separately

By FRED HIFT

Despite fluctuating success, the policy of releasing voice-dubbed versions of imports after they've played off the art circuit with only English subtitles seems to be gaining favor with the American handlers.

A number of important upcoming productions from abroad are getting that treatment, helped along by a strong conviction on the part of overseas producers that dubbing is their answer in the broad American market.

The U.S. distribs, who claim to know the market better than their foreign suppliers, say that, unless absolute mass booking can be achieved (upwards of 3,000 or 4,000 dates), efforts are better concentrated on a smaller number of houses.

It is the general concensus that, even on the more successful importations, about 75% to 80% of the revenue comes from something like 250 key spots throughout the country. This, in a sense, is a mirror image of what has been true for some time of the big American companies also, who get the majority of the coin out of a comparatively small number of situations.

Expansion Economics

Argue the indies: "What's the use of trying to expand into the hinterlands, when such bookings are apt to lose money for both distributor and producer?" It's a different story, though, when a picture—and it would have to be dubbed—gets the kind of handling that catapults it into the circuits, where it might garner 4,000 or more dates.

"It's that in-between ground that doesn't make the added distribution costs worth while," maintain the indies who've been prodded a good deal of late—particularly by the French—on the inadequacy of their releasing setups outside the keys.

There are two lines of thought re the release of dubbed films. One holds that it's a good deal to follow up the artie dates with a dubbed version, cashing in on the publicity, particularly when a successful import like the French "Diabolique" (Richard Davis) is concerned.

Others hold that, in most cases, release in the specialized houses "tags" a picture, and makes it difficult to sell to the commercial theatres. Added argument, of course, is that a dubbed film tends to rob a good picture of its guts unless it happens to be precisely the kind of production that lends itself to lip-sync treatment.

French director Jean Renoir said last week that he didn't like dubbing "but it seems to be the only choice."

To Dub or Not to Dub

Increasingly, European producers keep this fact in mind and turn out dual version. This is true, for instance, of the upcoming "Elena Et Les Hommes," in which Ingrid Bergman starred with Mel Ferrer in France, with Renoir directing.

Both Renoir and Henri Deutschmeister, the producer, are currently in N. Y. discussing release of the pic in which Warner Bros. has an interest. Obviously, it'll be put out in English version. Another French pic on which an English version is forthcoming is the Maria Schell starrer, "Gervaise."

Some indie distribs say that it's wise to follow a subtitled pic with a dubbed version, but hold that, too often, the timelag between the release of the two is too great. "Wages of Fear," for example, was put out with titles, then was withdrawn, dubbed and released again, but without success. Distributors Corp. of America picked up "Bread, Love and Jealousy" following its N. Y. firstrun with titles and dubbed it. "The Bed" played off dates in dubbed form after playing the arties with titles, and so did "Too Bad She's Bad."

"Rififi," an outstanding success at the Fine Arts, N. Y., has been dubbed by UMPO, its distributor. Pic particularly lends itself to the treatment since it has many long silent action stretches in it. An English version also is becoming available on "French Can-Can," which did diappointing business in its original French form.

Dubbed pix in the U.S. have, with some exceptions, not been successful to date. "Fabiola" some years back was dubbed and cleaned up, but it was strictly an exploitation film. IFE released "Bitter Rice" in English after the original had grossed very well, but the dubbed version was disappointing. On the other hand, the dubbed "Anna" did fairly well. The French "Don Camillo" in English flopped just as hard as did the original version.

Dubbing today costs between $14,000 and $20,000 and can be done for as little as $8,000 in Europe. However, insist the distribs, unless the dubbing job is perfect, a picture doesn't stand much of a chance. (Here, again, "Mr. Hulot's Holiday," the Tati comedy, was an exception).

MEAGRE RENTALS FROM COMMUNISTS; MOST PRODUCERS STILL INTERESTED

With the holdout exception of the United States, the film producing countries of the world and particularly of Europe are showing marked interest in trading with Russia and the Soviet satellites.

The change has come about in recent months, when countries like Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, etc. began to indicate that they'd be willing not only to show the western product, but also to pay.

The French, the Italians, the Germans and, to a more limited degree, the British, all have begun to exchange film with the Eastern European "people's democracies" and, in some instances, have been paid in dollars for their product.

The Germans, eagerly looking for ways to expand their foreign market and sorely missing what used to be their own market, i.e. the Eastern zone of Germany, are now openly wooing the Soviet satellites, where the German film at one time used to be popular.

It's acknowledged that the Red nations don't pay much, but the attitude of the Europeans is that some measure of an export market is better than none. Specifically this attitude is taken by the French, which arranged a film week in Moscow. A month ago, Jacques Flaud, director general of the Centre National de Cinematografie, went to Budapest to screen French films there during a "festival" and to make deals.

Filming of the Arthur Miller play, "The Crucible," as a French-East German (DEFA) coproduction venture, is an outgrowth of this new cooperation. All the Germans did, in this instance, was to provide their share of the coin.

A French spokesman termed the arrangement an effort by the East Germans to show their people that the Government was eager for international cooperation on all levels. Thinking appears to be similar to that which moved the Russians to go along with Mike Todd on a number of projected pix.

U. S. position still is that, until and unless the film industry gets a real "prod" from the U. S. State Dept., the current reluctance to do business with the Reds should and will continue. Individual companies cannot do business with any of the satellites outside the Motion Picture Export Assn. orbit under the existing franchise arrangement. There is no absolute assurance, however, that this arrangement will be continued indefinitely, and it comes up for renewal every six months.

Quite apart from that, American film execs, currently interested in revenue producing ventures, point out that deals with the Soviets or their countries hold little financial promise. There have been continuing attempts by the Czechs and others to get the U. S. to sell them films, but at no point has there been any definitive offer. Not even the Russians, whose Ambassador huddled with MPEA prexy Eric Johnston, have yet indicated what they'd be willing to pay for getting Hollywood films.

Soviet line leans towards "exchange" more than direct payment, a policy that's practiced among the Communist nations but obviously holds little promise in dealings with the West.

Basic Statistics on 'Possibilities'

CinemaScope Has 17,385-Equipped Houses in U.S. and Canada

Installations of CinemaScope equipment in U.S. and Canadian theatres has reached 17,385, representing 13,826 posibilities, i.e. theatres in which any one film can play at a time.

Depending on whose theatre count one accepts, the 13,826 figure represents—or doesn't represent—full C-Scope saturation of all U.S.-Canadian possibilities. Going by the 20th-Fox count, there are a total of 23,000 houses of which about 18,000 would be possibilities. That would leave a little over 4,000 possibilities yet to be equipped.

Accordinng to the statistics accepted by COMPO, 13,826 possibilities equipped takes in virtually all the possibilities there are.

Among the 17,385 houses listed by 20th as being equipped for CinemaScope, 3602 are drive-ins and 12,967 are regular hardtops. There are few additional stereophonic sound installations. Number still stands at 3,665. In addition, there are 829 mixers and 12,775 single optical installations.

Only 116 houses have installed the penthouse that would allow them to pick up a single magnetic track from the fourtrack magnetic print.

RED FILMS AND HOW THEY SLANT

Karlovy Vary, July 31.

Impressions of Russian and Satellite film production after two and a half weeks of viewing their product at the Czech Film Festival here:

Russia: Still plenty of party line angles in scenarios but less ponderous and absurd boy-meets-tractor plotting than of yore.

East Germany: Most backward Red-dominated country cinematically. Makes films with long-winded orations by posturing heroes of early Communistic movement. Delight in picturing West Germany as full of unemployment and jazzy delinquents.

Bulgaria: In this country's films the workers sing joyously though up to their necks in mud.

Poland: Allegory of good and evil, as Reds read those values, turns into a hobnailed fairy tale.

Red China: Mixture from this land is one-part Chinese folklore and one-part Marxian heroics. When drawing on classical tradition the results are frequently lyrical and artistic.

Hungary: Possibly the most realistic and least party-slanted. This may reflect Budapest's long experience in making stage plays about people rather than ideologies. Mainly their films concern interpersonal relationships and not the class struggle.

Yugoslavia: Has developed a technique of slick thrillers clearly influenced by western civilization's film techniques.

'LUST FOR LIFE' TO OPEN AT PLAZA, N. Y.

Metro is giving the art circuit still another whirl, this time with "Lust for Life," adaptation of Irving Stone's biography of Vincent Van Gogh with Kirk Douglas in the title role. Short time ago the company launched Gene Kelly's "Invitation to the Dance" in off-Main Stem outlets.

"Life" is set to go into New York's Plaza Theatre in mid-September, this being the first booking. Company hopes for a long run to build word of mouth, then figures on circuit bookings. This would follow the pattern of the "Lili" distribution a couple of years ago.

Mpls.: 'Somebody' Hep 7G, 'Boats' Trim 12G, 'C'rama' 30G, 53d & Out

Minneapolis, July 31.

With two more topnotchers arriving in the loop to augment the most powerful array of boxoffice smash holdovers within memory, downtown continues to sizzle and produce a hefty total take. Both newcomers in question, "Somebody Up There Likes Me" and "Away All Boats," rate high.

Otherwise it's the 53rd and final stanza for "Cinerama Holiday" and the fifth, third and second for "Trapeze," "Moby Dick" and "The Eddy Duchin Story," respectively. All are still high steppers. End of the 10-day Aquatennial festival eases the competitive boxoffice pressure for the showhouses.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (53rd wk). Ends a run almost as remarkable as that of its predecessor, "So This Is Cinerama," in a boxoffice blaze of glory. "Seven Wonders of the World" opens Aug. 7. Tremendous $32,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Somebody Up There Likes Me" (M-G). Highly rated picture should build via favorable reviews and word-of-mouth. Good $7,000. Last week, "Black Sleep" (UA) and "Creeping Unknown" (UA), $7,100 eight days.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Trapeze" (UA) (5th wk). Holds on tenaciously, but due to give way to "Moby Dick" on latter's moveover after this stanza. Okay $4,000. Last week, $5,500.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-$1)—"Moby Dick" (WB) (3d wk). Talk of the town. They're still pouring in. Fat $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-$1)—"Eddy Duchin Story" (Col) (2d wk). They like this one much here and they're flocking to see it. Big $9,000. Last week, (previously underquoted), $17,000.

"Catered Affair" is satisfactory at the Midland, as is "Congo Crossing" in three Fox Midwest houses. "Moby Dick" at the Paramount second week is sturdy, and "King and I" third week at the Uptown is pleasant. "This Is Cinerama" continues to show strong staying power, rolling merrily on in seventh week at the Missouri. ## 'CINERAMA' 24G IN 59TH FRAME

Chicago, July 31.

Chi firstrun biz is being done mostly at holdover situations this round, though several new entries shape okay but not spectacular.

"Santiago" and "Foreign Intrigue" combo should get a solid $20,000 in the opener at the Roosevelt and "The Ambassador's Daughter" looks a hotsy $18,000 in the first at the Esquire. The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

N.Y. Going Steady With Hot H.O.'s But 30G Payoff for (New) 'Pards'; 'Private' Firm 12½G, 'Reef' $9,800

Gotham is going substantially like the rest of the country this week with the tall coin for the most part being grabbed by a handful of blue-chips productions. "Moby Dick," with $36,000 at the Criterion and $20,500 at the Sutton for the fourth week, is high on the list. "Eddy Duchin Story" is taking a nice $123,000—particularly nice in view of length or run —at the Music Hall. "Trapeze" was the first of the blockbusters to go into circulation and is weakening with $18,000 for the eighth frame at the Capitol (but still mighty in earlier stages of its run in other keys). "King and I" continues as a powerhouse with $105,000 for its fourth frame at the Roxy.

Main Stem's big newcomer is "Pardners" at the Mayfair where the first week's take of $30,000 is plenty healthy. "Secrets of the Reef" is strong on opening at the Baronet with an initial week's draw of $9,800. "Private's Progress" is a click at the Guild with $12,500 for the first stanza.

"Phantom Horse" is another fancy art house drawing card, taking $10,000 in the first week at the Normandie. In an unusual situation, all off-Broadway houses playing offbeat product are taking nice coin.

"Raw Edge" with vaude is giving the Palace a good week, figured at $17,000. This is the highest tally for this spot in many weeks.

Unitalia Displacing ANICA-Export And, 'Tis Rumored, Eventually IFE

Rome, July 31.

The long-lasting Italian film production slowdown is said to be one of the reasons behind a series of little-known changes which have recently taken place in the local industry's export structure. For one, ANICA-Export, the organization set up last year to handle and channel Italy's pic export problems, has for all purposes already ceased to operate and will be officially disbanded Aug. 31 of this year.

ANICA-Export offices had been set up in several European capitals, with HQ in Rome, under the sponsorship of ANICA, the Italian Film Industry Association headed by Eitel Monaco. It is said locally that the then-new setup in such capitals as Paris, Madrid, London, etc., at times duplicated and/or stepped on the toes of another outfit, Unitalia Film, previously set up in the same capitals by the Italian pic industry. Its function was and is to propagandize the local product all over the world, in a manner later copied by Unifrance Film, Unigermania, Uniespana, etc. Either because of this conflict of interests and activities, or merely as an economy move, ANIA-Export was disbanded.

An offer has been made to Unitalia (headed by Emanuele Cassuto) to take officially take over activities, especially export, previously handled through ANICA-Export, but Unitalia has not yet decided on whether or not it wants to take on this added burden of responsibility. Felt that it may turn down the offer until a later date.

Meanwhile, effective immediately, Unitalia takes over control and jurisdiction over all industry delegations with offices in foreign countries, as well as exercising full control over Italian film weeks abroad and delegations sent to these. In addition, a "combined" commission of experts (including crix, producers and government officials) will now determine pix to be sent to film festivals in representation of this country. Previously, this chore had been split, with a board of producers selecting a group of films for festivals, from which another committee of "experts" made the final slate. Result of the old setup, according to local chatter, was that Italy was "in the hands" of its producers and selection suffered.

Fate of Italian Film Export (IFE), after all these changes, is still in doubt, but feeling here is that while the New York (and U. S.) IFE setup and function may continue as a channel for Italian pix in the States, IFE Rome, which has already cut its staff and activity sharply in reeent times, will slowly fade away.

KENNETH MORE'S $150 PRIZE TITLE ON PLAY

Edinburgh, July 31.

Kenneth More, English aetor, will change projected title of play he is preeming at the Lyeeum here on Friday (Aug. 3) from "A River Breeze" to "Head Over Heart." Title was chosen by viewers after More had offered a $150 prize for ideas.

Set in Henley during Regatta Week, play concerns a girl who, because of an illns, has to have her head shaved. On her scalp is found a birthmark, the nine of diamonds, the Curse of Seotland.

Roland Culver, stage and film actor, has authored the play, and appears in it with Phyllis Calvert and Naunton Wayne.

More has managerial interest in the production, his first venture in this field. In Septmber he goes himself into a film version of J. M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton."

Roy Kellino, who directed "Affair," will be director and producer of the second Dragon project.

Jap MPC Wants U.S. Pix Submitted for Review

Tokyo, July 24.

The Motion Picture Council of Japan this week recommended to Prime Minister Hatoyama that he urge U. S. companies operating here to submit their product to the self-imposed censorship board of the Japanese film industry before release in this country.

The 10 U. S. majors have withheld their films from review by the Japanese Motion Picture Code of Ethics Control Committee on the basis that such screening would be double censorship in view of the fact that MPEA films imported for release here carry the U. S. Motion Picture Code of Approval seal.

In a more friendly vein, the Council also advised the government to increase the import of foreign films by 10% above the current total of 180 films.

Pix Preems Dip In Berlin Heat

Berlin, July 24.

As usual for the summer months, the number of big pix preems currently is way off. And, with the heat, that also applies to U. S. films.

Latest Hollywood pic preems here include "On Threshold of Space" (20th), "You're Never Too Young" (Par), "Hell on Frisco Bay" (WB) and "Square Jungle" (U). None of these received speeial press acclaim. Metro, however, reissued "Camille" and that 20-year-old Greta Garbo starrer again faseinated press and public alike.

The trend in film boxoffice popularity in West Germany's eight most important key cities (including W-Berlin) last month showed domestic films still to be on top. They garnered 42.3% of the playdates. U. S. pix had 33.5% of all dates, followed by French (8%), Austrian (7.5%), Italian (4.9%) and British 2.1%).

The German film, "I Often Think of Piroschka" (Witt/Schorcht) was leader at the boxoffice, followed by three other loeal productions, "I and My Sons-In-Law" (Real/Europa), "Bonjour, Kathrin" (Greven/Prisma) and "The Marriage of Dr. Danwitz /Real/Europa).

"Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing" (20th) was most suceessful film in June, reaching fifth spot. Three other Hollywood items were among the 20 biggest grossers in June, namely "Rose Tattoo" (Par), sixth spot; "Rebel Without a Cause" (WB), 15th; and "Rains of Ranchipur" (20th), 17th.

The most suceessful distributors in June were Schorcht, Gloria and Europa, all German outfits; 20th-Fox, Constantin, NF, Herzog, M-G, Deutsehe London and Warner Bros.

A couple of important U. S. films are due to be preemed here towards the end of July and in August. They include "The Harder They Fall" (Col), "Trouble With Harry" (Par), "23 Paces to Baker Street" (20th), "The Kentuckian" (UA) and "The Conqueror" (RKO). Latter had a one-night performance here (for charity) early this year.

U-I EYEING ITS OWN AUSSIE DISTRIB SITE

Sydney, July 24.

It's repealed here that Universal-International, under the guidance of Herc McIntyre, will erect its own film distribution centre in the Wentworth Ave. area in the very near future. U-I has been located for a long span in Sydney's downtown warehouse zone and mooted moveout follows failure to secure lease renewal.

Paramount, Metro and 20th-Fox each own modern film eentre here, and U-I's blueprint is seen as a move to keep pace with the opposition, at the same time becoming independent of landlords.

4 More Mex City Cinemas

Mexico City, July 24.

Cinema eonstruction continues apace here, relatively matching the astonishing increase in population, which the latest official figures plaee at 4,005,175. Four more cinemas, all swanky ones, are to be ready by Xmas it's estimated. That will make 141 film houses operating here. These four will be indies operated by the enterprises of Gen. Abelardo L. Rodriguez, ex-President of Mexico.

The Rodriguez enterprise and chains that Gabriel Alarcon and Manuel Espinosa Iglesias head reportedly will have 14-15 more cinemas constructed in the provinces by Dec. 31.

New Arg. Pic Law Still in Gab Stage

Buenos Aires, July 24.

Exhibitors and other groups interested in the film industry have had repeated confabs last week with the four-man Committee of political party leaders, selected by the Argentine government to report on its draft Film Law.

Word has got around that three of the committee members are quite open-minded on motion-picture problems, whereas a third, Sr. Oscar Lopez Serrot (Radical), has displayed strong nationalistic leanings. His resignation points to complete failure to coincide with his colleagues.

The draft law may prevent unfair advantages for producers with a finger in the exhibition pie. SICA, the Film Industry Union would be empowered to grant a seal of completion in each case, and thereupon the product would be available for exhibition.

Another version is that the law would set up credits and cash awards for shorts depicting the country's beauties and advan'ages. Also that exhibitors would have to devote 10% of all grosses to a promotion fund to be managed by a board representing the entire industry, which would distribute cash prizes for best pictures, performances, exploitation, teehnieal work and a proportion to social security for the industry. Any awards to be made strictly according to merit, and not according to a pieture's cost.

The Committee for Recuperation of the Argentine Screen Industry had several parleys with dissident councilor Lopez Serrot. This Committee is led by director Leopoldo Torre Nilson and Julio C. Rossi, and includes film critic Raimundo Calcagno, Roberto Escalada and Francisco de Paula, with Alberto Bousquet and Carlos Villapaz for the producers. Bousquet was formerly distributor for French material.

The various groups interviewed by the Committee have urged a return to unified censorship throughout the country, protesting the government's recent move in abolishing the Entertainment Board seal and leaving censorship matters to the authorities of each province. The entire industry considers this a retrogressive move ealculated to put it at the merey of innumerable bureaucratic officials, instead of one small group alone.

The general text of the draft film law, as prepared by entertainment board director Antonio Aita, is considered far from satisfactory by the industry. For instance, one clause exempts theatres of less than 500 seats from compliance with the Protection Law, which means that 60% of the country's houses would be exempt. There are 2 such theatres in Buenos Aires, 60 in the Province and some 1,000 throughout the rest of the country.

Many segments of the industry hope that the committee appointed by the government to examine it will redraft it.

Mexico's Tint Sked

Mexico City, July 24.

At least 40 tinter pix will be made in Mexico by Mexicans by Dec. 31, owing to improvements to labs in the form of imported equipment, mostly American, and plant reconditioning, revealed Cesar Santos Galindo, manager of the Churubusco studios here, Mexico's largest.

Galindo pointed to success of the rash of Mexican musifilms in color as evidence of advances that are being made with tinters down here.

French Film Week SRO In Buenos Aires Theatre

Buenos Aires, July 24.

Advance booking for the full eight-performance cycle of "French Film Week" was sold out in a couple of hours at the 3,000-seat Opera Theatre here last week. This despite the unusually high price of $7 to $4.60 for the full series.

The "Week" was organized in distribution, the Assn. of Argentine Film Critics and the Lococo Circuit. As a courtesty to the Argentine industry, the last picture in the cycle will be an unreleased native production, "Edad Dificil" (The Different Age), produced by Leopoldo Torres Rios.

A Spanish Film Week is slated shortly at the Ocean while Artkino is also announcing a seeond Soviet Film week. Since Soviet Military Attache Morosov was expelled from this country for espionage two weeks ago, it is doubtful if this film week will get much acclaim.

Ben Henry Resigns From Eros Films

London, July 31.

By mutual agreement with Phil and Sid Hyams, Ben Henry has resigned from the board of Eros Films, the British production and distributing outfit in which he's been interested since its inception. He'll relinquish all his interests and activities in the company at the end of August.

During the past six years Henry has played an active role in the company as director in charge of sales. Prior to joining Eros he was, for nearly six years, British sales chief for Universal-International. He was previously a director of Associated British Film Distributors and had served as associate producer for George Fromby Productions and as producer on a number of Vera Lynn films.

Henry, who is assistant chief barker in the London Tent of the Variety Club, will be making an announcement on his forthcoming plans in the near future.

4 'DON QUIXOTE' PIX PLANS ON ALL FRONTS

The recent announcement that Steve Bosustow's UPA productions was prepping a full-length cartoon version of "Don Quixote" (with Sidney Patterson assigned as writer-director), brings the current total of planned pic versions of the Cervantes classic to four.

First to announce a "Quixote" was Italo produeer Dino DeLaurentiis, who some months ago revealed plans to shoot in Spain with Federico Fellini direeting and French star Jacques Tati in the title role. Argentine-American director Hugo Fregonese is likewise known to be prepping a "Quixote," with Gary Cooper interested in the lead. Fregonese is eurrently toying with the idea of signing Lou Costello for the role of Quixote's sidekick, Sancho Panza.

Lou Costello and Bud Abbott round out the number of projeets on the same theme, with a eomedy planned under their own banner. According to Fregonese, however, eurrently back in Rome after a Spanish o.o. in regard to his "Quixote" production, the Abbott & Costello project has abandoned, ditto the DeLaurentiis plan, leaving only two: his own and the UPA cartoon-feature.

FRENCHMAN NEW PREZ OF INT'L PRODS. ASSNS.

The assembly decided, in view of the widening membership, to increase the size of its administrative council from eight to 10. New additions come from Japan and Pakistan. Other council members are reelruited from Germany, Italy, Mexico, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Britain and America. Eighteen of the 21 international associations in membership of the Federation were present at the assembly meet.

SAINT JOAN WEEK STARTS AUGUST 6th

Industry's Own 'Children's Library' Continues to Get Orphan Treatment

Children's Film Library of the Motion Picture Assn. of America continues in the doldrums but has been promised a number of pictures out of current release.

Companies at one point looked into the depleted stock of the library and promised to make available certain of the library "classics" which are no longer available.

However, it now looks as if these films aren't going to be forthcoming. And the villain appears to be television. Distribs, who've either sold their libraries to tv or plan to rent them out, no longer control the rights to the negatives and thus can make no commitment to the library.

MPAA setup doesn't rent films, but puts out a listing of "approved" pix which, via agreement with the distribs, are made available in the branches. Many of the oldies have dropped out due to wornout prints and the companies' inability or unwillingness to replace them.

Some sales chiefs feel that the prints aren't being used sufficiently to warrant the expense of making up new ones, particularly when the features are in color. Exhibitors, when arranging kid shows, frequently draw on westerns and action pix rather than "approved" films in building their Saturday morning programs. As a matter of fact, what with the competition from tv, the kiddie show isn't a widely used feature any more.

Italy Finally Passes That Law

Rome, July 31.

With the Italian Senate approval of the long-pending Film Aid Law, the legislation finally becomes effective and with it the Italo-American film pact. The draft of the agreement is being readied here now and should be signed in N.Y. within two weeks.

The agreement was drawn up and initialled last October, but had to await approval of the law in which clauses affecting importation of U.S. pix and increases in dubbing fees were inserted.

Clauses affecting the U.S. position were passed as drawn up long ago. Mainly they call for the raising of the dubbing fee from 2,500,000 Lire to 5,500,000 Lire per pic, as well as the raising of the quota time for Italo pix from 80 to 100 days per year. In return for these concessions, Italy agreed that no further restrictive measures against U.S. product would be passed.

Among the Italian aspects of the law are the following:

(1) Subsidy to producer (in form of tax rebate) of 16% of gross.

(2) Tax rebate to exhibitor totalling 20%.

(3) Yearly prizes (no longer percentage subsidies) to documentaries, for a total of 600 Million Lire.

(4) Subsidy via tax rebate to newsreel makers of 1.75% (down from 3%).

(5) Sufficient financial guarantees must be given by producers before they will be allowed to start a production.

Techni 12½c A Share

A reduced dividend of 12½c a share on the common stock was declared in New York last week by the Technicolor stock. It is payable on Aug. 20, 1956, to stockholders of record Aug. 3.

Commenting on the slicing, Techni prexy Herbert T. Kalmus described it as "a constructive measure for the immediate future," prompted by the lab's diversification program "and by the current drop in volume in (the) motion picture division due to present conditions in the motion picture industry."

Kalmus reported a Techni net of $980,692 for the first six months of 1956, or 49c a share. This compares to $1,300,336 or 65c per share for the corresponding period in 1955.

Sophocles in Tint

Stratford, Ont., July 31.

Sophocles' "Oedipus Rex," color-filmed in Toronto by producer Leonid Kipnis with Tyrone Guthrie directing the Shakespeare Festival Players, will be released in late October.

Simultaneous preem both in Canada and the States is planned, with later release in Europe.

Release contract still open.

Pix Must Resist Pressure Groups, Holds J. Mason

Film industry does too much pandering to pressure groups and should put the accent more on controversial and topical themes, says actor James Mason who doubles in brass as producer for 20th-Fox's "Bigger Than Life." Film shows what happens when a man overdoses on cortisone.

Coming up with answers on a large and varied range of topics, Mason told the press in Manhattan Monday (30) that:

1. "Bigger Than Life" isn't an "addiction" story in the technical sense of the word since cortisone is not habit forming.

2. He doesn't favor the Production Code but likes the British system of classifying pix for kids.

3. TV competition is keeping Hollywood from developing the needed crop of new stars.

4. It is difficult to "translate" European stars into Hollywood.

Mason produced "Bigger Than Life" from an original story in the New Yorker mag which took a poke at the doctor who prescribed the drug. In the film, that angle was eliminated.

"In relation to the Medical Association, I think I'd have been happier to produce the picture as an independent," commented Mason. "Then I wouldn't have bent backwards to please the doctors. But, the major companies have great respect for major institutions, such as the Medical Assn. And I was told that, if it wanted, the association could have actually blocked the showing of the film in certain districts."

In its current version, "Life" has the doctors' endorsement. Had he produced the film independently, he'd have "put some cracks here and there," Mason said, adding: "I think it makes a better picture."

Mason stressed the need for the major studios to tackle controversial themes in the face of the tv competition. "It's a mistake to leave it to tv to be the pacemakers," he said. "The film business used to be a year behind on topical stories. It didn't matter then. But today, with tv on the scene, Hollywood can't afford to be so timid. It's not enough just to have the 'biggest' pictures."

Regarding the Code taboo on drug and narcotics themes, Mason said it struck him as "absurd" that an Otto Preminger should be able to make a film like "Man with the Golden Arm," and release it via a major organization, while the major lots were bound by the Code restriction. "I don't really know how much the lack of a Code seal affected the Preminger picture," Mason commented.

Actor opined that "Bigger Than Life" wouldn't put off anyone from using cortisone "but, in any case, I wouldn't mind seeing fewer pills bought." He also recalled that the story was laid in 1950 or 1951, when cortisone was still comparatively new.

Television was hampering Hollywood in the development of new stars, said Mason. "Unless the motion picture again becomes the most popular medium of entertainment, it'll always be handicapped in the making of new boxoffice stars," he said.

Mason's next assignment is in Darryl F. Zanuck's "Island in the Sun" in which he'll play Maxwell Fleury. Pic rolls in October.

NOT PUSHING TAXES AGAINST TELEVISION

Raleigh, N. C.

Editor, VARIETY:

Ouch! I mean, your headline, page 20 in your issue of July 25. I cannot read, even between the lines, where I advocated privilege licenses on Television, during my appearance before the North Carolina Tax Study Commission. The story correctly states I pointed out "the Federal Communications Commission even prohibits a state, county or city to levy a privilege license on television."

I was showing why theatres licenses should be reduced, not why television should be taxed.

I assure you we are not advocating taxes on anyone. In fact, one of the Committee Members reminded me there is a 3% tax on Stockcar Racing admissions. I replied that they possibly have pneumonia but this was no benefit to the theatres who have double pneumonia.

Money 'n' Morals

St. Paul, July 31.

Bill Diehl of the St. Paul Press-Dispatch "polled" his readers on why they stayed away from film theatres and found his most-mentioned reasons:

1) Admissions were too high.
2) Features were too sexy.

Regarding point two, comment indicated it was the advertising copy as much as the screen content which provoked homebodies. Nor did Diehl, or his respondents, define what was meant by "sexiness."

Germany Thaws U.S. Pic Coin At Official Rate

Frankfurt, July 31.

Bank Deutscher Laender, official agency of the German federal government, and the Federal Minister of Economics have just worked out a new arrangement of special significance to the American motion picture interests in West Germany.

As of Aug. 15, 1956, American film distributors including MPEA member companies and the independents who release through German channels will have a new form of import permits providing that their earnings can be transferred to the United States at the official rate of exchange.

Formerly, the earnings had to go into liberalized capital accounts which could be exchanged for dollars only by selling on the open market. This is the first time since the war that the American companies will be permitted this official transfer of earnings to the States.

Actually, in transferring the accounts to the States at the official rate, there may be a slight drop in exchange as against the selling on the open market—with German D-marks in great demand, and with the liberalized funds representing the only D-marks with which a foreigner can make an investment in Germany, it has been possible to get slightly more on the open market than the official rate of 4.20 D-marks against each U.S. dollar.

With the constant fluctuations in the open market, however, this will assure a more stable exchange of currency. Major advantage of the decision is that it sets a precedent for transfer of funds out of Germany to the U.S., at a sound rate.

Any funds which the American companies have on hand in liberalized capital accounts as of Aug. 15 can either be held in the same account or transferred to the U.S. at the official rate.

Newsreel executives, while expressing regrets over the passing of the Warner-Pathe reel which closes shop Aug. 23, last week said the loss of the one competitor would make it easier for the rest to survive.

"This has been an over-crowded field for some time," noted one. "There has been too much competition since the war in a market that's becoming more limited every week. If you come down to it, two reels could serve the theatres very well."

There have been reports that Paramount also may be quitting the newsreel race and tie up with a television outfit. No confirmation has come from Par.

It was pointed out that, while there was a good deal of overlapping in bookings among the reels, the dropping out of Warner-Pathe definitely left more room for the res, not only in the U. S. but also abroad.

"There'll always be a newsreel," one of the reel execs said confidently. "We've proven over and over again that people want to see newsreels with their feature programs. It's too bad that so many exhibitors, the minute business drops a little, think it judicious to get rid of the newsreel."

Talk continues among reel execs about the desirability of pooling the coverage of certain "static" events that are now being covered by cameramen from all the reels. However, nothing is being done about the idea right now.

Meanwhile, at Warner News, news chief John H. LeVien last week was conferring with a number of "interested parties" on the sale of the Warner subsid which takes in also the large newsfilm library. LeVien said he was greatly encouraged by the interest shown, inasmuch as both the Warner News staff and the Warner homeoffice are anxious to go as far as possible in keeping the organization together.

In any case, however, there's very little chance that the Warner Pathe newsreel will be continued beyond the Aug. 23 deadline. Prospective purchasers appear primarily interested in using a reduced staff to keep turning out commercial film for tv and other outlets. Price, as reported last week, is put below $1,000,000 for the whole company, with Warners eager to write off the subsid as a tax loss.

Not yet clearly defined is the status of Norman Moray at Warners. Moray is president of Warner News, but has a contract and is expected to assume new duties at the homeoffice.

Ohio Supporting 763 Situations

Columbus, July 31.

The State of Ohio has a total of 763 film houses now in operation, reports the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio. The number compares with 1,153 which were operating in 1948.

As of July 1 of this year, there were 198 drive-in theatres in Ohio with three more under construction. The number of full-time indoor theatres declined to 496 with the other 69 theatres operating less than five days a week.

In 1948 there were 1,036 theatres and 117 drive-ins.

The ITO census relates that drive-in theatres now operate in 80 of Ohio's 88 counties with Franklin County (Columbus) leading the list (with 11 plus two under construction).

Three Ohio counties have no full-time indoor theatres. But Wile states that "the greatest distance anyone in the state would have to drive to a drive-in theatre is less than 30 miles. The distance to the nearest indoor theatre from any point in the state would be nearer 20 miles."

Economy Doesn't Mean Mediocrity

Dore Schary Defines Metro Goal as Big Pictures With Costs Under Discipline

Hollywood, July 31.

Metro's drive to streamline its studio operation in the interests of economy and efficiency will not change plans for a "program of quality pictures," studio chief Dore Schary reported in listing 12 films to go before the cameras in the next 16 weeks. Studio's objective, he added, is to maintain employment at the highest possible level consistent with the drive for "sharp, down-the-line economies."

Program of 12 films to be launched at the rate of three each month "backs up our confidence that with vigilance, the close cooperation of management and labor and squarely facing today's problems, a more realistic relationship can be achieved between costs and profits."

Studio now has "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Raintree County," "The Great American Pastime" and "Capital Offense" in production. Twelve new films will be "The Wings of Eagles," "Something of Value," "The Vintage," "Slander," "Les Girls," "Silk Stockings," "Ten Thousand Bedrooms," "Designing Woman," "The Loved and the Lost," "Moment of Truth," "Protection for a Tough Racket" and "Tip on a Dead Jockey."

Powell's RKO Producing

Hollywood, July 31.

Academy award winners Ernest Borgnine and Anna Magnani and Academy nominee Marisa Pavan have been lined up by 20th-Fox to co-star in "Getaway," which Dick Powell will produce.

Powell has a deal for four pix in three years, one of which is "Sitka." Undecided whether "Sitka" or "Getaway" will be first.

Thomas L. Robinson, publisher of the Charlotte News, who was recently elected president of the No. Carolina Press Assn. was once a publicist for 20th-Fox in Manhattan.

Secret Vote of 9 U.S. Majors To Remain Aloof From Venice

Nine major companies have decided not to send pictures to the Venice film festival even if asked to do so individually.

Decision came in a resolution passed by the Motion Picture Export Assn. board two months ago but until now kept secret. Paralleling the resolution was another one—well publicized at the time—proclaiming that, on account of the changed Venice regulations, the Americans would not go to Venice as an industry this year.

Only exception to both resolutions was 20th-Fox, which has made it plain that it will go into any festival if asked to do so. It is believed that either "The King and I" or "Bus Stop"—both 20th—will be shown at Venice.

It is also plain that the independents releasing through United Artists, if asked by Venice, are free to enter their films if they choose to do so, particularly since the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers is in no way a party to the MPEA stand.

It is understood that, while MPEA's Italian rep, Charles Baldwin, has transmitted to the Venice organizers the MPEA's decision not to participate as an industry, he has not been told—or certainly has not told the Italians—that the nine majors had voted not to send pictures.

Chances are that the companies' stand won't affect Venice very much inasmuch as the new rules call for no more than about 10 to 15 films total to be shown. What the Americans object to—as do the British and the French—is the new Venice method of selecting pix rather than let festival participants do the choosing.

CINEMIRACLE SETS UP SHOP IN N.Y. THEATRE

Before beginning work on the first Cinemiracle picture, producer Louis de Rochemont, who has been engaged by National Theatres to launch the new process, will produce several short films to demonstrate the potential of Cinemiracle. First project will be "The Third Alarm," a documentary that will be filmed in Philadelphia with the cooperation of the fire department.

The first Cinemiracle camera has been delivered to de Rochemon and he is beginning a "shakedown period" of the camera and sound units to familiarize technical and production personnel with the intricacies of operating the new system. Cinemiracle's portable projection equipment, assembled in Los Angeles, is now enroute to New York and will be installed at the company's N. Y. production centre at the Mt. Eden Theatre in the Bronx. By Aug. 15, de Rochemont hopes to have facilities completed for the showing of rushes. A newly-designed optical printer is expected to be delivered by Aug. 15, and Cinemiracle's second camera, which will enable the start of work on the feature production, is due shortly before Labor Day.

Sydney's Smart Start In 2d Half of Year

Sydney, July 31.

Second half of '56 has gotten underway brightly at pic boxoffices here. Balance of year looms boffo with strong product. A healthy wool check, thus commercial loom and little unemployment, likewise augers well for the future. Payees are shopping wisely for entertainment; the big ones boom, the minors slip pronto from marquees, as has been the case here for many years.

Columbia's "Picnic" broke the alltime record at the 2600-seater State under the Greater Union Theatres' banner and should run for a lengthy term. Metro's "Guys and Dolls" is another to score a wham hit and continues to capacity. "Dam Busters (WB) has clicked eight smash weeks here and continues.

UA is pulling terrific biz with "The Man With the Golden Arm." "Jubal" (Col) is another one likely to hit top figures in this keyer. 20th-Fox should hit the jackpot with "Man in the Grey Flannel Suit."

JAMES PARKER DROWNS ON CINERAMA RAPIDS

Stanley Warner received word via cable Monday (23) that a member of the Lowell Thomas expedition shooting the new Cinerama film, "Search for Shangri-La" was drowned in the upper Indus River gorge in Pakistan when the boat containing seven crew members and equipment turned over in the rapids.

Victim of the accident was James Parker, 45-year-old explorer and adventurer and a former actor. The other members of the crew, including director Otto Lang, escaped from the dangerous waters. In addition to Lang, those rescued were cameraman Jack Priestly, assistant cameraman Michael Zingale, focus man Peter Passas, grip Jack Wallace, and western rivermen Bus and Don Hatch.

Parker, who had been with the Theatre Guild, had abandoned acting for a career in skiing. He was a ski instructor at the Aspen, Colorado school when Thomas hired him for the Cinerama expedition. He is survived by his mother, a brother, and a sister.

Nick Ray's Africa Chore

Hollywood, July 31.

Nicholas Ray will direct "Bitter Victory" on location in Africa in October, his third film for 1956. Picture, to be produced by Paul Graetz, is based on Ron Hardy's novel.

Ray recently completed the James Mason starrer "Bigger Than Life," which Mason also produced, and will start "Jesse James" next month at 20th-Fox.

Won't Talk

Hollywood, July 31.

Hollywood stars and agents and the Screen Actors Guild are maintaining a strict "Never heard of it" attitude toward New York pub-ad directors' complaints that players are hampering selling of films by increased dictation on their billing. John L. Dales, national executive secretary of SAG declared that the situation is "so completely removed from Guild functions that SAG doesn't want to become embroiled in it. There is nothing in our contracts regarding billing. That's up to the economic bargaining power of the individual actor."

Agents, who steer and implement the "economic bargaining power" of individual stars maintained a tight-lipped "No comment" attitude when queried. Stars similarly declined to make any comment —or even to take any formal cognizance of the beef.

Century Ozoner's Six Boxoffices

Century's Theatres' new Route 110 Drive-In Theatre in Huntington Township, Long Island, opened last Wed. (23) with accommodations for 2,500 cars. It's the largest ozoner in L. I. and, claims Century, has one of the largest screens of all ramped situations. Six boxoffices, kiddie playland, other usual facilities and a twin tower to simulate moonlight.

Also set to ungate today is Skouras Theatres' 303 Drive-In Theatre, situated near Tappan, N. Y. This also has all standard features, including a playland.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

The Rank Organization has launched a major advertising campaign, mainly confined to class papers and journals, which outlines the role of the company in British film production and its campaign to expand world markets. Ads quote the fact that Rank built up a 125-theatre circuit, valued at $10,000,000, in Canada; has a financial interest in 500 theatres in Europe and the Commonwealth; and is currently trying to "open the door to the rich South American market."

The announcement closes with an appeal for government help. Rank's program of British films to show to the world, ads explain, can only be carried out if conditions at home are more favorable to the industry than they are today. It takes two years of costly planning, endeavor and continuous investment to make a good film. This is only possible if government policy offers the chance of long term financial stability.

Bill Diehl, St. Paul Pioneer Press-Dispatch critic, is asking his readers to write to him and tell him why they don't go to the movies, if they don't. He says he wants to be helped to understand the big dip in weekly theatre attendance since 1946. However, in the Twin Cities for the past month, after an exceedingly rough boxoffice stretch, the loop film emporiums, buttressed by an exceptionally large number of outstanding pictures, are really pulling in the customers again in good old days' fashion. So that maybe, it's being pointed out, the main answer to Diehl's question in part is that there haven't been enough sufficiently strong pictures.

A new type of lamp that provides "Maximum intensity, full control and greater mobility" than the old-style spots and arc lamps has been developed by studio electrician "Goldy" Garnel. Lamp, tagged the Garnelite, is being tried out by vet lenser Ernest Haller on Security Pictures "Men in War," on location. Haller feels the new lamp's size and candlepower make it possible to achieve top photographic quality with an ease of handling. Another advantage to the new lamp is that a burnt-out element can be replaced more rapidly than in other types of lamps.

Several hundred feet of hitherto secret film about the work done under the aegis of the Atomic Energy Commission will be included in the upcoming John H. Burrows' indie feature "Proving Ground." Film, written by Sam Neuman, is a love story set against the background of an atom bomb that failed to detonate. Burrows succeeded in getting declassification of 25,000 feet of color film about the AEC's work and will integrate some of it into his feature.

Universal has stockpiled 2,500 feet of Japanese noises for its sound library as a result of the filming of "Joe Butterfly" in Tokyo. Head sound technician Joe Lapis recorded assorted Tokyo sounds including the cries of street vendors, taxi horns, carnival music, street car bells and the ad-lib babbling of school children and Gina pedestrians. Two and a half reels will be assembled here for the soundtrack of "Butterfly" when it undergoes editing.

The Minneapolis Star and Tribune, this city's only newspapers and both under the same ownership, have recently adopted a new motion picture advertising standard-of-acceptance code.

It's explained that the code specifically bans advertising featuring "a high degree of violence" as well as that stressing sex in a distasteful or offensive manner.

Sneak preview in drive-in is planned for "Julie," initial offering of Marty Melcher-Doris Day's Arwin Productions. It will be simultaneous with preview in conventional house. Melcher feels ozone sneak vital because of importance of drive-ins. Also "Julie," a Metro release, is low key lighting film and he wants to see how it will play outdoors.

Policy: Pay Fine—and Operate

Reading, Pa., July 31.

For the sixth time within seven months, Sinking Spring Drive-In Theatre was fined $50 and costs for operating in violation of the state Sunday "blue laws."

The theatre, operated by Pavilion Drive-In Corp., Batavia, N.Y., faced the charge last December, again in May, once in June and three times in July—10, 16 and 26.

The operators who had failed to get the approval of voters for Sunday operation have formed the policy of "pay the fine and operate." Township citizens, who circulated petitions in favor of Sunday shows, will have to wait until the November 1957 municipal elections to vote on the matter.

Permeated With Love

ternational spa before World War I under its German name of Carlsbad. It then got the international elite who came for its water cures. It boasts a famous geyser in the center of town. The Sprudel which spouts hot water into the humid air from a depth of 6,000 feet. Waters, baths and inhalations, plus rest and various types of physical therapy, are the main aspects of the spa today. Now a place where workers are sent, it also has private patrons. Soviet influence is not as pronounced a few years ago and there is only one hotel devoted to Russo visitors.

Still Expensive

Still expensive for foreigners on the Czech crown rate exchange, its main night life is centered in the Florentine Gardens, a room in the immense Moskva Hotel. It has a 75 cent cover charge with drinks at $2. Floorshow is just a muscular dance team. Orchestra plays plenty of U.S. music and nostalgic patrons can run the gamut of all the pre-war hits plus a lot of new ones that trickle in from Austria or via the air waves.

Town seems to have well stocked, expensive, shop windows and main product is local glassware made at the Moser Works. Here all is blown and honed in practically medieval style for some of the best crystal in Europe. Expensive but hard to equal by machine.

One theatre is housing a student girl ballet group doing dances to old American songs. Fred Astaire records are played between such dance interludes as "Begin the Beguine," "Rhapsody In Blue" and "An American In Paris." Dancing is amateur but the fact that it can be done to American music is another sign of the easing of tensions. Jan Werich, the Czech actor who spent the war years in the U.S., commented on this and also is now doing a satirical piece, about the East in his Prague theatre. Werich also did "Finian's Rainbow" and "The Man Who Came to Dinner" a couple of years ago.

There is a local musichall, the Orfeum, giving a varied bill of acceptable talents.

Film trading activity is on the increase. Doing a pitch for Eastern biz are West Germany and Japan, though there are no diplomatic relations between the countries. West Germany, in particular, whose need for expansion is not being adequately fulfilled in the West, is making a big move here. Besides an official entry, the Gerhelming of Dieter Fritko, is showing five other pix outside the fest. Japan has sent a leftist pic that made a dent as an outsider at the recent Cannes Fest. West Germany and Japan can only exchange films, as yet, but outright sales are expected soon.

France is consolidating its popular position already won on the Czech film marts, and is also angling for other satellite and Russo biz in this showcase spot. England is in on this with a few features already having made a mark in Prague. J. Arthur Rank's Harry Norris came in to looksee the situation and has already negotiated the sale of the entered pic "A Town Like Alice." With the intense interest in "Marty" this should be the first recent Hollywood pic to break into the East when biz arrangements are finally decided upon between Russia and the satellites and the U.S. Motion Picture Export Association.

Great interest in new film processes is evident here and this correspondent has been interviewed and approached on this subject many times by Eastern pressmen. The showing of open air C'Scope pix, one Spanish and one French, have been greeted as an interesting new innovation, but the main desire is in seeing the American usage of the method. Also noted was that VARIETY is known in the East with many asking points about the jargon, and a Hungarian Red said that a recent review of a Hungarian pic at the Cannes fest was frontpaged in the leading papers.

Scanning Red Skies

Karlovy Vary, July 31.

Like so many film festivals, the competitions at Karlovy Vary were marred by too many entries. Press reps and others in attendance were called upon to sit in on three different screenings daily, beginning with a program of shorts in the mornings followed by feature showings both in the afternoon and the evening. With a couple of exceptions, observers rated most product on view as fair.

As at Cannes, strong audience reaction was drawn by "The Red Balloon," whimsical and poetic 30-minute French short.

Notes on some of the features: "Children of Hemso," Swedish, an interesting, offbeat drama, harsh and rugged, but too heavyhanded for the United States; "A Pint of Beer," Hungarian, boy-girl love match well acted and directed and showing promise for U. S. art spots; "Darkness at Midday," Japanese, concerning police brutality and okay for specialized situations in the U. S.; "If All the Guys in the World" and "The Best Part" (CinemaScope), both French and both showing quality but "World" goes overboard in trying to build suspense and "Part" is a documentary about dam building.

Also, "The Marriage of Dr. Danwitz," West Germany, re medical men who can't land a job in their country, suggestive of soap opera but neatly put together and okay for U. S. art theatres; "North Sea Bus," Norway, adequate war actioner with limited possibilities; "Ernst Thallmann," East Germany, heavy on propaganda as the German Communist leader is deified; "La Gata" (The Cat), first C'Scope pic made in Spain, suitable for Hispano lingo situations but not much for regular runs in U. S.; "A Town Like Alice," British, competently-made war film with possibilities for secondary feature placement in U. S.

Hilton Looks

ping line had considered building a 22-story hotel on the site, then abandoned its plan.

Lurie has not said where he would have Hilton build the two new theatres, one with 2,000 seats, the other with 1,500. It is known, however, that he has an eye on two sites. One is a block or two away, on Geary Street. The two new houses would be separated by another building in that case. The other is on Eddy Street, a block or so away from the city's only other legit house, the Alcazar.

Addition of another first-class hotel to the city's downtown area undoubtedly would mean a showcase for top name acts and bands. Also, it would furnish heavy competition for the Fairmont, St. Francis, Mark Hopkins and Palace.

Lurie and Hilton once jointly owned the Sir Francis Drake, a big commercial hotel just off Union Square, but sold out just before World War II.

It's common knowledge that Hilton has been itching to shoulder back into the Frisco hotel scene for years.

Omaha: 'Boats' Landing Big 12G, 'Gun' Zippy 8G

Omaha, July 1.

Major topic along film row this week is the upsurge of biz at the Omaha Theater, which is coming out of the doldrums after several years of poor grosses. Following on the heels of "Trapeze," which did $36,000 in four weeks at the $5,000-average house, is "Away All Boats," which is off to a lively $12,000 start. Excellent flack work obviously helped.

"Fastest Gun Alive" is big in its opening stanza at the State and "Eddy Duchin Story" stays hot in its second week at the Brandeis. "Rawhide Years," another new entry, is dull at the Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Eddy Duchin Story" (Col) (2d wk). Sturdy $6,500. Last week, $9,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,890; 75-$1)—"Rawhide Years" (U) and "Congo Crossing" (U). Slow $8,500. Last week, "King and I" (20th) (2d wk), $8,500.

State (Goldberg) (860; 75-$1)—"Fastest Gun Alive" (M-G) and "River Changes" (WB). Staunch $8,000. Last week, "Great Locomotive Chase" (BV), $5,500.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25)—"King and I" (20th) (3d wk). Exciting raves on every hand and is in for long run. Gigantic $9,000. Last week, $10,000.

Flock of Italo 'Pix Sold to USSR

It's not known generally here, but a fair number of Italian films have made their way through the Iron Curtain and onto the Russian market in recent years. A number of them have become hits on the Russo circuits.

Recent exports include a batch of 11 features: "A Husband for Anna Zaccheo," "Two Cents Worth of Hope," "Il Cammino della Speranza," "Roma Ore II," "Non C'e Pace Tra Gli Ulivi," "Le Ragazze di Piazza di Spagna," "Cops and Robbers," "Giuseppe Verdi," "Bellissima," "Ai Margini della Metropoli," and "Sesto Continente." Though sold at the usual Soviet flat rate system, the biggest grossers are known to have been the three "escape" pix in the bunch: "Cops and Robbers," "Giuseppe Verdi" and "Sixth Continent." Other items mainly treated social themes and were mostly directed by men with leftist tendencies.

Italo export to Russia is expected to spurt some more following the Italian film weeks planned for October in the Russian capital and in Leningrad, events to be organized by Unitalia Film as part of its campaign to push the local product in heretofore untouched countries in the West and Far East.

Film Dividends—'56

For the first half of 1956, film industry dividends ran slightly behind the same period of 1955.

The half-year aggregate came to $14,318,000, compared with $14,663,000 a year earlier. However, the stockholders' melon for June 1956 was $3,842,000, or slightly better than the $3,787,000 or June 1955.

The June figures: Loew's, $1,286,000 in June of each year; Paramount Pictures $1,094,000 this June and $1,095,000 last June. Universal $314,000 this June, and $313,000 last June. Allied Artists $21,000 each June. United Artists Theatres, $8,000 each year. Roxy Theatre $6,000 each year. Consolidated Amusements $55,000 this June, nothing last June.

Dept. of Commerce says the publicly announced dividends in any industry normally amount to about 60 to 65% of all dividends actually paid.

Renoir View

more it costs to make two versions," Renoir said, "but, speaking as a director, I only know that it's a lot more work. From the point of view of time, etc. I'd calculate it takes almost double. Also, even with a capable actress like Miss Bergman, the problem of shooting a scene in two languages is very great."

Renoir doesn't believe in dubbing but is resigned to the fact that it may be the only way to get imports shown widely. "Can-Can" has been dubbed, and Renoir said he was very pleased with the results. "Of course, it's a different picture now," he observed, "but the English dialog doesn't harm it any."

Sharply eonscious of American film censorship—and disapproving of it—Renoir he saw the screen as "just a new way of printing. I think all kinds of pictures should be made. And when you come down to it, sex isn't the greatest danger to our young people today. I think the whole approach to sex in film is wrong. It's good to be outspoken about it."

As for the widely varying topics of his films, Renoir said it was quite a deliberate "diversifieation." "It is most important to keep changing one's style. For myself, I prefer to shoot a bad picture with a new problem than to do a good one that is nothing more than an imitation."

After he finishes "Elena," Renoir plans to settle down to write a book on his father, the painter Renoir. He has also written a French adaptation of Clifford Odets' "The Big Knife" which will be presented on the Paris stage.

pression of the industry's realization of changing times and customs.

Distribution executives who have given thought to the problem frankly admit to frustration inasmuch as logic and business sense don't always seem to go together in discussions of this issue. There is no question that those who run distribution generally would favor a drastic readjustment that would see day-and-date suburban runs with downtown wherever this is possible; also they would like to institute a more intelligent—possibly staggered—suburban break to avoid large numbers of houses playing the same picture at the same time.

But, on a more general level, distribution, faced with an extremely uneven domestic gross pattern, would like to experiment. And, under prevailing conditions, this is made impossible.

"What we have forgotten is that, with the television competition what it is, we must make it convenient for people to come to see our pictures," commented a distribution topper. 'That's part of the answer for bringing people out of the house in the first place."

And a circuit man chimes in: "Why should hundreds of theatres and millions of people in a city like New York be punished so that a single downtown house can play a film? It's just not good merchandising."

It is pointed out by distribution that the department stores, realizing the swing away from the cities and into the suburbs, have established large branch operations that allow the customers to purchase virtually anything they can buy in the downtown store. Same is true of the supermarkets and other outlets in the mass consumption field.

Hate That Downtown!

From the exhibitor end, the question of more adequate service to the suburban population, which shows a reluctance to come downtown for reasons ranging from parking problems to the high price of admissions, poses a variety of problems, some of them strictly competitive.

The downtown exhibitor, with a large investment and a high operating cost, will not agree to having his picture preemed day-and-date within the metropolitan area, arguing that it would kill his business. He argues that the merchants in the heart of the city benefit from the crowds he helps draw to his area, and that—if shorn of the incentive to come downtown—customers would stay away more than ever.

The distributor, while anxious to day-date, would have to make a choice of houses. And in so doing, he'd run headlong into legal snarls since a multitude of houses would claim the right to share in the run.

"I know that the benefit we get from the downtown kickoff via advertising spillover, etc. is exaggerated," observed a distribution man. "By the time the picture gets out, the benefits of the downtown run have largely evaporated. At the same time, if I were to go on record as saying: 'I want my pictures to day-date with the suburbs' I'd get a very enthusiastic echo from a mass of theatres. And then I'd have to say to them: 'I don't mean you.' And before you know it, we'd be in the courts again."

It's pointed out, additionally, that the "want to see" desire in the suburbs is limited to the top pix only, so that the question of day-dating preems actually arises only in a limited number of cases.

As for the praetiee of the suburban firstruns all breaking a picture at the same time, saturating an area almost to the exclusion of other product, distribs again agree it's a bad practiee but, almost in the same breath, add: "What theatre is going to step back and, even on an alternating basis, play second fiddle to another house? Even if they did, they'd be afraid that some subrun would come along and go firstrun."

Attempts have been made in various cities to stagger the suburban break, but the problem comes back to the legal angle-exhibitors book from many companies. In order to make such a system effective, the distributors would have to get together, and that they can't do.

No one contests the theory that the New York arrangement, for instance, where a picture will break all over Queens at the same time, costs the industry a vast number of potential customers each week, simply because of a lack of choice. Yet, nothing would indicate a change.

"When it comes to distribution, you've got to remember that this is a business of personalities," was one comment. "Many of the people who started this business are still in it, both at the distribution and at the exhibition end. Their thinking is rigidly set. They don't want to change at this point and make enemies. That is one good reason why nothing will happen for the moment."

There is no question that, even should court and antitrust restrictions be sufficiently to make changes, latter would require a deep going overhaul of the distribution pattern, which is complicated enough as is. In many cities, theatres within a comparatively short distance from downtown break with a picture on the national release date, and more houses are clamoring for that kind of run all the time.

Distribution, much more so than exhibition, is aware of the problem and the industry's lack of flexibility. Yet, even in distribution, the top brains are awed by the magnitude of the chain reaction that even minor changes would involve. "The question always is—even in our own minds—where do you draw the line?" said one of the distribution spokesmen.

James Dean

James Dean. He was shy in manner, not masterful in the ordinary sense. The two roles he played were manifestations of the all-American mixed-up kid of the post-World War II era. What he represents in terms of the American state of mind, circa 1956, is anybody's guess. Typical of the love letters still coming in are such endearments as this:

> "Jimmy Darling: I know you are not dead. I know you are just hiding because your face has been disfigured in the crash. Don't hide, Jimmy. Come baek, It won't matter to me . . ."

One angle that makes Warners, jittery is the possibility of drawing social criticism if guessing wrong about the Dean exploitation values. Some adults and newspapermen are pretty skeptical, inclined to suspect a long-term build for "Giant" though there's absolutely no proof that Warners planned it that way or indeed that any film company could rig such a reaction. (Newsstands have been loaded with articles on Dean). There is evidence that Warners was approximately as astonished by the prolonged mourning, the flowers, the clubs, the biographies and all the rest of the details of an enshrinement of a boy-symbol as anybody else.

United Artists may rush in where Warners (having seen the fan mail) is more cautious. A plot is afoot for UA to produee a biography of James Dean. A possible title, among several under consideration, is "Young Man In A Hurry." Whatever the title, the real problem would be locating an aetor to impersonate Dean. Questions already being put at UA are: will the true believers be pleased or outraged?

Many theories have already been developed as to the meaning behind the case of James Dean. More will surely follow. Some will be sociological; some Freudian. Perhaps it is not far-fetched to add one further thought—a medium which can project such a personality and evoke such a stupefying response (however tinged with the macabre) is a pretty dynamic medium yet.

B&K Considers Local Deejay Show; Stagehands Demand 10% Wage Boost

Chicago, July 31.

Projected Chicago Theatre stageshow, to be helmed by local deejay Howard Miller Aug. 17, ran into union trouble here last week. The Balaban & Katz vaudfilmery scrapped its year-round vaude policy last December and the Miller package would be the first flesh show since then.

B&K's contract with the stagehands' union, Local 2 of the Chicago Theatrical Protective Union, an affiliate of the International Alliance of Theatrical & Stage Employees, expired last winter. The IATSE Chi local is asking a 10% increase in the stagehands' hourly rate of $2.26 and a two-year contract.

Negotiations all last week between B&K exec Nate Platt and union secretary Charles E. Howard failed to produce agreement, although it was reported that B&K had made a counter-offer of a 5% raise in the hourly rate. Platt said he thought the union was trying to drive a hard bargain on the assumption that B&K was committed firmly to a show, which Platt says is not the case. Both parties expressed belief that agreement would be reached some time this week.

M-G'S PRUNING PANEL SET UP FOR 6 MOS.

Hollywood, July 31.

An operations committee chaired by assistant studio manager William Smith has been set up at Metro to hold weekly meetings and implement the new economic program outlined by studio head Dore Schary a few week ago. Schary and executives E. J. Mannix, J. J. Cohn and Saul Rittenberg will work closely with the committee, members of which were chosen by various department heads.

Committee was appointed for a sixmonth tenure as part of the new drive to effect a streamlining of studio operations to provide greater economy and efficiency in the running of the studio.

Kenneth Grossman was named secretary of the committee. Other members are Gavin Burns, sound; Mal Caplan, wardrobe; Joe Finn, estimating; William Horning, art direction; Joe Luckie, property; George Murphy, public relations; Jack Rogers, editorial; Ed Stones, construction, and Charles Wolcott, music.

New Texas Film Studio Headed by Leo Carrillo

Dallas, July 31.

Leo Carrillo heads up a new studio to be built here by Film Corp. of America. Construction starts shortly, with the main sound stage to be (natch) the biggest in the world, measuring 350 by 250 feet.

Felix Taneo and Harry Preston of the Big "D" Film Laboratory are associated in project, in the brewing stage for several years and said to be backed by oil and cattle interests.

UFA Top-Staffed; Aim: 15 a Year (Probably in 1958)

Berlin, July 31.

The new UFA has now finally and officially been established here, although it is not likely that it will start production of any consequence until late in 1597 or even 1958. Eventually, the UFA will have a program of some 15 features, a good many of them produced under contract with independents.

As the UFA is now constituted, the board of supervision consists of Freiherr von Ostman (Deutsch Bank) as chairman; Erhard Schoenicke (AGFA) as deputy chairman, and Herbert Tischendorf of Herzog-Film, Munich. They will be joined by Gustav Kemna, a former UFA man, and two representatives to be elected by the UFA employees.

The UFA directors consist of Arno Haucke (UFA Theatre Co.), Helmut Meyer (Goettingen film studios), and Heinz Zimmermann, who was on the board of the old UFA.

Ostmann explained that there will be a fusion between the UFA and the theatres as soon as the UFI-law (covering liquidation and decentralization of the former Reich-owned property) is replaced. This move is expected soon.

There has been talk of plans for the UFA to build new studios in Berlin-Marienfeld (in the U. S. sector), but it's thought unlikely that the project will go through.

William Dover named Universal studio scenario story editor, replacing Raymond Crossett.

'JOAN' STAR PROWL KEYS EXHIB INTEREST

That the majority of exhibitors are as showmanship-minded as ever is believed reflected in the response to Otto Preminger's announced plan to seek out an unknown for the title role of his upcoming "Saint Joan." Even some persons associated with United Artists, financier-distributor of the picture, are frankly expressing amazement over the reaction.

On the basis of pledges already received, it looks like a prediction made by William J. Heineman, UA distribution v.p., will be borne out. He said 13,000 theatres will participate in the project to the extent of playing one-minute trailers telling of the talent quest and handling applications from "Joan" aspirants. A total of 7,000 such film clips have now been placed on order because of the exhib interest.

A source aligned with Preminger conceded that the production may die at the boxoffice—who can tell about a picture when it's still on the drafting boards?—but the excitement stirred by the star competitions should be, it was said, an eye-opener for entire industry.

The reason is obvious. Preminger and his associates have come up with something genuinely fresh, and many of the exhibs who may not even play "Joan" are taking to it. Star-building auditions predate Barnum, of course, but in this immediate case Preminger has stated publicly there's to be nothing phoney about it. He made a firm promise not to hire an established star; a newcomer is to get the job. And theatres are included in the promotion—the cost of printing those clips plus miscellaneous expenses will amount to $100,000 to $150.000.

Said the source from the Preminger camp: "Many of us in production and distribution frequently criticize theatremen for not publicizing our pictures. Maybe the reason has been that we haven't been giving them anything but the same, tired ideas to work with. Give them an angle like this Preminger gimmick and all the so-called lethargy disappears."

Execs at a rival UA company pondered the theatremen's reception of Preminger's "Joan" approach in broader terms. They arrived at the conclusion, tentative at least, that each picture must have its own selling angles to accent, that the institutional ideas have merit only when "selling" the industry to a law-making group or the press.

The way to win back that lost audience is to make each picture attractive to the public and not to try to sell them all collectively under one label or with one slogan or contest, observed the UA competitor.

Nace Adds Phoenix Duo; Drive-In and Art House

Phoenix, July 31.

Scottsdale's two film houses, the Round-Up Drive-In and the KiVa, an art theatre specializing in imports, have been bought by Harry L. Nace Theatres Inc., statewide chain operators.

Jack Van Leer, asst. manager of Nace operations, said year-old Round-Up will be enlaregd with 270 car stalls and 150-seat stadium for walk-ins, plus overall beautification.

Seller was Valley Theatres Corp., headed by Scottsdale's Mayor Malcolm White who built both houses. Ownership change will not affect policy at KiVa, leased to Louis Leithold, but Wes King, now operating a Nace theatre at Winslow, Ariz., will be the new manager of Round-Up.

So, Hooray! For Pix on Home Screens

Editor, VARIETY: Brooklyn, N.Y.

I realize that the exhibitor, like the rest of us, has mouths to feed, children to clothe, and payments to meet. I'm human, and thus I feel for any poor individual who sees his source of livelihood crumbling before his eyes.

However! When I read of the plight of the theatre owner today I find it difficult to remember he's a fellow human, and my reactions are those of a once frequent moviegoer. I remember many little incidents that spanned the three or four years during which I made the transition from a two or three times a week attendee to my present state, which is once a month, at most.

I remember, for instance, the innumerable times I made the long trek back up the middle aisle to tell and usher that the picture was out of focus. He usually then informed me that I was sitting too close, or that my eyesight was probably bad.

I remember the time my wife and I sat behind four youngsters who were raising all kinds of hell. I went back to see the manager, who suggested that we change our seats, as there were others available!

I remember the time I went to a Loew house to see "All the Brothers Were Valiant." The film in itself didn't intrigue me, but their ads stated "stereophonic sound," which I was quite interested in. They ran it strictly one-track, optical. Again, the manager. He informed me that the "track broke." Which explained one reel, left the others in question, and was an obvious lie at any rate.

I remember freezing in the winter, and sweltering in the summer. This was a direct result of being foolish enough to catch the last complete show, during the course of which heating and cooling units generally get turned off, as a conservation step, no doubt. They conserved fuel, but they lost me.

I also remember the way 3D was sacrificed on the alter of the almighty projectionist—who resisted any innovation that added to the job he wasn't doing right to begin with.

I remember flickering arcs, dirty washrooms, rude cashiers, ushers in ill-fitting, filthy uniforms. I remember the strain of trying to hear low dialog passages when the sound was too low, and prints in worse shape than any I've seen on television.

And speaking of television, when the Warner and the RKO and Columbia backlogs start hitting my screen in the fall, I remember a heck of a lot of pictures that, in general, were superior to todays product. They'll be interrupted by commercials, I'm sure, and they'll suffer from being cramped onto my 16-inch screen. But strangely enough, I have never seen a film on television that was out of focus for more than five or ten seconds before it was caught and corrected. I have never seen a film on television that was marred by a flickering arc. And turning up the volume control myself is a lot easier than walking back to the lobby, searching for an usher and being told for my troubles that, "Well, nobody else is complaining.

Respectfully,

Paul Caster

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your story this week about needing "new managers" is true, but with one added fact. Managers must be given a chance to use their own individuality and creative talents. The theatres cannot be run from a desk in New York. No one man is that good. All ads are designed in New York, yet each city might need a different approach.

In the great days we had Roxy, Sid Grauman, the Balaban boys, Bob O'Donnell, Ike Libson, and many other great picture showmen. Who do we have now?—name one.

The ads are the same, Theatre fronts are bought by the gross and are the same. Trailers more or less are the same, and so is the smell of popcorn. Any and all theatres with creative management are doing well. The Music Hall and the small so-called "art houses" are doing reasonably well. John F. Royal.

Drive-Ins' Own Insurance Rates; Not Same as (Hi-Fee) Parking Lots

Boston, July 31.

Ozoners in Mass. have been placed in a single category for employes stemming from a special study by the Massachusetts Workmen's Compensation Rate Assn. The move takes them out of the double-rating class and puts them in at $1.31 per $100 fee of payroll.

The double rate formerly was 87c per $100 for booth workers and $2.73 per $100 payroll for all other employes. The rate reduction is the result of three years of study of statistics by officials of the Independent Exhibitors Inc. of New England and combo efforts of National Allied and insurance agents who submitted findings to the Rate body.

IENE pointed out in its efforts that drive-ins should not be placed in the same category as parking lots where accident incident is higher. Ozoner ops will save 75c per $100 payroll, as more than 50% of the total payroll is outside the booth.

Watch Swedish 'Monika' As Twin Drive-In Test

Minneapolis, July 31.

A foreign language film, the Swedish "Monika," for the first time is gaining entry into a Twin Cities' drive-in theatre, the Lucky Twins, and the industry here is watching the experiment with interest.

This is a subsequent run, the picture having had its initial local showing at Suburban World where it ran for nine weeks more than a year ago.

Lucky Twins gave the picture an extra big newspaper advertising campaign, including advance teasers and elaborate display layouts.

Hollywood's Hobgoblin

[It's Mysterious 'New York']

Actor James Mason, who turned producer to make "Bigger Than Life" for 20th-Fox as an indie, is looking for the answer to a puzzle.

In simplest terms, he'd like to know who at the 20th home-office hides behind the pen-name "New York."

"Much of what happens at 20th Fox is dictated by 'New York,'" he complained. "Yon want to hire a director, or make some sort of move, and right away it's 'New York won't like it' or 'We'll ask New York.' I came to think of 'New York' as some sort of amorphous mass. I still wonder whether it's man or beast, or what."

Added Mason: "Even the heads of the studio won't make a move without 'New York'."

Radio-TV Does a Bangup News Job In Covering Andrea Doria Disaster

The Andrea Doria sea disaster off Nantucket triggered major news coverage by television and radio, with tv and radio nets, in addition to local stations, scrambling to keep abreast of events with bulletins and films.

Camera crews from the three major tv nets, as well as several independent tv outlets, were flown to the scene of the collision, where they filmed shots of the listing ship and the rescue operations for viewing. Tape recordings and beeper phones also were used by both radio and tv soon after the disaster, caused by the Stockholm colliding with the Italian luxury liner, 45 miles from Nantucket.

NBC reporter Maurey Robinson and NBC cameraman Jesse Sabin flew over the scene of the collision early Friday (27) morning, bringing back an eyewitness account and footage for NBC-TV's "Today" show.

Staff members of CBS Television's "Good Morning" with Will Rogers Jr., performed an all-night stint which resulted in Thursday's morning programming offering some solid coverage. Producer James Fleming, as soon as he heard of the disaster, got the show's entire newswriting and production staff to concentrate on the disaster.

Edwards' Show Tops Lux

CBS' newscaster Douglas Edwards on Thursday flew over the scene with a cameraman, supplying recorded broadcasts. Some of the film taken on the flight was utilized in the Charles Collingwood news show at 6:45. But the major portion of the footage went into a special 30 minute telecast at 10:30 Thursday night (with the regular "Quiz Kids" preempted) with Edwards doing the narrating. The show also featured interviews with the survivors brought in by the Ile de France. I was one of the real bangup shows on the tragedy and

CBS News 18.8; Lux 12.8

Reflecting the nationwide audience interest in the Andrea Doria sinking, a hastily-assembled CBS-TV spot news show which went into the Thursday night 10:30-11 slot (with "Quiz Kids" preempted) ran off with the Trendex laurels, knocking off NBC-TV's more recently Top 10-rated "Lux Video Theatre" to the tune of 18.7 to 12.8 and copping a 42.5 share of audience as against Lux's 30.3.

Helmed by Doug Edwards and effectively combining live remote, live studio and CBS Newsfilm, the half-hour stanza turned out to be one of tv's finest spot news reporting jobs.

Murrow's 'Africa Report' As BBC-TV 2-Parter

BBC will expose Edward R. Murrow's two-part "Report from Africa" on Aug. 21 and Sept. 10. Deal on the former CBS-TV film stanzas was made with the British outfit by CBS Television Film Sales.

CBS Film has sold other public service shows abroad, including the edited "Omnibus" pix known as "Under the Sun," some "See It Now" half-hours, "The Search" and some "You Are There" stanzas.

Mpls. Giveaway Craze Tapers Off

Minneapolis, July 31.

Twin Cities' radio stations' three-month old cash giveaway war, now in its dying gasps, put nearly $100,000 in chunks up to $1,500 into the pockets of local dialers lucky enough to be chosen at random and to be glued to their sets when they were singled out.

The fact that the sun is setting on the easy money days for some radio listeners probably was bad news for many setowners who always felt they had a chance, remote as it might be, to cut in on the dough gifts.

When Todd Storz acquired WDGY here and it became known that his operation would feature the shelling out of realm coin, many of the other stations hastened to get into the act, too. And there have been a WDGY "$105,000 contest" that resulted in only $500 being given away, a WCCO 10-day "$250,000 splurge" costing the station about $16,000 and a WTCN "$110,000 cashorama" involving about $10,000.

Storz was held responsible for starting the war in the first place and now his decision to quit the cash giveaways and the FCC's frowns on the promotions are believed to explain the termination.

At any rate, after Storz notified the FCC he'll cease the cash handouts the two remaining warriors, WCCO and WTCN, decided to do likewise. WCCO, in fact, already has "quietly" withdrawn.

This caused Storz to write the commission that he was unaware it looks with "displeasure" on such promotions and offering to discontinue all contests and giveaways "designed to attract audiences or influence listening" over his stations "as soon as possible" after the WQAM transfer was approved.

Thereupon the FCC approved the transfer and dropped plans to investigate.

KSTP was the first major station here to drop out of the cash giveaway shenanigans, its president, S. D. Hubbard, at the time denouncing them as having developed into a "circus" that "has gotten out of hand" and raising the question of whether the stations weren't neglecting their public service.

NBC-TV Daytime Biz Still Perks

NBC-TV daytime billings made several more strides in the last few days, as a fistful of accounts signed on for the sunlight cruise.

Pharmaco gave the network's 5 to 5:30 p.m. telefilmed "Comedy Time" its first bankroller. Company is buying a quarter-hour, once a week for 26 weeks alternating. It also inked on "It Could Be You" in the same type of arrangment. Biz starts Oct. 1.

Brown & Williamson has purchased the last remaining quarter-hour available for early fall on "Queen For a Day," and sponsorship starts Oct. 2, the network disclosed. Buy calls for 10 programs over a 20-week period. Perkins Products division of General Foods has bought 13 alternate Thursday quarter-hours of the same show. It also has given NBC similar new biz on Thursdays via the 12:30 p.m. "It Could Be You."

Bon Ami will take over four spots on "Matinee Theatre," 13 on "Today," and four on "Home," beginning in Sept.. Winding up the week's daytime buying was Evinrude, which took four "Today" participations. (It also bought four spots in "Tonight" for a four-day merchandising push in early Oct.)

Chi WLS In Parttime Mutual Affiliation

Chicago, July 31.

Although not formalized by a regular affiliation contract, WLS has entered into sort of an open-end agreement with Mutual to carry some of the latter's offerings. It was anticipated Mutual would make an arrangement with the 50,000 watter as a parttime Windy City outlet with the defection of WGN, its longtime affil, which at the end of August goes it alone as an indie.

Meanwhile, talks are still going on between WLS and ABC on a renewal of that affiliation pact. It's expected the web and the radio station, which, incidentally is jointly owned by ABC and the Prairie Farmer publishing interests, will come to terms on a new ticket.

The Mutual hookup is on an individual program basis, with WLS taking only those MBS shows that don't conflict with its own local fare or the ABC airers.

Red Hot Rountree Politico Package Scares Off Webs

Martha Rountree finds herself in a dilemma.

She's got one of the real hot tv packages for the fall—the period spanning the August political conventions and the November elections—but there isn't a network that wants to touch it.

What Miss Rountree is offering up, as a half-hour tv package, is a weekly debate between the two Vice-Presidential nominees, a show calculated to make morning-after headlines in the dailies. She's even got a sponsor. On top of that Miss Rountree says she has the blessings of Leonard Hall, the GOP national chairman, and Paul Butler, his Democratic opposite member.

But the networks are afraid of it. For the simple reason that there are six lesser parties that will have access to equal time privileges, under prevailing FCC regulations, and unless they provide free time for all parties concerned they might run into litigation and all sorts of trouble.

Ed & Pegeen Reunited, Hectic Sked Finds 'Em All Over WRCA Dials

The realignment of the WRCA, New York, schedules this week also marks the official return of Ed Fitzgerald to commercial AM in the resumption of the pioneer Mr. & Mrs. radio turn. Because of illness, he has been inactive for a year, only recently resuming the mike on wife Pegeen Fitzgerald's daytime AMer.

Incidentally, the Fitzgerald's have perhaps the most grueling radio and tv grind in local industry annals, at least until Aug. 16 when they relinquish the 10:30 p.m. until 12:30 a.m. nightly schedule from the Starlight Roof on the Waldorf-Astoria to Tex and Jinx McCrary, for whom they are substituting while the latter Mr. & Mrs. team is vacationing in the British West Indies. Along with the midnight two-hour session, Pegeen Fitzgerald has an 8:55 and 9:55 a.m. slot on WRCA-TV, doing a special color "Shopwindow" spiel as part of the "Home" show. Her "Strictly Pegeen" 30 minutes at 1:30 p.m. is now the 2:30 p.m. slot, starting Monday (30) with her husband. They also do the 6:30-6:40 p.m. spot for The McCrarys, over WRCA, N. Y., which however is taped, done directly after they complete their midday show live. This, too, will be relinquished when Tex & Jinx return from their holiday.

The Fitzgeralds pioneered the Mr. & Mrs. format some 15 years ago on Mutual and for 12 years they were with ABC, both AM and tv, until last year when Pegeen Fitzgerald solo shifted to NBC. A series of operations kept her husband inactive for most of the ensuing year.

Sullivan's Vox Pop on Ingrid

Ed Sullivan went to the unprecedented length Sunday (29) of using his show on CBS-TV as a platform to sound out the public on how it feels about his having Ingrid Bergman appear live on his stanza in the fall. Sullivan freely acknowledged Miss Bergman as a "controversial" figure but thought the public's "decision" via the letters route might determine whether she should be showcased on his Sunday nighter.

The question first came up two weeks ago when the "booking" received wide attention in the press. The Swedish-born actress, now in London making "Anastasia" for 20th-Fox, apparently is not aware of a date with Sullivan. The latter said his assurances for Miss Bergman's appearance came from the film studio. Sullivan saw the actress in London and quoted her as saying that 20th failed to clear an acceptance with her.

Sullivan treated of the matter next day (30) on his N.Y., Daily News column as follows:

"Helen Hayes has agreed to do a live scene on tv with Ingrid Bergman in late September if Ingrid decided to fly over between the finale of the film 'Anastasia,' and her October opening in 'Tea and Sympathy' on a Paris stage. The Swedish star has not committed herself to the tv idea, largely, I think, because she doesn't know how the American audience will react to her, and how great a controversy might ensue." Then he took the matter to the newspaper public with: "Those for her argue that she's suffered for seven years; point out that other movie stars have been pardoned for equally serious moral infractions. Those against her flare up angrily. What do you think?"

Mighty 'Margie'

Two former network telefilms now in rerun via WCBS-TV outshone all other teleshows in N. Y., network or local (on seven stations), in the latest ARB ratings for the period from 6:45 a.m. until 6 p.m.

"My Little Margie," stripped at 9 a.m. daily on the CBS-TV flag, pulled down an average of 8.3 for the latest July report. "Amos and Andy," which is booked the same way at 9:30, got the next highest, with a 7.2 average. Garry Moore, who is a CBS network performer, got 4.4 on the Monday-Friday stint that follows at 10.

Miami's Second VHF Makes Bow

Miami Beach, July 31.

The greater Miami area got its second VHF station Sunday (29) when WCKT began telecasting a full schedule of programs, local and network, as a basic affiliate of NBC. There was little hoopla attached to the occasion, with the ceremonies hailing the entry of the outlet confined to a half-hour program, "Outlook," in which Niles Trammell, former prexy of NBC, now president of WCKT, outlined programming plans which will feature a heavy lineup of the network's shows with local shows temporarily to be held to a minimum.

Trammell, who is associated with the Knight (Miami Herald) and Cox (Miami News) interests in the new venture, left the big buildup to the dailies, which ran special sections in their Sunday editions hailing the end of greater Miami as a one-station area for VHF; WTVJ (CBS) owned by Wometco Theatres has been the loner since 1949, only competition coming from two UHF stations—WGBS, owned by the Storer chain (which will become an independent after longtime beaming NBC programs to this area) and WITV which carries ABC emanations. Channel 2 has long been assigned for educational tv and is run by a non-profit organization Community Television Foundation under the call letter WTHS. Funds for its operation come from the Wolfson-Meyer (Wometco owners) Foundation and a grant from the Ford Foundation. The station telecasts for two hours nightly Monday through Friday and is off the air for the summer.

JONATHAN WINTERS SERIES FOR TUMS

Jonathan Winters, who has been jumping from one NBC-TV guest stint to another for quite sometime, is getting his own network show. The comedian is taking over as emcee of an NBC Tuesday quarter-hour on Oct. 9, with Tums picking up half of the bill.

Word is he'll be moving into Dinah Shore's old 7:30-7:45 p.m. slot. The program will be a once-weekly variety offering. Tums is taking alternate weeks. Other half of the show has not been sold.

Budweiser Will Pour Bulk of TV Coin Into Radio

A major bankroller is taking its allegiance away from tv and giving it to radio. Budweiser is going to spend $1,000,000 in spot radio during the last quarter of 1956 and only $250,000 in spot tv, and for the time it appears as though that tv spot coin is going to be the brewery's only video expenditure.

Budweiser change of heart constitutes a big rap for the sight-and-sound medium. Video coin for the last four months is understood to be going into a limited 23-market spot buy. Radio cities will be far more.

Budweiser sponsored "Damon Runyon Theatre" on CBS-TV last season at a cost for time and talent in excess of $2,000,000, but so far it hasn't bought a 1956-57 network teleshow.

Busch's Bavarian beer, a regional brand controlled by the same company that owns Bud, Anheiser-Busch, is spending heavily in spot tv at present.

Another blow to tv is the retrenchment of Monsanto Chemical. Though it has always been considered a hard account to sell on the merits of video, it did own a quarter of ABC-TV's "Warner Brothers Presents" last season. Next fall, however, Monsanto is reportedly spending all its ad dough in newspapers, with nothing for video.

'Super Circus' To Berth In Miami

"Super Circus" will definitely return to ABC-TV in the fall, and it will come regularly from Miami instead of N.Y. American Character Doll is reported to be the hour-long Sabbath juve program's first fall underwriter.

Show, returning this fall to its 5 to 6 p.m. hole, belonged to Roto Broil, Chucky chocolates and Hartz Mountain Products a good part of last season. Reason for carrying the show to Miami is to get hold of the reportedly large circus population down there and to facilitate more outdoor production numbers. Except for a few shows last spring from Miami, "SC" emanated from ABC-TV's N.Y. studios.

Sterling Buys 'Romance'

"Modern Romances," the NBC-TV 4:45 to 5 p.m. cross-the-board soapopera, has picked up Sterling Drug as a sponsor. Underwriter starts on Friday (3). It has inked for a full 15-minutes on Wednesdays and Fridays.

Monday, Tuesday and Thursday are still open to takers on "MR." The purchase, through Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, constitutes the drug company's first association with daytime network television. It has "The Vise" Friday nights on ABC-TV.

NBC-TV'S $30,000,000 JUGGLE

TV Networks' Global Aspirations

The tv networks are looking forward to the day when linking of countries will become a coaxial reality and they will have owned-and-operated possessions outside the U. S. It's understood that preliminary discussions have already taken place in anticipation of the day when the major networks will have an ownership stake on both ends of the international co-ax cable.

Thus far, of course, the networks' o&o domain, either in radio or tv, has been restricted to this country (although only recently RKO Teleradio chieftain Tom O'Neil acquired partial ownership of a Windsor, Ont., tv station which subsequently became a cause celebre within the Canadian Parliament.) As far as is known there are no FCC tabus on out-of-country ownership aspirations on the part of networks. It's simply a case of whether the other countries would countenance the move-in of U. S. television interests.

3 Out of Every 4 U.S. Households Have TV; 1,694,000 2-Set Homes

Advertising Research Foundation counted 37,277,000 television receivers in U. S. households during Feb.-March, 1956. There were 35,495,000 homes with tv, 1,694,000 of them having more than one set.

Total meant that three out of every four households, according to ARF, had tv, as compared to two out of three in June 1955. Over 73% of all 48,785,000 U. S. homes had tv in the Feb.-March tally. This is an increase of over 3,000,000 tv homes in less than a year.

In the recently released ARF count, 4.8% of all tv homes had two or more sets, against 3.5% for June 1955. That same June there were only 33,000,000 sets in use, over 4,000,000 less than Feb.-March 1956.

This year there was a continued higher penetration of tv households inside "standard metropolitan areas" than outside. In urban locals, about 82% of all homes had one or more tv sets, whereas the proportion in the stix was about 59%. However, the increase in video's penetration since June, 1955, was greater outside the big cities than inside. Outland penetration increased roughly 9%, but met districts went up just 3%.

Following is a three-way breakdown. In 1956, urban households, having about a 78% proportion of tv sets, continued with the highest penetration as opposed to rural, nonfarm homes with 68% and rural farm homes with 53%. Increase in tv penetration since a year ago June was in reverse order, nevertheless, as rural nonfarm areas increased 10%, urban 7% and farm homes 4%.

Larger households, ARF found, are "more likely to have tv sets than smaller ones." Proportion with sets rose with the size of the family from about 40% for one-person households to about 85% and 83%, respectively, for four-person and five-person homes. It dropped to 75% for six or more people per family.

Geographically, the northeast has 82% penetration; the north central U. S. had 79%, whereas the west had 66% and the south 62%. As it worked out the northeast and north central parts of the country had more penetration in tv than the nation as a whole.

Davis' All-Sepia Spec

Sammy Davis Jr. has made a proposal to NBC-TV that it stage a 90-minute spec with all-Negro talent. Davis would star in the presentation. However, he is asking that it be done not as a one-shot but as an annual event.

Behind the Davis spec pitch is a bid for the advancement of Negro talent in tv. The network is taking it under advisement.

Standard Brands Buys $1,500,000 CBS-AM Soaps

The $1,500,000 purchase of CBS Radio daytime soaps several weeks ago by Colgate is having a snowball effect on the network's daytime biz. Standard Brands, which has been out of web radio since 1944, has matched the Colgate buy in terms of time and coin. With the new account, CBS has written $10,000,000 gross since Jan. 1. Boiled down to net revenue for time and talent, it's somewhere about $7,000,000, less agency commission.

Standard Brands, in a time when a $1,500,000 gross is bigtime in radio, inked for 10 seven-and-a-half minute segs weekly in three CBS soap opera strips, with deal commencing Monday (6), followed by the start of Colgate in early September. Network will only get the full $1,500,000 if the contract runs for a year. As it is SB has taken 13-weeks firm.

New biz brings the web's five-and-a-half hour weekday sked to 65% of SRO, but CBS claims that it has at least one other radio bankroller contemplating a large buy that will jack the time-filled status considerably if it goes through. Even at 65%, it's been at least two years since CBS Radio has been in this healthy condition.

SB, via Ted Bates, will sponsor parts of "Backstage Wife," "The Second Mrs. Burton" and "Our Gal Sunday," which have 10 of 30 collective seven-and-a-half minute units still unsold.

Other recent daytime sales at CBS Radio include the buyup of the Pat Buttram afternoon quarter-hour strip by Wrigley. As for Arthur Godrey, who does a daily hour-and-a-half stint, he's 95% sold for September.

Winchell To Tour 'Tredex Cities'

Walter Winchell, who has a half-hour Friday night vaudeo show upcoming on NBC-TV this fall, will play the "Trendex City Circuit" prior to the program's bow. It's another in the continuing cycle of in-person visitations set by the tv network's exploitation chief, Al Rylander, to stimulate interest on a local level in shows and personalities on the network roster.

Actually Winchell will visit 17 cities in all for interviews, cooperating on NBC affiliation station promotion, etc, and in each instance he'll tie in with the local Damon Runyon Fund via his own personal contributions. Tour will wind up in Hollywood where WW, immediately prior to his premiere, will guest on a flock of major network showcases.

Boyer's CBS-TV Pact

Hollywood, July 31.

Deal is being finalized under which CBS-TV would sign Charles Boyer to an exclusive pact. It's likely his first appearance will be on the Ed Sullivan show in October.

"Playhouse 90" script is being written for him and there are also plans to star him in a "Ford Star Jubilee" spec.

RECORD-BREAKING PROGRAM SHUFFLE

By GEORGE ROSEN

In perhaps the biggest single shift of programs and advertisers in tv annals, representing in the aggregate $30,000,000 in billings, NBC-TV this week finalized its revamped schedule for the new season. The new plan, which drastically alters the network roster four nights of the week, brings to full-blown maturity the web's concept of programming on a three-weeks-out-of-four basis, which now encompasses five nights of the week, with likelihood that the other two nights, Wednesday and Thursday, will also be incorporated into the three-out-of-four scheme on a regular basis.

The new lineup, the result of four weeks of shuttling between N. Y. and a variety of cities where clients are headquartered on the part of the Sarnoff-Weaver-McAvity high command, highlights the following program maneuvers:

"People Are Funny" vacates its Tuesday night 10:30 unsponsored berth and shifts to Saturday night at 7:30, presently occupied by "Big Surprise" Toni has been persuaded to switch from the Perry Como sponsorship to take on "Funny." In place of Toni, RCA will move into the Como picture. (RCA was committed to the projected Friday night spec series, but these are being abandoned in place of major one-hour one-a-month entries.)

"Big Surprise" moves to Tuesday night at 8 under its present Purex-Speidel sponsorship. In to Tuesday at 8:30 goes the new Jack Webb entry, "Noah's Ark," to be sponsored by Liggett & Myers. (A brand-new show goes into Tuesday night 10:30 and NBC claims it has a client which it's keeping under wraps for the present.)

Chevrolet, which was committed to 20 Tuesday 8 to 9 shows for the new season (10 Dinah Shore and 10 Bob Hope entries) will divide them up between Friday 9 to 10 and Sunday 9 to 10 (with 10 shows going into each night). To effect the Chevy switch, NBC negotiated a cutback on the part of Alcoa and Goodyear, who will now do 40 shows a season instead of 52. The Dinah-Hope combo plus two Hallmark presentations will account for the other 12. (In addition, Hallmark will be represented in the 7:30 to 9 Sunday night spec roster with four 90-minute attractions plus one Wednesday night spec which will preempt "Kraft Television Theatre."

Ray Bolger, who was also scheduled to occupy the Tuesday 8 to 9 segments (NBC has a 16-show contract which it has been unable to sell), will do some of them on a one-week-out-of-four basis in the Tuesday period, with likelihood that Bolger will also fit into a one-out-of-four Wednesday slotting, probably in the Kraft 9 to 10 time. This, however, is predicted on possible decision of NBC to go ahead with Bolger and not buy out his contract, as has been rumored.

Thus the three-out-of-four, five-night spread entails Friday (Dinah-Hope); Saturday (Oldsmobile specs); Sunday (the 7:30 to 9 specs and the Dinah-Hope-Alcoa-Goodyear rotaters); Monday ("Producers' Showcase") and Tuesday (Bolger rotaters).

Anything Goes

There's one interesting facet that's been overlooked in the deal negotiated by NBC-California International (ex-Kagran Prod.) whereby the NBC subsid operation will have a 50% financing stake in the new Ethel Merman musical legiter.

New general manager of Cal. Int. is Bob Levitt—otherwise the father of Miss Merman's child by a previous marriage. (She's now married to Bob Six of Continental Airlines.)

NBC Radio's 'Coming Events' May Include New Management Team

NBC Radio's dumping of "Weekend" and inauguration of its cross-the-board "Bandstand" format, which preemed this week, is apparently only the beginning of a general overhauling of the operation which, from all accounts, will not only involve programming but management as well.

It's understood that a new management team will go in shortly to replace the present one, with the recommendations stemming from the Booz, Allen & Hamilton survey to be a key factor in the ultimate decision. One key network affiliate operator admitted getting assurance that within three months NBC Radio would be helmed by a new chieftain.

Present operational head is Charles Ayres, who was brought over from ABC last year. Whether the "new order" would result in his exiting or a change in administrative status isn't known.

It's generally been recognized that, over and above the displacement of "Weekend," something drastic would have to be accomplished to put NBC Radio back on a healthy footing. (Last year's $2,000,000 in losses will be considerably higher this year, it's reported.) Particularly in view of the Westinghouse four-station defection, which affects such vital markets as Boston, Cleveland and Pittsburgh, it's considered a foregone conclusion that Gen. David Sarnoff, having dedicated himself to a permanent stake in the radio network sweepstakes, will pull out all the stops if necessary to re-

Berle's Half-Hr. Series

Milton Berle and Sheldon Reynolds are huddling on a new comedy adventure series for tv. It will be a half-hour format, some to be lensed in color, and will be made on location in various parts of the globe. Series has been in discussion stage for some time with finalization reported imminent.

Series will be written, directed and produced by Reynolds, who handled the same chores for his "Foreign Intrigue" and "Sherlock Holmes" tv series.

Program will bring about a reunion of Berle and Reynolds. Latter started as a comedy writer years ago on the Berle staff.

Mary Martin Set By Hallmark For 'Born Yesterday'

Mary Martin has been signed by Hallmark Cards to appear in "Born Yesterday." It will be the Oct. 28 Sunday kickoff show in the "Hall of Fame" series of six stanzas on NBC-TV next season. Garson Kanin will adapt his Broadway play and film for television. It will be his production, including the direction, although George Schaefer is overall producer of the series and Mildred Freed Alberg the exec producer. Paul Douglas is being dickered to re-create his legit and Hollywood role (both done originally with Judy Holliday).

Of the six "Fame" packages, three will be at 7:30 to 9 p.m. (including "Born Yesterday"), two from 9 to 10:30 and an April show on a Wednesday, preempting "Kraft TV Theatre."

MBS-to-NBC

Interesting to note is that NBC Radio, in mending its affiliation fences as result of the four-station Westinghouse defection, has latched to on to Mutual outlets in two of the cities.

New NBC affiliate in Cleveland will be WHK, which has been historically Mutual from way back and has long occupied an MBS directorate seat. Station is owned by the Cleveland Plain Dealer & News.

Similarly in Fort Wayne, NBC has latched on to KJG, another Mutual affiliate. What the network will do in Boston and Pittsburgh, where Westinghouse has also bowed out, is still to be resolved.

Rowan & Martin Buildup Vice Martin & Lewis; NBC Guest Slots Set

Hollywood, July 31.

Comedy team of Dan Rowan and Dick Martin, which has been rising steadily on the nitery circuit for the last two years, apparently is all set to step into at least two spots vacated by the split-up of Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis.

NBC has signed Rowan and Martin for a series of eight guest-spots next season as to a buildup for their own show. Simultaneously, a deal is in the works at Paramount for the team to sign a term contract, probably beginning with the film "Sad Sack."

Rowan & Martin open at the Cocoanut Grove here Sept. 5 with Nat "King" Cole and then go to the Chez Paree, Chicago, Oct. 11 with Patti Page and from there to the Copacabana, New York, Nov. 1, again with Cole. They first worked with Cole on the latter's Australian tour in January 1955.

KOHLER BUYS MBS POLITICO COVERAGE

Mutual's coverage of the Democratic and Republican national conventions will be sponsored by Kohler Co., of Kohler, Wisc., manufacturers of household and industrial plumbing fixtures and other products.

The deal, via Roche, Williams and Cleary, of Chicago, also calls for Kohler sponsorship of MBS election returns broadcasts.

TV a Year Round Job? Here's Proof

The almost frantic activity on writer assignments off the Ashley-Steiner agenting beltline within the past couple of weeks suggests that tv, far from being a "sometime thing," is now on a 52-week merry-go-round, with July-August activity paced to the same hectic status as fall and winter.

Deals negotiated for clients span a wide range, including: Sale of Ann Pinchot's original teleplay, "Man In Exile," to "Studio One Summer Theatre"; sales to same show of "A Song With Orange In It," by S. Lee Pogostin, with an adaptation of "Boy On His Conscience" also assigned to Pogostin. Also sold to the same CBS-TV drama stanza is Jay Glanzrock's first teleplay, "Something Ventured."

Three plays have been sold to "Matinee Theatre" on NBC-TV; Tony Spinner's original teleplay, "The Ivy Curtain"; "The Old Payola," by Abby Mann and Jack Wilson, and "Horsepower," by Mona Kent and Alfred Ryder.

A CBS-TV "Playhouse 90" assignment goes to Bill Durkee, who is

Chi Auto Dealer Jim Moran Backs Faith in TV With Bundle of Coin

Chicago, July 31.

The notion that television can't sell cars gets a fast rebuttal from Windy City auto dealer Jim Moran who last March switched from a Hudson to a Ford franchise and is now billed as the biggest Ford retailer in the country. And as such he also ranks virtually on top as the biggest single local spender on Chi tv with upwards of $700,000 earmarked for video this year.

One of the pioneer users of tv dating back to '48 when he broke in as a sponsor of a wrestling show, Moran estimates he has spent over $4,000,000 in the medium the past eight years. Until he took over the Ford dealership last spring, he confined his ad money exclusively to video but currently he's spending between 20 and 25% of his annual budget in newspapers as supplementary exposure.

Moran was one of the first to hit pay dirt via the feature film route. His WGN-TV "Courtesy Theatre" has been a Sunday night at 10 fixture since '49 and two weeks back he launched a new Thursday night feature on the same station. He has used firstrun product solely since '52, his most recent purchase being the TNT package distributed by National Telefilms Assocs. Bulk of his firstrun supply is worked out with WGN-TV whereby he takes over the initial showing of the various bundles bought by the station.

Until last May, Moran both sponsored and emceed a 60-minute Friday night variety show on WBKB which was costing him over $5,000 weekly for time and talent. The "Courtesy Hour" bowed in '50 and down through the years ranked as one of the most expensive live offerings on the local scene. But the old cost-per-thousand squeeze eventually took hold and the auto merchant dumped the live show in favor of two back-to-back telepix.

Although it's too early to draw any conclusion, Moran and the Malcolm-Howard ad agency are closely watching the comparative ratings of the Friday night WBKB vidpix—MCA-TV's "Federal Men" and Ziv's "Mr. District Attorney"—and the more costly feature films on WGN-TV.

Moran has always fronted his own shows to the extent he's as well-known on the Chi screens as the fulltime toilers in the local tele vineyard. And he isn't likely to pinkslip himself as his own commercial gabber. After all, he says he has sold 3,000 Fords since he took over the dealership five months ago.

Philco Coin Again Rides on Pageant

Philco will be sponsoring ABC-TV's coverage of the Miss America pageant in Atlantic City for the third consecutive year. Details have not been set, but Fred Heider will produce the one-shot on Sept. 8 from 10:30 to midnight.

Hutchins Agency, which pacted the show, has also hired the Philco pitchman staff for the radio-tv coverage of the two political conventions on the same network. On radio, Bob Elliott and Ray Goulding will do the manufacturer's bidding, and for tv Frank and Grace Albertson, 17-year-old Ray Richards and 15-year-old Doris Van Treek will stand in.

KMOX SERIES TO BE TAPED IN RED CHINA

St. Louis, July 31.

An exclusive news-making series will be launched in September by KMOX, the local CBS outlet with Dr. Thomas Dooley, a native and author of "Deliver Us From Evil" making tape recordings that will be flown to St. Louis. He will head a four-man, independent medical-diplomatic mission sponsored by the International Rescue Commission into remote Red China villages.

The voices of the inhabitants, the customs of life, etc. will be recorded and all of which is aimed to discount Red propaganda against Americana.

Dodson Helms WKY

Oklahoma City, July 31.

Appointment of Eugene B. Dodson as acting manager of WKY and WKY-TV was announced by P. A. Sugg, exec v.p. of WKY Radiophone Co.

Sugg last week assumed management of WTVT television station in Tampa, Fla., but will continue general supervision of WKY and WKY-TV in Oklahoma City as well as the company's other properties, which includes WSFA and WSFA-TV, Montgomery, Ala.

Lanvin Coin For O&O Spread On 'Citizens Union'

WRCA-TV's Sunday sustainer "Citizens Union Searchlight" has been sold to Lanvin perfumery on NBC-TV's six o&o stations on the two Sundays prior to the Chicago and Frisco conventions. It is the first time that the three-year-old local pubserver has had a sponsor and it is believed the first time that a sponsor has bought a live program on more than one of the o&o's at a time.

"Citizens Union" has always been a local N. Y. show on WRCA, but on Aug. 12 the live half-hour moves to Chicago for the Democratic Convention and on Aug. 19 it will be in Frisco. Instead of s jcking to personalities of local note during the two-week stint, it is out to line up national figures to sit in opposite the regular "CU" panel. Because Citizens Union is a local civic organization, WRCA, which will produce, is temporarily changing the name to "Convention Searchlight." Part CU plays in the show will be expained in the program proper.

NBC o&o's carrying the two-week stanza will be KRCA-TV, L. A.; WNBQ, Chi; WBUF, Buffalo, and WRCV, Philly, and two more. Stanza, which features Ben Grauer as emcee, and Gabe Pressman and Milton Bergerman (CU chairman) as panelists, will also be repeated on the o&o radio stations.

Bill Berns, WRCA-TV-and-radio special events director, will supervise the stanza in both convention cities. Pressman, who is a reporter for the N. Y. network keys, will also be doing tapes for WRCA radio shows, "Pulse" in the ayem and Tex & Jinx late nighter. Material will also be integrated into WRCA-TV news shows.

Glucksman Coast-Bound After 'A.C. Holiday' Spec Keyed to Miss Universe

Ernest D. Glucksman, who has been in New York since producing the Martin & Lewis telethon for muscular dystrophy three weeks ago, returns to his Hollywood base with NBC after he produces and stages "Atlantic City Holiday," the Aug. 12 spectacular. It is keyed to the new Miss Universe (Carol Morris)—incidentally the first Yank beaut to cop the Long Beach, Calif., prize—getting the keys to the city in Atlantic City.

It will originate from the Colonial Theatre, N. Y. NBC-TV color-playhouse. Via a remote pickup from the Steel Pier, A. C., the Diving Horse will be telecast for the first time, along with the Comedy Clowns and the high-wire Dreschler Family working over the Atlantic Ocean terminus of the A. C. landmark, the Steel Pier.

Jack Carter will emcee the show comprising Polly Bergen, Bill Haley's Comets, Pat Boone, Jayne Mansfield, Jonathan Winters, Rocky Graziano and Harry Sosnik's orchestra, with maestro Sosnik also doing the arranging, Tony Charmoli staging the dances; sketches by George Foster and Mort Green; Frank Bunetta staging the Colonial Theatre portion and Gary Simpson directing the A. C. remote.

Multiple Sclerosis Telethon Nets 115G

Los Angeles, July 31.

The 10-hour multiple sclerosis telethon on KNXT Sunday (29) garnered $115,734 in cash and pledges, topping the $100,000 goal set.

Jack Webb and Ben Alexander emceed, and among those appearing were Milton Berle, Eddie Cantor, Gregory Peck, George Gobel, Bob Hope, George Burns, Roy Rogers, Gale Storm, Hugh O'Brien, Bob Crosby and Peggy Lee.

Fedderson Stays With Contestant Despite Embezzlement Rap

Hollywood, July 31.

A competitor on CBS-TV's "Do You Trust Your Wife" will be seen on Aug. 7 telecast of the show, despite that the FBI reportedly had a confession that he embezzled $8,000 from Bank of America. Don Fedderson, owner-producer of the show, said he intends to show the program as filmed rather than take $35,000 loss as entire installment would have to be scrapped due to the show's format which requires unbroken continuity.

Fedderson said he plans to go ahead with the show as filmed at NBC before a live audience of 350, contending that he shouldn't be penalized because the contestant, Jean Antoine Roady, assertedly stole $8,000 from international branch of Bank of America, the latter which is depository for the show's funds. Paired with Roady was his wife, the former Jackie Beer, onetime runnerup as Miss Universe.

Both "Trust Your Wife" sponsors, Frigidaire and L & M cigarets, go along with Fedderson that the disputed show should be telecast. CBS, so far, is non-committal.

"The show was done in good faith and like all contestants, Roady was thoroughly investigated," said Fedderson. "I think the viewers will understand my position. Roady had only three or four lines and I don't think we should scrap the whole program, which would have to be done, just because the contestant, who refused to trust his wife on the big question, violated his trust with the Bank of America.

Program with the Roadys was filmed last June 1 and was seven weeks ahead to permit Edgar Bergen, show's emcee with his dummies, to take an eight-week vacation in Europe.

LUCKIES EYES SPOT MARKET FOR 1ST TIME

Lucky Strike is eyeing the tv national spot market for the first time in its history. The American Tobacco brand is running a test spot campaign in half a dozen markets.

Luckies have been repped on tv only through the networks. If the spot campaign becomes an extensive part of the cig video expenditure, it will compliment NBC-TV's "Lucky Strike Hit Parade" on alternate Saturdays and the CBS-TV Sunday 7:30 spot, in which Jack Benny and "Private Secretary" alternate.

In addition to this new and large potential, tv spot this week got a big boost from the world's largest processor of cotton and cotton oil products. Anderson, Clayton & Co. (Dallas) is earmarking 65% of the annual advertising budget to tv. First product to get the tele treatment is the company's Mrs. Tucker's brand shortenings, which will be repped in a Southwest-Midwest tv sked covering 32 markets.

WBUF-TV Goes All-NBC

Buffalo, July 31.

WBUF-TV will become NBC's exclusive local outlet next month, following its removal to its new studio building. By August 15 full NBC service will be carried by the station which now telecasts a substantial number of NBC programs over Channel 17.

Station's new television center will cost more than $1,000,000 with peak output being stepped up from 148,000 to 1,000,000 watts. New 740 foot tower, highest in the city, is already under construction.

Can 'Lone Ranger' Keep It Clean?

General Mills demanded and ostensibly got an upgrading of the "Lone Ranger" telefilms in order to capture a greater share of the adult viewership. Alternate sponsor of the show on both CBS-TV and ABC-TV wants the half-hour juve veteran to go after those high "Gunsmoke"-"Wyatt Earp" ratings.

But the question now arises as to how serious Gen. Mills was in making the demand of Jack Wrather's Lone Ranger Inc. productions. The man astride the white horse is going to keep his clean boots and his mask, from all reports. A source close to the picture says it's hard to get too adult in performance or story line if the hero doesn't shoot to kill or can't get dirty once in awhile. "Can you picture the L.R. in dirty chaps and a busted sombrero and without a mask?" he asked. "What will the kids think?"

There has been upgrading insofar as production costs go, it's understood, with Wrather, who controls the show completely in the final analysis, pouring more coin into location shooting and the like. Incidentally, ABC is still negotiating for an alternate GM bankroller Thursdays at 7:30. Nestle has half of the CBS noontime exposure on Saturday.

'Bewildered Viewer' Has a Gripe

Laments Conspicuous Absence of Negro Talent On Major Network Programming

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I am exceedingly perplexed and I can get no satisfactory answer to my question from any other source, so I am writing to you. I am nobody, just a housewife, but I watch a great deal of television and my brother-in-law is in the tv advertistising agency business, so I feel pretty qualified to raise a hue and cry about what I see—and don't see—on the networks. Perhaps I do not know all there is to know about the inner workings of the industry, so maybe you could tell me if there is within that industry a conscious ban against the use of Negro actors? My brother-in-law says there is not, that the casting people in his particular agency use Negro actors whenever and wherever they can. But the fact remains that I see very few on tv, and I often see none at all being intelligently used on shows in situations where they logically belong. (For instance, I recently saw a Robert Montgomery program about a school situation, starring Walter Slezak, and there were no Negro teachers and not one Negro student in the picture. The school was supposed to be located in the north—at least no Southern accents were apparent—and it was a public school to boot! Why then, no Negro people? I don't ment to pick on the Montgomery show, but to make matters worse, the show the following week also dealt with a school situation and the same thing was true then. For years I have watched "The Big Story," which is a darned good program—but I have yet to see the story of a Negro reporter dramatized. Why not? I could go on and on, listing practically every major dramatic show and cite instances of this . . . what shall I call it, prejudice or stupidity?

It saddens and depresses and be-

Chemistrand TV Coin

"High Finance," the recently installed Saturday nighter on CBS-TV, will get another bankroller for four entries on a once-a-month basis beginning in September. Mennen Co., regular sponsor of the Dennis James-emceed quizzer, has given the nod to the Chemistrand Corp. (Acrilan Blankets) to take over the plugs on Sept. 22, Oct. 20, Nov. 17 and Dec. 8.

Takes a Cake Mix Study to Solve TV Sponsor Problem

ACB-TV is taking giant steps in an effort to bring "Mickey Mouse Club" from 11 segs sold a week ago to 20 a week (which is SRO for the daily hour-long stanza). The network paid well into the five figures for an intensive study, the end results of which are not yet fully analyzed, to demonstrate the effectiveness of juve video in pushing the sale of adult consumer items.

It's the adult bankrollers AC is looking to for the remaining "MMC" sales.

Advertest, using 150 interviewers, covered over 3,000 families in six major multi-station markets: Boston, Philly, Detroit, K. C., Dallas-Ft. Worth and Frisco. Thirteen

ABC-TV's 'Me, Too' On Midget Camera Making Bow at Political Meets

The "battle of the minicams," the live camera miniatures developed for network use at the upcoming political conventions, has taken on an added warlike turn. ABC-TV joins NBC's four-pound, 2½ x 3 x 8¼-inch camera and CBS' one-and-a-half pound, 5 x 1¾ x 2-inch vidicon with a four-pound portable tv camera mounted on a gunstock and aimed as one aims a shotgun.

Philco, which will sponsor the ABC convention coverage, developed the third minicamera. It measures 3½ x 6¼ x 10½ inches. It too uses a videcon tube (to tv cameras what transistors are to radios). Camera is sighted by means of a small viewfinder.

Another "warlike" twist ABC is giving its convention coverage results from the two special lenses for standard tv cameras. The lenses, for improving distance shots are named "The Bazooka," because it resembles the anti-tank gun of World War II, and "The Big Jake," which is fatter and resembles a mortar. "Jake" is Marvin Jacobs, the ABC-TV chief lens engineer on the Coast, who developed the new camera addition. Lenses will be used for shots of the convention floor that require sharp definition in long-distance camerawork. "Bazooka" was a development of engineers at KGO-TV, Frisco.

RCA's 8% Hike On Six-Months Sales

Radio Corp. of America broke another sales record during the first six months of the year. Company sold $526,488,000 worth of products and services for the time, beating the previous record, made in the first half of 1955, by 8%.

Corporate earnings after federal taxes, was $20,037,000 for the six-month period. Earnings for the Jan.-June time in 1955 were $22,061,000. After preferred stock payments, common stock paid $1.32 per share out of net profit. Figure was $1.46 in '55.

Sales of the second quarter of 1956 amounted to $251,640,000, a gain an 8% increase over the same '55 period. But common share earnings fell: They were 47 cents per share in April-June this year and 62 cents the year before.

Meantime, Allen B. DuMont Laboratories Inc. reported a six-month, 1956, loss of $484,000 after a tax carryback credit of $608,000. The 24-week measure, ending June 19, 1955, disclosed losses of $1,249,000. Sales for the latest half-year were $22,471,000, compared with $29,741,000 for the same period in '55.

25% MULTIPLE OWNERSHIP

Dean Martin: 'We'll Get By'

Dean Martin, in an unusually candid interview with Frank Gallop and Ben Grauer on "Monitor" over NBC Sunday (29), said that "together" he and Jerry Lewis "reached the heights, and I don't think separately we will make as much money as we are making now, but we will both get along quite well." Continued Martin: "This is something that Jerry and I talked about for a long time. We are far, far away from being enemics. . . . Jerry is more mature now. I am 10 years older, but he wants to do 50 weeks out of the year in night clubs, and that is not for me. I can't do that."

People speak of their "feud," but it is correct to say so, continued Martin. People also say, "You are not going to break up. That would be crazy." The pair are not crazy: they know they made "many people happy as a team, but Jerry and I would like to be happy in our hearts, too," explained Martin. If Dean were not going "to play it solo," Lewis would be "the best you can find. . . . You can't find a better partner than he. . . . However, Jerry wants to do his kind of show, and I want to do mine."

3 Equally Competitive TV Stations In 200 Markets Asked By ABC

Washington, July 31.

The ABC network submitted a comprehensive proposal to the FCC last week to revise its allocation proposal to provide for at least three equally competitive stations in nearly 200 markets of the nation.

While lauding the agency's plan for interim deintermixture pending an ultimate shift to UHF as "an important milestone in the history of tv allocations," the network urged the Commission to go further in providing for additional stations "since all-UHF must be considered a distant future goal."

The ABC plan provides for four equally competitive facilities in as many as possible of the first 100 markets and for three equally competitive facilities in as many as possible of the second 100 markets.

The additional stations would be provided through further deintermixture and through slight changes in VHF channel mileage separation requirements. The plan could be adopted, ABC told the Commission, "without undue dislocation and without significant degradation of existing engineering standards."

Under the ABC proposals, there would be 67 cities with at least four stations. Another 74 markets would have three stations. In one of the first 100 markets there would be two stations and in only one would there be one station.

The plan calls for 52 all-UHF areas, of which 23 would be in the first 100 markets. Included among the all-UHF markets would be Erie, Pa., where it is proposed that the VHF channel used by the Edward Lamb station be shifted to Cleveland.

The plan provides for four stations for Cleveland, Kansas City, St. Louis, Charleston, W. Va., Houston, Miami, New Orleans, Providence, Tampa, Richmond, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Des Moines, Spokane, Wash., Nashville, Duluth, Minn., Knoxville, Stockton, Calif., Wichita, Kan., Corpus Christi, Tex., Little Rock, Ark., Greensboro, N.C., Brownsville, Tex., and Johnstown-Altoona, Pa.

Additional VHF assignments would be made to provide for three stations in Louisville, Rochester, N.Y., Dayton, O., Norfolk, Syracuse, N.Y., Flint, Mich., Grand Rapids, Mich., Davenport-Rock Island-Moline, Chattanooga, Bakers-

Travelers Gets Hartford V Nod

Hartford, July 31.

The FCC has granted the Travelers Broadcasting Service, operators of WTIC, a construction permit to put up a VHF television station here. However the CP came with a big "if." The "if" being, that after FCC action on pending deintermixture proceedings, the channel (three) remains here.

The FCC action confirmed an earlier finding by an FCC examiner

FCC WEIGHING NEW FORMULA

The FCC is seriously mulling a brand new change in multiple ownership rules which would permit an individual or a network (or however the ownership corporation breaks down) to own up to 25% of total U.S. circulation.

Proposed new set of rules would replace the five-plus-two formula which allows ownership of five VHF's plus two UHF's, regardless of total aggregate audience or coverage. On the other hand, the proposed FCC plan would wipe out the five-plus-two ceiling and permit a single broadcaster to own as many stations as he wishes, so long as he stays within the "25% of the total circulation" formula.

There is one disturbing aspect of the contemplated set of rules which to some is fraught with political dynamite and "monoply of thought" undertones. Under the FCC proposal a single broadcaster could, if the circumstances presented themselves, grab within his own domain every important tv outlet within the borders of a single state giving him a voice and a power that could permit him to control the Congressional seat or seats of his state or even an unprecedented sectional influence.

It's understood that the majority of the FCC members are sold on the 25% formula as replacement for the current five-plus-two.

L. B. Wilson's Widow Agrees to $1,263,700 Estate Settlement

Cincinnati, July 31.

Acceptance by L. B. Wilson's widow, Constance, of a $1,263,700 settlement has averted an extended court battle over the last will of the WCKY owner.

Wilson, who died Oct. 28, 1954, left an estate valued at $4,226,732. His interests included holdings in Churchill Downs, Louisville, and the Lincoln Downs race track in Rhode Island. He founded the 50,000-watt Cincy station.

Mrs. Wilson agreed to a settlement in the court of Judge W. F. Blanton, Miami Beach, Fla., July 24. She sought revocation of a 1953 will in favor of one drawn in 1948 which would have given her one-third of his estate in accord-

'Price Not Right,' ABC-TV May Scrap Sat. Nite 'Film Festival'

Circus 24.3—Allen 10.8

Ed Sullivan's all-circus show on CBS-TV Sunday (29) outTrendexed NBC's Steve Allen show by a better than 13-point margin.

Sullivan's roundup of tanbark artists from the suddenly closed Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey Circus, plus acts fromelsewhere, put together a 24.3, with Allen racking a 10.8. ABC-TV's "Famous Films Festival" scored a 3.6.

ABC-TV will knock out its nighttime 90-minute "Film Festival" showcase, unless it can bring in a suitable backlog of feature pix at the prices ABC is willing to pay. It has been ABC's intention to shift "Festival" from its present 7:30 to 9 Sunday night tenacy to the same time segments on Saturday evenings to compete with Jackie Gleason and Perry Como, but all this may go by the boards with ABC reverting to live stanza or stanzas for the 90-minute stretch.

ABC prexy Robert Kintner has put an Aug. 8 deadline on obtaining the right pix deal for the Saturday slottings. But the network is stipulating that it will only pay $50,000 for a seven-time screening of a suitable weekly vehicle (twice at night and five times on "Afternoon Film Festival.") Pie acquisitions would cover a two-year span. If no major studio (and they've got to be U. S.-made films) is willing to embrace that pattern, then ABC will call it quits and go live. Program veepee Bob Lewine has already been alerted to that possibility and he's mulling possible entries for the 90-minute span.

Thus far nobody's willing to come in under ABC's terms. WB wants $75,000 per pic for its backlog. RKO wants $50,000 but only for two showings. And ABC considers Metro's demands as fantastic—$150,000 per single-screening of its backlog.

Decision would not affect the daytime "Film Festival."

Mutual May Shift News Setup to D.C.

Washington, July 31.

Transfer of ownership of local station WGMS to RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc., parent company of Mutual Broadcasting Slystem, becomes effective this week, following greenlight from FCC. Along with acquisition of an owned and operated station in the nation's capital, Mutual is considering a move of its news operation from New York to Washington. Web spokesmen admitted move is in the "talk stage," stating affiliates are currently being sounded out on switch.

WGMS prexy M. Robert Rogers, who sold station to RKO for $400,000, has a five-year contract, along with his wife, Teresa, to serve as consultants to new owners at $30,000 per year. Management of station will be taken over by Robert F. Hurleigh, longtime Mutual rep in Washington. Hurleigh plans to continue as moderator for "Reporters Roundup," web's news panel radio-tv show.

Rogers has announced that he plans to take leave of absence from his radio chores to head newly formed committee of show biz reps, and outstanding figures from field of arts and sciences, to work for reelection of President Eisenhower. Committee, not yet formally named, has taken office space in Washington, and is presumably recruiting top names from Broadway and Hollywood and from college campuses.

CBS-TV Gets 26 Politico Capsules

The Republicans and Demos have carmarked a total of 26 teleshows on CBS alone on which they will cut in toward the finish with five-minute paid politicasts. They're all live, of course. They'll run during the Presidential campaign from Sept. 18 to Nov. 2.

Included in the 26—14 for the Dems and 12 for the GOP—are full hour stanzas such as Arthur Godfrey (Wed.), U. S. Steel, "Studio One," "Climax," Jackie Gleason, and the new 90-minute series, "Playhouse 90." Also picked off is another new show, Herb Shriner's Tuesday half-hour.

Of the 26 capsules, the parties are taking one each on 10 identical shows on various dates. These are "Name That Tune," Godfrey (Wed.) plus his "Talent Scouts," "$64,000 Question," U. S. Steel, "Climax," "I've Got a Secret," "Studio One," "Playhouse 90" and "Person to Person." The six singles are made up of "Stage Show," "$64,000 Challenge," Red Skelton, Ed Sullivan, for the Dems; and Jackie Gleason and Herb Shriner for the Republicans. By the month's, it's three segments in September, 20 in October and three in November.

CHI PRIMPS FOR POLITICOS

By FARRELL DAVISSON

Chicago, July 31.

The advance guard of what promises to be the biggest concentration of radio and television manpower ever assembled for a single event is converging on Chicago for the Democratic convention which kicks off at the International Amphitheatre Aug. 13.

Literally tons of electronic gear are being installed for the big political show which figures to play to 100,000,000 viewers. By the time the opening gavel sounds on Monday the 13th, upwards of 2,500 persons drawn from all the facets of the combined industries will be headquartered here. Included in this army will be technicians and engineers by the dozens, newscasters and pundits, directors and producers, the now-traditional anchor men, agency reps, network prexies and errand boys.

And every manjack of them will be keeping his fingers crossed that the Demos will get their show off the road on schedule so as not to overlap the Republican's conclave which opens the following week in Frisco. Even the remote possibility that the two conventions might be running simultaneously for a couple of sessions is a frightening prospect for the networks which under the best of circumstances figure to go into the red to the tune of at least $5,000,000 covering the quadrennial affairs.

'Equal Time' Enigma

What really gives the network moguls the shudders, the D. C. political sensitivities being what they are, is how they would solve the "equal time" enigma if they were forced to doublebill the nominating clambakes. Television braintrusters have given some thought to setting up an emergency arrangment to kine the opening of the GOP gathering for delayed beaming should the Demo's still be in session the week of Aug. 23. The technical problems could be licked, but how to square the beefs if the Democrats were getting the live exposure and the Republicans the kine treatment is another matter.

As of new, however, the feeling seems to prevail at the Democratic headquarters in the Conrad Hilton that they will have their presidential and vice presidential candidates picked in plenty of time for adjournment Friday night, Aug. 17. In fact, the entire convention timetable is geared for the Friday-night climax so the nominees can make their acceptanee speeches during the prime evening dialing hours.

No Pranks on Planks

The party's platform committee starts its work next Monday (6) to avoid the '52 experience when the convention was virtually stalled while the platform planks were being tussled over. With that job done in advance, the decks should be cleared for the nominations to begin Wednesday morning (15). The nominating and seconding speeches and the demonstrations are being cut down in length and the polling of the individual delegations will be done by clerks while the chairman continues with the state roll calls.

Thus, with three full days for the speechmaking and the balloting and barring the emergence of a more serious threat to Adlai Stevenson's bid for a re-run than is presently visible, the affair could well end on schedule.

Aecording to the latest count, the network troops will number 1,125, with CBS, NBC, ABC each dispatching some 350 staffers for their joint radio-tv coverage. Mutual is checking in with another 75. Despite the allout treatment by webs, the convention has attracted a record-breaking number of radio-tv staffers from all parts of the country who'll be covering their home state delegations. Over 1,300 of these have been accredited.

As in '52, the networks' setups will be located in the second floor of the Amphitheatre's north wing. The layouts will be basically similar to those used four years ago, although in eaeh instance they encompass considerably more floor space so all involved will have more elbow room.

Wrather Dickers 'Lassie' Purchase

Hollywood, July 31.

Jack Wrather is negotiating for the outright purchase of the "Lassie" tv property from Robert Maxwell Associates, with latter reported asking $4,000,000.

Under deal being discussed, producer Maxwell and his associate, Ruby Abel, may stay with the series if negotiations are finalized.

Last year Wrather, who owns several tv stations and the Disneyland hotel, bought the "Lone Ranger" property for approximately $3,000,000.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

STATIONS SAY 'MORE TELEFILM'

'Sudden Death' For Telepix Code?

Hollywood, July 31.

Integration of the National Society of Television Producers into the Screen Producers Guild leaves the fate of the much-publicized code for telefilms in doubt. One leading NSTP exec predicted it might come up at the next SPG meeting but would "die a sudden death," adding he saw no need for the code; that the NATRB code, the agencies, the sponsors and networks now govern vidfilm content thoroughly.

Martin Leeds, Desilu exec veepee who has been toiling on the code since December, wasn't even apprised of the "integration." He said he always felt it was an industry, not NSTP matter and plans to continue working on the code anyway.

Integration was jointly announced by NSTP prexy William Self and SPG prexy Samuel G. Engel, who last week emphatically denied SPG was discussing such a move with any tv producers association.

Soft Market in Syndication Gone, Sez Nathan; Telepix Sales at Peak

Hollywood, July 31.

There are more telepix being sold in syndication today than ever, this despite the fact prices are going down on reruns of vidfilms, it's asserted by Wynn Nathan, sales v.p. of MCA-TV Film Syndication. MCA-TV is syndicating more vidseries than anyone else in tv—23.

Prices are holding up on new product, the dip is on the old, or "secondary" films, Nathan noted. "Syndication has settled down to a real business, and is going through a leveling off period. It's a business now instead of a promotion dream," he said.

"Today it's a matter of salesmanship and good product. There is no more soft market, or any sales being made by phone calls. The smaller guys without a sales force are crying. It's true that in this market we're feeling the pinch. But we refuse to sell our films at low price levels. We plan to be here in 10 years, and want no part of any cutthroat operation.

"There are a lot of operators who, in desperate need of money, will make deals at fantastically low prices. Some outfits don't even know the value of their shows, and sell them cheaper than their worth. This sort of thing hurts all of us.

"I realize we now have a new problem—that of the major studio features against us, since the time given them mean that much less for our product. But the business is there for syndication, despite that.

"I think, too, there will always be room for the small guy in syndication. Some of them will merge and become bigger fish. We're not trying to push anyone out of business. We feel it's healthy to have the competition. The real competition for the syndicator today is the backlog of movies which will take a lot of time. If the FCC would approve more channels, it would be a big help.

"We would like to see our producers making money. Very few are. That's why there is so little

$2,000,000 Sales On 20th Package

National Telefilm Associates has closed deals in 57 tv markets on the 20th-Fox 52 package, passing the $2,000,000 mark.

The new deals include: WITR-TV, Milwaukee; KRCA, Hollywood; KBTV, Denver; WFIL, Philadelphia; KDKA, Pittsburgh; WCDA, Albany; KTTV, Los Angeles; KOMO, Seattle; WTVC, Austin, Tex.; and KYTV, Springfield, Mo. A total of 21 deals were inked during the past week.

NTA also has sold its complete product lineup, with the exception of the "Sheriff of Cochise" series, to KONO-TV, San Antonio, which goes on the air in January. The reported $150,000 sale includes the 52 from 20th-Fox, the Selznick group, the Fabulous 40 package, "Combat Sergeant" and the Lili Palmer telefilm series.

SG's 'Mollie & Me'

Hollywood, July 31.

Stephen Longstreet, film and legit writer, makes his debut as a producer on a new series of comedies for Screen Gems, the Columbia tv subsidiary.

Series, tagged "Mollie and Me," revolves around a small town beauty parlor. Longstreet will write and produce.

RKO's 'Finest 52' Broken Up; O&O Stations Get 13

"King Kong" is slated for fall airing on the RKO Teleradio o&o tv stations, all of which have received 26 features from the backlog held back in the Matty Fox deal, including 13 from RKO's "Finest 52."

"King Kong," currently in its fourth theatrical rerelease, already has been telecast on RKO Teleradio's New York flagship WOR-TV. The remaining five o&o stations have been given the greenlight to tv the monster after Oct. 1.

The breakup of the "Finest 52" package underscores RKO Teleradio's failure to date to come up with a network deal, and although 39 still remain in the package, it looks like the remainder, too, will eventually go for telecasting on o&o stations. Under RKO's agreement with Fox, the 150 held out of the backlog, revert back to Fox in December, 1957, if RKO by that time fails to have aired the backlog via a national sponsor. The "Finest 52" package was culled from the 150.

The 13 of the 52 given to o&o stations include: "Mr. Blanding Builds His Dream House," "Love Affair," "Once Upon a Honeymoon," "Walk Softly, Stranger," "Rachel and the Stranger," "Out of the Past," "Murder My Sweet," "The Locket," "Enchanted Cottage," "Fallen Sparrow," "Experiment Perilous," "Easy Living" and "Flight for Freedom."

'Dr. Christian' For Overseas Markets

Ziv has sold its "Dr. Christian" series to Associated Television Programs, Ltd., for airing in London, Birmingham, Yorkshire and Scotland.

Plans, meanwhile, are underway to speed up the dubbing of the "Dr. Christian" series into Spanish. Dubbing will begin in Mexico City in October for release to the Spanish market next January.

Paul Gilbert Series

Hollywood, July 31.

Paul Gilbert was signed to star in "Shore Leave," new comedy telefilm series being produced by Harry Sauber for Screen Gems.

ABC SURVEYS PIX PATTERNS

U.S. tv stations plan a greater accent on telefilm programming and a continued use of feature films in non-network broadcasting for the 1956-'57 season, according to a national survey conducted by ABC Film Syndication.

Despite the influx of new theatrical libraries, the survey found that the general trend is not to increase the existing amount of feature film programming, although at this stage such fare is quite pronounced.

The survey, aimed at gathering information on current trends in tv film buying, was conducted via a questionnaire mailed out to 435 stations, eliciting a useable response from 145 stations— a response of 32.4%. The mailing took place the latter part of June and the sampling received was considered representative of the country, in that it closely resembled the national characteristics of the various tv markets, ranging from the single channel ones to those of four or more channels.

As to the type of film programming which has been and is easiest now to sell to sponsors, stations put mystery-adventure on top of the list. There were 14 different types listed in the results and the following came out among the leaders: adventure, drama-anthology, mystery, Western-adult, comedy, Western-children and science fiction.

Respondents were asked if they planned to use more, less or the same amount of film in 1956-'57. Over 53% said they plan to use the same, with 27.6 responding that they plan to use more and 17.9 stating plans to use less. With over 80% of the tv stations setting out to use the same or more film, ABC felt that it would appear there will be greater opportunities for the sale of tv film in the coming season.

Regarding feature films, the question asked was "Do you plan to increase the number of hours of feature film programming in 1956-'57?" There was no question relating to the "same level" as in the general film query. Affirmative responses were received from 15.2% of the stations, while 80.7% stated they had no plans to increase feature film programming, with 4.1% making no response in this category.

Of those indicating an expansion of feature film programming, 50% stated they would slot the increase in late evening hours.

In reference to the total number of hours allocated to feature film programming, 48.9% were listed as light users, utilizing 1 to 11 hours per week, 29% as medium users, with a 12-21 hours weekly allocation, 16.7% heavy users, with 22 or more hours per week, and only 1.3% none-users. Responses in this category were not received from 4.1% of the stations.

Frank Ross Producing Wife's (Joan Caulfield) New Telefilm Series

Hollywood, July 31.

Producer Frank Ross, heretofore a theatrical film producer, will enter tv as exec producer of a new series starring his actress-wife, Joan Caulfield.

Ross finalized an agreement with MCA for financing of a pilot film on the series which is based on a film property. "A Lady Takes a Chance," which he produced a decade ago, and which starred Jean Arthur and John Wayne.

Projected series is planned for 1957 sale. Ross will pick a creative staff to develop the series before he leaves for the Riviera and the Sept. 1 start of his next feature film, "Kings Go Forth." Ross will also select the male lead before leaving for Europe.

Miss Caulfield starred in the "My Favorite Husband" series on CBS-TV.

WPIX Finds There's Lots of Loot In That Double Exposure Formula

Double exposure of syndicated films by sponsors has become a growing trend in the seven-station New York market, with indie WPIX copping virtually all the business to date in that field.

Latest of the six telefilm series set for double exposure is "Dr. Christian," which is to be sponsored in the fall by Mueller Macaroni on Monday nights over WABC-TV and on Wednesday nights over indie WPIX.

The apparent growing popularity of double exposures lies in the advertisers attempt to get another crack at the large New York market with another airing of his show. With 4,500,000 tv sets in the Metropolitan market, some agencies feel it good insurance to place the syndicated show on another station, sometime in a different time slot or day in order to garner a different audience. Another factor is the comparative low charge for the second run, usually running one third or less of the cost of the first-run. It is known in some cases a shaky syndicator in order to close a deal will throw the second run in at practically gratis. Aiding WPIX, too, in the double exposure operation is its comparatively much lower time charges compared to the payments of time on N. Y. network affiliates.

The New York Daily News' station's first double exposure deal was last October with Ballantine's sponsored "Highway Patrol," seen first-run WRCA-TV, from 7 to 7:30 p.m. Mondays, and second-run Wednesdays at 9:30 p.m. over WPIX. Nielson's June report indicates how such double exposure can up the overall rating. On WRCA-TV, the rating is 14.9 and on WPIX, 10.2, giving the show an overall rating of 25.1.

Yank Pix on BBC-TV

London, July 31.

Pending a settlement of its negotiations with the British film industry to control the use of motion pictures on television, BBC-TV is pursuing its policy of casual bookings.

On August Bank Holiday Monday (6), a major national vacation, BBC-TV will be screening Alfred Hitchcock's "Foreign Correspondent" starring Joel McCrea, which was released here in 1940.

Latex Girdle To Gird 50% of TV Aud in Pix Buys

International Latex's tieup with C & C Television will give the bra-girdle-baby panties outfit the largest spot broadcasting campaign of any company on tv, A. N. Spanel, chairman of the board of International Latex Corp., claims. Spanel said that as of today (Aug. 1) Matty Fox's C & C Television Corp. will have sold the RKO film library in a sufficient number of tv markets to blanket a potential of 50% of the tv homes in the U. S.

Since last January, Fox has been selling the RKO package to stations in time, plus cash deals. Latex, in turn, has a deal with Fox under which it gets the time for a spot campaign, with sums of money accruing to Fox dependent on the number of markets sold, and other factors. Fox also reportedly shares to some degree in any rise in Latex sales.

On the basis of the projected "saturation tv" campaign, Spanel forecast that Latex's gross business within two years will hit $120,000,000 annually. Currently, the outfit, is doing about $40,000,000 yearly. Coincident, with the tv campaign, the firm is branching out into pharmaceuticals, marketing Isodine, a new non-poisonous iodine product.

Spanel declined to name the markets in which C & C has sold the RKO package. He did say, however, that by the first of the year, he hopes the RKO package will be sold in 100 "top markets" giving Latex a potential of 75% to 90% of the over 36,000,000 tv homes in the U. S.

SG Rolls 'Confession' As 'Playhouse 90' Entry; Bischoff's 'Ali & Baba'

"Confession," the second Screen Gems production for CBS' "Playhouse 90" series, will go before the cameras Monday (6), as the Columbia Pictures subsid set and prepared for other series.

Starring in the second 90-minute telefilm will be Dennis O'Keefe and June Lockhart, with Eva Wolas producing and Tony Leader directing from a screenplay by Devery Freeman and Ed Morris. "The Country Husband" will be the first for "Playhouse 90."

On the new projects front, motion picture and tv producer Sam Bischoff has signed a deal with Screen Gems to film a new comedy series, titled "The Adventures of Ali and Baba," based on the characters from "The Arabian Nights." Bischoff is co-producer with David Diamond of "Mystery Writers Theatre" for Screen Gems.

Louis Appleton, Jr., former assistant director for Screen Gems' "Father Knows Best" series, has been promoted to assistant to producer Herbert B. Leonard in charge of "The 77th Bengal Lancers" series.

P&G Dickers For Bundle of Reruns

MCA-TV is reportedly negotiating a deal with Procter & Gamble that is revolutionary in the sale of syndicated rerun telefilm. Sponsor is buying five, six or more former network half-hour programs which MCA has or can get its hands on, which will be stripped for P&G in an undetermined number of tv markets around the country.

Apart from the completely new concept of a national sponsor buying several shows at once for cross-the-board booking via spot placements, the sale by MCA will probably have considerable repercussion among all syndicators involved in rerun sales, according to an observer, who believes that the price MCA is offering the pix for might undermine the current price structure, forcing competing costs down greatly.

Belief is that the group of shows will be rotated market to market, so that P&G can continue a half-hour daily series for approximately a year without break. Neither sponsor nor syndicator could be reached for comment, but it's understood they are both out in the field in a joint attempt to get station clearances for the strip telefilm showcase.

Since Lou Friedland, a veep at MCA, has been working on the company's "package" sales for several years, it is assumed he has been instrumental in the forthcoming multi-package sale to P&G.

MCA-TV Axings

Three men have been axed by MCA-TV, it's reported, and an additional number are ready to go. Vincent Ramos, a salesman in N. Y. for the international division of the syndication company, is no longer with the firm.

Two other men, one in Chi and one from MCA's Canadian sales staff, are understood to have been given notice.

We have a little announcement for a few select friends:

ABC's Morning Drama Bloc outrates all competition, by an average margin of 50% according to Nielsen's latest Radio report.† Incidentally, twice as many homes tune to radio in the morning as tune to television according to Nielsen. You're free to draw your own conclusions. The one we draw is this: you get more (homes) for less (cost per commercial minute) on ABC Morning Radio — Breakfast Club, My True Story, When A Girl Marries, Whispering Streets, Grand Central Station, The Jack Paar Show. For full facts, call your ABC Radio representative.

All Network Sponsored Programs
10:00 AM-12:00 Noon (NYT), M-F
(Common Morning Network Option Time)

| | Nielsen Average Audience Rating | Homes Reached Per Average Minute |
|---|---|---|
| ABC Radio | 2.7 | 1,277,000 |
| Network B* | 2.3 | 1,088,000 |
| Network C | 1.8 | 851,000 |
| Network D | 1.3 | 615,000 |

*The true efficiency margin over Network B can only be seen by looking at costs: ABC drama segments (containing one commercial minute) range from $1000 to $1300, depending on frequency. Network B, on the other hand, charges about $2000 per minute in its leading morning program, according to Nielsen.

CBS-TV's 'Electronic Caucuses'

CBS-TV can be credited with pulling off one of the neatest politico tricks of this or any convention year with its brace of pre-convention electronic caucuses. In the words of GOP national committee biggie Leonard Hall, it was a "milestone in tv history" and certainly recognition of tv's major role in the overall scheme of things political in America, particularly in mirroring the conduct of convention participants in influencing future behavior and technique. Echoing Hall's sentiment were those of Demmy boss Paul Butler with expressions of gratitude and enthusiasm for the effectiveness of the caucuses.

Through the closed-circuit technique, the network on separate days last week staged two half-hour shows (both of which, incidentally, were capsulized for an on-the-air Sunday afternoon (29) screening). One was for the Dems; the others for the Republicans. In a succession of pickups around the country through local affiliate auspices, with the "electronic caucuses" emanating from N.Y., state committeemen, Congressmen and those in general who make up the electoral vote, got a visual look-see on two 30-minute showmanly wrapups of the role tv (in this instance CBS) will play toward getting its share of the potential 100,000,000 convention viewers with a lookback at past conventions when radio, then tv, began to move into the picture and cue a reformatting of convention techniques.

Particularly impressive was the on-camera job done by news-public affairs chieftain Sig Mickelson, who guided the 30-minute ventures through their visually hep courses. Subsequent mail received by the network from all quarters of political life testified to the major impact of the tv caucuses. Rose.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Ed Sullivan Show

The customers on the Trendex line may have loved it, but the routining of Ed Sullivan's all-circus show on CBS-TV Sunday (29) was conspicuous for its inexpertness. But Sullivan and his cohorts are shrewd showmen; with the Ringling-Barnum circus having done a sudden foldo in Pitt a couple of weeks back, they latched on to about a dozen of the acts to put before the homescreens. Other hoopla revolved around putting on three shows outdoors that day under a tent on a lot near the originating studio and bringing Mayor Robert Wagner into the act via a permit tied into the town's Summer Festival.

The teleshow's cameras did a commuting job between studio and al fresco to catch the layout—predominantly Big Toppers but also recruiting some non-Ringling turns such as baby elephant Opal, an acrobatic whammo of a pachyderm hustled in from Pollack Bros. Circus on the Coast to steal the show, and several other elephants from Hunt Bros. circus.

One of the main troubles was an overload of talent, causing some turns to unfold as mere quickies. Also, the top aerialists, Pinito Del Oro and Miss Mara, are both trapeze acts and nearly in the same groove trickwise; both great, but the repetition hurt the show's playability.

Sullivan, though claiming there was no need for orthodox circus production, put a reverse twist on this by concluding with a "circus parade" from the outdoor end; this was a congested melee that made little sense as a finale. Some of the acts received slipshod verbal billing (and no screened credits) or oilish mispronunciation which could have been corrected by one hep to the involved "nationality" syllables—such as a mccoy ringmaster or announcer. The touted clowns—Emmett Kelly, Felix Adler and Otto Griebling—all of them standards for many years, got the worst drubbing of all, with little to show them off on a tv screen and the identities of at least two of them miscued. Merle Evans, longtime bandmaster of the Big Show (until this season) was likewise lost in the shuffle, though Ray Bloch, the show's maestro, was permitted to do a quick caper with Sullivan. Altogether there were about 15 acts, including the mere flashes.

Taking bows in the spectator seats were Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary, and Harold Berg, attorney for the American Guild of Variety Artists. This was apparently done as a "thank you" in relation to those acts which worked the Ringling circus against the union's picketing. They had been under suspension (plus threatened $2,000 fines), but the suspension was lifted for the 60 minutes to allow the performers to appear on the teleshow. Trau.

Goodyear Playhouse

Elliott Nugent "saved the show" last Sunday (29) when the Goodyear Playhouse on NBC-TV presented the Abby Mann original, "Pencil Sketch." It was the kind of piece that might have passed muster on a hot summer night, but with the mercury dropping to the low sixties it didn't make the more critical grade.

Nugent, cast as a New Englander who goes to Italy to visit his daughter and ends up falling in love with a young Italian artist, has a natural dignity and ability that carries him over practically any situation. In the case of "Pencil Sketch," he applied both to good advantage and it was a pleasure to watch him work.

Trouble for the most part was with Mann's script, which was based on a hackneyed premise and never allowed any of the characters to come to life. Staging by director Paul Bogart also left much to wish for and made for a somewhat static effect. There was never a feeling that this was Rome, or—for that matter—that the people were real.

In the main part opposite Nugent, Margo Hartman looked good as the Italian beauty who took an interest in the middleaged American, but her performance left much to be desired. She didn't bother with facial expressions at all. They are part of acting! Millette Alexander played Nugent's daughter with an almost continuous scowl and George Maharias did what he could with the brief part of Miss Hartman's jealous suitor.

Mann's script lacked proper motivation throughout, particularly for the crucial scene when Nugent and his girl decide they're not for one another after all. Throughout their brief May-to-December romance, their lack of enthusiasm for one another was pronounced. Audience must have shared the feeling. Hift.

Firestone Hour

Soprano Heidi Krall made her Firestone debut last Monday (30) night. Appearing with tenor Robert Rounseville and the Howard Barlow orchestra on the 8:30-9 p.m. WABC radio-tv simulcast, she projected herself as the potentially bright star that she is. The show, built around a summer theatre motif, was musically pleasant, with Miss Krall and Rounseville ably dishing out a variety of tunes in the operatic and musicomedy vein.

The songstering pair each had a solo number besides dueting on three other tunes. Miss Krall worked over "Someday," while Rounseville gave out with "Younger Than Springtime." Their joint vocaling took in "You Are Free," "The Day I Met You" and "You and the Night and the Music." The Barlow aggregation did a nice job on "No Business Like Show Business" and "The Triumphal March" from "Aida." Jess.

This Is Ottawa

Signs of upped showmanship were evident in the July 24 airing of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s weekly video showcasing of Canada's capital city—"This Is Ottawa" (Tues., 10 p.m.). Initial stanzas of the series were almost devoid of showmanship; stiff and amateurish in production and scripting. The latest session showed definite indications of slickness, but there's quite a way to go yet to get it in the clicko category. The stint was at the Federal Bureau of Statistics, as dry a subject as any producer would want tossed at him, but Michael Hind-Smith's handling of the chore shot some color and interest onto the screen with the assistance of exhibit-type sets, fast-pan briefings by Bureau staffers on what the various divisions do and IBM machine forecastings of what would happen the next day across Canada (births, deaths, etc.). Gorm.

DAN BELLOC SHOW
With Gini Patton, Eddie Allyn; Betty Johnson, guest
Producer-Director: Carl Tubbs
60 Mins.; Mon., 8:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago

Dan Belloc and his orch have led off what looks to be a parade of dancebands on Chicago tv in the hopes of dittoing the Lawence Welk smash. On the firster, the Belloc entry emerged as pleasant enough listening but was strictly routine as a visual display, pointing up that there's more to the Welk formula than merely installing a band in front of the cameras.

Belloc is a glib enough emcee although he evidenced a bent towards cuteness. He's backed by an able group of sidemen who served up a well-diversified clutch of ditties. All told there were 19 tunes spun off, including the vocals, during the hour span and that's a hefty diet of dance music for one sitting.

Regular vocalists Eddie Allyn and Gini Patton and guest Betty Johnson provided the pacechangers in nice style. Miss Johnson might have been given an encore after her fine serving of "Clay Idol."

Included were such standard gadgets as a talent showcasing sequence featuring this time an obviously professional accordionist, an amateur songwriting invite and some shots of studio guests rug-cutting onstage.

The show was cleanly cut by producer-director Carl Tubbs but the physical layout was too cramped to escape the monotony of the tight shots and the alternate visually meaningless long shots. Dave.

DEBATE
With Norman Barry; guests
Producer: Betty Ross West
Director: Dave Gray
30 Mins.; Sun., 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WNBQ, Chicago

What may have seemed like a good television public service idea on paper failed to translate into very exciting viewing, at least on segment seen (22). Scheme pits two spokesmen for opposite sides of a given issue in formal debating situation, complete with a panel of judges who select the winner, using the standard debating scoring system.

In theory the format could provide a well-rounded ventalation of a particular subject. But as demonstrated in this instance it also can provide a dull round of partisan soapboxing that adds neither heat nor light. And the fact that each debater is given eight and a half minutes for his basic arguments and a three and a half minute rebuttal, means that under the best of circumstances it's still a lot of undiluted gabbing.

This time Rollis S. Nelson, exec director of the Republican national committee's farm division and R. M. Evans, member of the Democrat's agriculture advisory committee, locked horns on "Which Part Is the More Responsible for the Farm Problem." The Democrat won the judges' nod, but the average watcher must have been left more befuddled than ever over this complex problem.

Norman Barry serves as chairman and even he seemed a little confused at the end. Dave.

VIEWPOINT
With Paul Sevareid, others
Producer: Sevareid
Director: Elliot Warren
30 Mins.; Tues., 8 p.m.
WTCN-TV, Minneapolis

This every-other-Tuesday-nighter is avowedly built on the premise that frank discussion of both sides of vital, controversial questions is our government's lifeblood. Program is distinctive for this area because, while it's in progress, viewers are invited to telephone in questions directed at panel participants who answer them.

Show caught, concerning what should be done about military aircraft in this metropolitan district, was especially timely here because during recent weeks military aircraft on two occasions crashed into adjacent residential neighborhoods, killing 14 persons and destroying homes. That the matter holds great interest and that the program enlists a susbstantial audience were indicated by the large number of telephone queries.

As skillfully and intelligently handled by topnotch WTCN-TV moderator Paul Sevareid, the station's newscaster and analyst, program stacks up as a highly commendable public service contribution. In this instance, Sevareid never permitted the action to lag as he himself sounded out panel members, kept the debate going, tossed into the hopper his own and others' questions and made apt observations. Rees.

THE GEORGE RANK SHOW
With Jonnie Jones, Charles Kray, The Lassies
Producer: Howard Christensen
Director: Jerry Gregoris
30 Mins.; Thur., 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WGN-TV, Chicago

WGN-TV which has traditionally garnered its best nighttime ratings via the film route is making a determined bid to beef up its live countenance with a flock of new flesh entries. Latest addition is this hitchhike on the current dance band video fad, featuring George Rank and orch.

Stanza sampled (19) indicated the elements are there to cash in on the discovery made on ABC-TV by Lawrence Welk that there's a sizeable tv clientele who still likes music with the "old fashioned" beat. Rank fronts the session with a good touch of enthusiasm. The arrangements were all solidly commercial in the Welk idiom. And the WGN-TV crew played it straight without trying to fuse it up with any trick effects. This time the group of dancing couples was a distraction.

A round dozen ditties were dished out, with a minimum of patter from the host. Tunes ranged from the nostalgic standards to the current pops, with a touch of jazz thrown in. Rank used his trumpet to good advantage in the leads.

Vocals were handled by band singers Jonnie Jones and Charles Kray and The Lassies. Kray did all right by "Ivory Tower" but Miss Jones marred her treatment of "Longest Walk" with some unnecessary facial mannerisms. The Lassies sang "Moonglow" and their new Decca release, "Sleepyhead." They sounded like they looked—like three cute young girls just out of highschool. Dave.

SYMBOL OF MERCY
With Don Riggs, Ann Reider, T. H. Dudgeon, Jer.-Jean Trannett, and Donald Campbell
Producer-director: Carl Papai
60 Mins.; Fri. (20), 7:30 p.m.
WBNS-TV, Columbus

This special hour-long, locally-produced telementary commemorated the 75th anniversary of the Red Cross and the 40th birthday of the Franklin County Chapter of the Red Cross.

"Symbol of Mercy," latest of WBNS-TV's community service features, traced the history of the Red Cross from its founding up to the present day as it affected one family and this Ohio area. The family was comprised of "mother" Ann Reider, "father" T. H. Dudgeon, and their "children," Jeri-Jean Trannett and Donald Campbell.

Interlarded with the live action sequences were many films and slides, some going back many years. Musical trends throughout the 75-year period were added as an incidental gimmick to give the show pep but on occasion diverted the attention from the central theme.

Don Riggs was the capable host-narrator of the program which pointed up quite graphically the wide scope of the Red Cross both on the national and international scene but especially in Franklin County. Conn.

HOW TO WATCH FOOTBALL
With Robert (Sarge) MacKenzie
30 Mins.; Mon., 7:30 p.m.
KQED, San Francisco

Frisco's educational channel, in essaying a half-hour that could be entertaining, waxes dangerously "commercial" and fails completely to entertain with "How to Watch Football."

Basic idea—illustrated instruction in some of the finer points of grid—is dandy, but Sarge MacKenzie is terribly pedantic and the Frisco 49ers, a rich pro team, take all the credits, which may or not have some connection with the sale of season tickets.

First eight minutes or so were spent entirely on MacKenzie's learned dissertation on offensive tactics. If viewer is still watching, he then gets five-six minutes of MacKenzie shoving chips around a board into single-wing and T-formations, and some poor stills. Finally, in show's last 15 minutes, comes the film clips illustrating what MacKenzie is discussing.

But what do these clips turn out to be? Shots of a game between the 49ers and the Los Angeles Dons, a member of the All-America Football Conference which has been defunct several years, and shots of a game between the U. of San Francisco and the U. of California during World War II.

A brief chalk talk closes the half-hour.

Prime needs of show are:

1) A livelier interpeter of football who uses less of the game's technical jargon;

2) More and newer film clips;

3) Co-operation of Northern California colleges with the 49ers, thus removing the educational channel's "commercial" taint. Stef.

FRED WARING SHOW
With Fred Waring Jr., Tom Waring, Poley McClintock, Patti Beems, Frank Davis, Gordon Goodman, Leonard Kranendonck, McKay & Charles, Glee Club, others
Producer-Director: Bil Hobin
Writer: Jack Dolph
60 Mins., Tues. (24), 8 p.m.
CHEVROLET
NBC-TV, from New York
(Campbell Ewald)

Fred Waring has been a staple on the musical marts for nearly four decades with a trademarked variety of rhythmics. Waring on his Tuesday night NBC-TV session on behalf of Chevrolet reviewed his career in the orchestral field starting with the time in 1916 when a piano and three banjos comprised Waring's Pennsylvanians. Since then, his musical organization has grown to one of the largest in the pop field. Waring regards the human voice as an integral part of the orchestral structure, and addition of the choristers makes for an impressive organization numerically as well as qualitatively.

Of course in reviewing a career spanning nearly a half-century a little more drama might have been infused. It almost appeared that after its formation, the band became adult immediately with arrangements in the 20s pretty much as they are today.

The Waring format is virtually the same as when he first made an impact on video some years ago. Some of the personnel like singer Gordon Goodman are still the same. Then there are the vets like Tom Waring and Poley McClintock.

At times, Waring created a nostalgic feeling. Numbers like "Sing Like the Birdies" are remembered from way back, and are still serviceable today. When hearing these stalwarts, it seems difficult to imagine an era, either on radio or television when there wasn't a sponsored show for the Waring crew. Come to think of it, the outfit still sounds the same, only sight has been added and the crew has become adept at visual as well as aural tricks. Jose.

GET TO THE POINT
With Brent Gunts, Jay Grayson, Don Spatz, Joe Croghan, Betty Bupp, Paul Sheilds
Producer: Brent Gunts
Director: John Michael White
30 Mins.; Sun., 7 p.m.
Sustaining
WBAL-TV, Baltimore

This local panel entry packaged by Brent Gunts is a faint carbon of more than just one network guessing game. Moderator and panel vs. guest and "secret," "same name," "line" or, as in this case, "point" isn't exactly new stuff.

Entertainment values in such a format are always inherent in the "secret." Comic content in guest's "points" misfired consistently on the preem of this one but even with fresher material, the inescapable contrast with the Goodson & Todman shows and the general panel saturation on the nets won't help here.

A sampling of the preem's panel stumpers included a lady with a jar of frozen lightning bugs, a rather formidable dowager with the largest female dog in Maryland (an Irish wolfhound, incidentally), and the chaperone who will accompany Miss Maryland to Atlantic City next month. Al Herndon, WBAL-TV's weathercaster, was another guest whose "point" went too far for too little in the laugh department. He was accompanied by six matrons whose first names corresponded to the female names to be applied to the first six hurricanes this summer.

If the panel doesn't "get the point," each panelist drops two dollars into a kitty. This is given to a viewer whose phone number is picked from those sent in providing the viewer can answer a special jackpot question.

Panelists are mostly WBAL staffers while moderator Brent Gunts is a familiar face to daytime hausfrau audiences.

John Michael White's direction was adequate though his panel was too often crowded too tightly into the frame. Burm.

"The ratings we are getting bear out the fact that BABY TIME is delivering a large audience of young mothers. In some markets we are getting nearly 50% of all mothers with babies one year old and younger — that's pretty near to saturation.

Moreover, BABY TIME is outpulling many competing programs which are supposed to offer more in the way of entertainment, programs which have a potential audience that includes young and old, mothers and non-mothers. Our salesmen are enthusiastic about BABY TIME."

Produced in cooperation with American Medical Association

This is a unique and powerful "plus." It means that what this program presents will be treated as authoritative by its viewers. It means, further, that the products presented in the show, inevitably must inherit prestige, and will therefore be given additional respect and consideration.

Format-Each "Baby Time" program discusses and illustrates a particular phase of child care and training. Discussion is non-technical and it is enlivened by utilizing a real baby and mother. Nurse Warren works with the baby and mother to graphically demonstrate the discussion. Dr. Bauer* adds pertinent medical comments and professional evaluation. He particularly directs his comments to uncovering the myths and misconceptions that so often cause mothers unnecessary fears and anxieties.

Informative, Yet Entertaining-Not a clinical, sick room or laboratory approach. "Baby Time" material is presented for easy comprehension . . . with warmth and humor, yet with obvious authority—and spiced with smile provoking scenes of baby. In a move to revitalize the concept of network radio, NBC jettisoned the omnibus "Weekday" series and has come up with this big across-the-board layout of live band shows. NBC, in short, is trying to turn back the tide by (1) bringing back live radio and (2) reviving the band biz.

On both counts, NBC is facing a rocky, uphill climb. Firstly, the idea that "live" performances on radio are superior to recorded ones harks from an era that has long since died. Emcee Bert Parks may repeat a dozen or so times each morning that "this show is coming to you live," but who cares besides Petrillo? What's decisive is the quality of the entertainment that ultimately comes out of the loudspeaker, and the housewife, who's the evident target of this show, isn't likely to care whether it's live, recorded or taped.

Secondly, there's no getting around the fact that bands don't have the same impact today as they once did. Show biz, and radio, has undergone some radical evolutions since the name bands were a potent factor and the wish to bring back the band biz is not a substitute for the hard facts of life.

Certainly, the kickoff show Monday (30) of the "NBC Band-stand" did little to advance the cause of pop orchs. It was a lacklustre presentation with no real regard for programming pace. Instead of swinging, the show plodded along yearning for the good old days. Housewives younger than 40 must have wondered what some of the talk was about.

Under this series' setup, four name bands are to work the show for a couple of weeks apiece, each crew working in 15-minute or half-hour segments. For the opener, there was Guy Lombardo, Wayne King, the Dorsey brothers and Freddy Martin. Except for a rousing session with the Tommy & Jimmy Dorsey crew, the music was generally sweet, and in the case of the Wayne King pickup from Chicago, more than a bit sticky. While the absence of rock 'n' roll on this show may be considered a welcome relief, there's no reason to go overboard in the other direction.

Songwriter Johnny Mercer, who was the opening day's guest, turned up every quarter hour or so to plug his songs. He provided some of the best stuff on the show, even though his strictly hep style of vocalizing didn't quite fit into the general square musical mood.

Bert Parks, as emcee, is no doubt audience "insurance" for this show. His fast, bouncy patter lends an air of brightness to the proceedings. Unfortunately, his and the bandleaders' script called for too much retrospection to the past glories of the band biz.

In conjunction with the two-hour radio layout, NBC also has a half-simulcast on its tv web from 10:30 to 11. The half-hour video stanza was set in a handsomely dressed N.Y. studio with a hotel room decor. It was an introductory session in which Parks brought on a flock of the bandleaders who are due to appear on the series. They joined in a dixieland session on "Johnson Rag," while Lombardo's orch and vocalists played for the rest of the session. A couple of Arthur Murray dancers were spotlighted in the "I Could Have Danced All Night" number, but otherwise, it was a straight musical presentation enlivened by Parks' emceeing.

Commercial spots were not prominent throughout the two-hour radio session. Herm.

PATTY CAVIN'S SALUTE

WRC-NBC, Washington, D.C.

This six weeks' series, probing the military manpower shortages as it affects the American family, is that rare local show. It has not only won the attention of the network, but segments of it are to be used on NBC. It is only natural that the company headed by Gen. Sarnoff, chairman of the National Security Training Commission, should have more than passing interest in the subject of military manpower. But series itself, as it emerged under the capable craftsmanship of WRC femmecaster Patty Cavin, merits wide distribution and careful listening.

Series, carried within the framework of the daily 45-minute WRC feature, "Patty Cavin Show," roamed all over the field in its ef-

FIVE STAR MATINEE
With David Wayne, Joyce Gordon, Lyle Sudrow, Karl Swenson, Nelson Olmsted, Peter Lazer

The soap-opera apparently continues to be the most important in the daytime listening scheme, many years having gone by with little occuring to disturb that theory. In the case of NBC, the aim indicated is to make these soapers bigger, with a name narrator-host, and having stories based upon the works of well-known writers.

On initial try on "Five Star Matinee" Monday (30), the results seem to indicate that the net effect will be virtually the same as any afternoon strip, even with the gaudier trappings. First story, "Night of the Execution" was based on a yarn by Faith Baldwin, and adapted for radio by George Lefferts. Here's a sweet dame, married to a fifstclass Simon Legree, who would turn her out into the cold and take the children from her on the basis of framed evidence. She wishes he were dead and sure enough, the guy obliges, and she spends the rest of her life doing penance after one of the stablehands confesses that he cashed the gent in. But, as it turns out, he did it to get the wife off the hook. The drama is turgid, the plot hackneyed and the rhetoric is swollen. Despite all the dressing, it's gaited a few notches below the mental level of what now goes on in the name of the soaps.

Joyce Gordon played the suffering and Lyle Sudrow the sadistic husband in the ten-twent-thirt vein. David Wayne contributes little as narrator host and the cliches of the proceedings are stressed even more in the production and direction.

JAZZ UNDER THE STARS
With Sidney Gross, Duke Ellington Orch, Chico Hamilton Quintet, others
Producer: Gross
Director: Tom Shea
55 Mins., Sat. (28), 10:05 p.m.
ABC, from Bridgeport, Conn.

ABC Radio picked up a 55-minute portion of the Connecticut Jazz Festival at Fairfield University, Conn., Saturday (28) that was so-so jazz and bad radio. Sidney Gross, who does a Sabbath morning jazz stint on ABC, stepped in as producer and emcee of this special. He had problems in making audio sense out of the doings, that's apparent.

First off, there wasn't much variety. Most of the music was done by a hot 'n' cold combo, the Chico Hamilton Quintet, whose reliance on drum solos made a garble of the music for a radio aud. There were a few numbers by a sweet-voiced gal name of Barbara Lee, but she wasn't strong enough to represent jazz to a national audience. The Duke of Ellington, who got an award from the International Rescue Committee on the program for his music work abroad, closed out the 55-minuter, but he wasn't on long enough with his music to make a deep impression.

What might have served better for a radio audience would be a greater cross-section of the talent available at the college fete. And Gross could have done more to have musicians ready to segue smoothly from one number to the next, even if he had to tape some of the music in advance. Art.

THE FITZGERALDS
With Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald
Producer: Steve White
Director: Allin Robinson
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 2:30 p.m.
Participations
WRCA, New York

Ed Fitzgerald, out a year because of illness, has rejoined his wife in this weekday afternoon half-hour strip, and the veteran Mr. & Mrs. team offer a light, warm talkfest.

What they have to say isn't on the weighty side, no complex or provoking issues, but in a very professional style they glean over the bon bons of news, ideas and books in a manner which should be enjoyable to the distaff side at home.

For their afternoon stint Monday (30), their good judgment in what to talk about was evident. In the opening—after the weekend—they light into the problem of how to travel on the road, a nightmare problem to millions of New Yorkers who spend hours in weekend traffic jams. Much time on the preem was also spent on the book "For the Love of A King," written by the wife of the deposed Yugoslav monarch. Ed Fitzgerald has pretty strong feelings on the pitable lot of this royal household.

Pegeen lent a homey touch in a number of interludes. Because he was away so long, Ed, perhaps rightfully, had much of the mike time on the initialer. The team, one of the first on radio, also is subbing for vacationing Tex and Jinx on WRCA's evening "Weekdays at the Waldorf" show.

THREESCORE AND FIVE
With H. V. Kaltenborn, others
Producer: Dorothy Culbertson
Director: George Voutsas
Writers: Harold Blum, William Welch
30 Mins.; Wed., 10:30 p.m.
NBC, from New York

An interesting, informative and well produced series on the problems of the aged has been turned out by NBC, in association with the Twentieth Century Fund. Veteran commentator H. V. Kaltenborn, apparently feeling a good deal of empathy with those threescore and five and over, does a fine job.

The preem deals with the topic of income for older people and the subsequent seven shows in the series, to be aired on the net the same time on Wednesdays, covers topics ranging from health to participation in community life. The initialer indicates that this is top-notch public service programming, done with insight and a dramatic sense. A minor weakness seems to be too much use of statistical information. The program, as indicated by the preem, has enough material to offer, without going heavy on abstract statistics. A few significant figures would suffice.

Highlighted in the preem were transcriptions of Kaltenborn interviews with aged people from many walks of life and from many areas in the country. Additionally, Kaltenborn canvassed the program of the U.S. Social Security Administration by talking with the agency's commissioner. Interviews were held with an AFL-CIO official and a pension administrator of Consolidated Edison, a public utility which has its own pension plan. The commentary, interviews and transcription added up to a survey-in-depth which proved provocative and enlightening.

NBC's New York flagship WRCA is carrying the series on Thursdays at 9:30, instead of Wednesdays at 10:30 on the remainder of the net.

Radio Followup Comment

Recollections at 30

Ed Herlihy's "Recollections at 30," regular NBC 30-minute Thursday night slot to commemorate that network's 30 years of broadcasting, is a nostalgic interlude which should make a good album, properly edited. It has all the ingredients for a good package and NBC's subsidiary RCA Victor should send for the tapes and do something with it as a permanent memento, practically as it has been edited and emceed by Herlihy. On this stint the listener is asked if he recalls "when they did-tap-dancing on radio" and Ken Christy's NBC Minstrels are paraded, with just that stint.

John J. Anthony's "advice"; Fibber McGee & Molly's "Old-timer" routine; Kate Smith, in excellent voice with her "This Is Real"; Ben Bernie "and all the Lads" in a characteristic pot-pourri (which conjures up what a terrific tv personality "the ole maestro" would have made today, had he lived); Frank Lynch tenoring (he of Keller Sisters & Lynch later) was part of Bernie's "Lads." All combined into a warm package. Bob Howard was credited for directing. Undoubtedly the rest of the series is a trove of fine material for further albuming. Abel.

So They Say

In getting the flavor and almost the smell of war from selected tape recordings made during the Korean conflict, intelligibility suffered somewhat in this special CBS "So They Say" broadcast, aired Friday (27) evening from 9:30 p.m. to 9:55 p.m. The sound of exploding shells and firearms were so loud in sequences as to muffle the words of the G.I., or the commentator.

But time and again the clear voice of CBS' United Nations correspondent Larry LeSeuer came through as narrator to bridge the moments which may have been

TV Sets Biggest Cost Factor In U.S. Recreation

Washington, July 31.

The American public spent over $13.000,000.000 on all types of recreation last year, the largest share going to the purchase of radio and television sets, records and musical instruments. Figures have just been compiled by the U.S. Dept. of Commerce.

The public plunked down $2,360,000,000 for the purchases, with the large bulk of the money going for tv sets. In addition, another $664,000,000 was spent on repairs of radio and video receivers.

While tv continued in the forefront, there were signs of a comeback for motion pictures. The public bought $1,286.000,000 worth of tickets to film houses last year, the best record in the past four or five years.

Attendance at legit and opera also climbed last year, with $221,000,000 spent for tickets. It, too, was the best year in the past four or five. The major spectator sports —baseball, football, etc.,—grossed $231,000,000. Other recreation spending ranged from the purchase of books, magazines and sheet music, to garden seeds, pleasure boats, toys and betting at the pari mutuels.

outlets. Of the 149 which lost money, 57 were UHF and 12 were pre-freeze VHF stations.

Profits of 93 pre-freeze VHF stations (other than those owned by networks) totaled $81,900,000 and accounted for about 55% of the industry's earnings. In 1954, these outlets earned a total of $67,600.000 and accounted for about 75% of the industry's profits.

The report was notable in that it marked the first year in which the post-freeze VHF stations recorded an aggregate profit. The 225 VHF outlets which reported on their 1955 operations made $4,800,000. In the previous year the 177 VHF stations which reported suffered an overall loss of $3,800,000.

While the UHF stations as a whole continued to lose money, their losses were substantially reduced in 1955. The 103 ultra highs which reported on last year's operations lost a total of $4,500,000. In 1954, when 125 U's reported, their losses aggregated $10,000,000.

Some stations which got on the air last year got in the black, according to the report. Of 55 outlets which reported on only part of the year's operations, 10 recorded profits. They were all V's.

Of the 187 post-freeze VHF stations which were in operation all of 1955, the report showed that 104 made money. Of 92 UHF outlets which were in operation the full year, 28 reported profits. However, two stations in this group subsequently went off the air.

BBC-TV DRAMA AS LEGITER FOR FALL

London, July 31.

Under a deal closed last week Rodney Ackland's teleplay, "The Seddons," featured on BBC-TV last month is to be adapted for stage presentation and will go out under the H. M. Tennent banner in the fall.

The deal, agented by Eric Glass, called for rejection of screen offers and pic rights are being kept intact for the time being. Frith Banbury, currently casting "The Diary of Anne Frank," (also for Tennent), is to stage "The Seddons."

For the time being the Glass agency will veto all moves for an American telecast of the play, although existing contracts permit a BBC repeat within 12 months of the original production.

wilders me to see this. Especially since there are several Negro actors, whose work I have seen before, whom I would like to see again. (Why not give us viewers a chance to get tired of them, if we would, just as we get tired of those few actors we see on every channel, every program, every hour of every week?) When I talk about this with my friends—many of whom feel the same way—they always suggest that we write to The Powers That Be and say that we enjoyed so-and-so's performance and would like to see that actor again. We write. It never seems to do any good. And yet, it's always said that tv is trying to please the public and will give it what it wants if it will only make its wishes known. What's the trouble here? I'm not asking for Negro actors—good or bad—all over the lot. I am asking to be allowed to see and enjoy a good actor (no matter what color he is) in a good play more than once in a blue moon!

My brother-in-law gives me all kinds of reasons why this can't be . . . none of which satisfy me. For one thing, he tells me that the buying South won't like it. Well, there is good deal that is democratic that the buying South won't like, and—on the other hand—it is being proven right this minute that part of the South has democratic ideals which show up Northern hypocrisy. Why doesn't tv take a chance and appeal to that part of the enlightened South and let the rest go hang?

also was reflected in the report. Only 8.3% stated they telecast a feature once, while 62.7% said twice, 23.4% three times and 2.8% five times. Asked in light of the fresh feature packages becoming available, what their plans are, a rising 17.9% of the stations stated they would use features only once and a declining 52.4% twice and 16.6% three times.

Regarding repeat runs of telefilms, 77% of the tv stations were found to use reruns. Of those stations not using repeats, sponsor refusal and station policy rather than ratings were found to be the primary causes.

Asked whether local demands for films are seasonal, 57.2% responded yes while 42.8% put themselves in the negative column. Of those replying in the affirmative, the fall season, as expected, was found to be the most popular.

Taking a look into the local advertising picture for juvenile appeal programs, the survey found that 65.5% of the respondents had from one to five local advertisers sponsoring juvenile syndicated films. 12.5% of the stations had six or more of these advertisers and only 11% of the stations had none of such advertisers.

ABC's report, just completed, will be mailed to all stations participating in the survey.

fort to pinpoint the complex problem of the reason for the drift of trained personnel from the armed services to private industry. There was logic and good showmanship in the progression of the series—from interviews with top men in the Department of Defense; with Gen. Lewis Hershey, director of Selective Service; with leaders in industry; right through to talks with the heads of the different services and with the men themselves. Always the problem was translated in terms of its effect on the family of the man in uniform.

Show caught, at end of series, for example, took the form of a "salute to the U.S. Marine Corps." Treatment, which followed the pattern of the series, combined straight interview with drama, on-the-scene excitement and sounds, and deft musical background and bridges. Since the theme was military, music fit in especially well, and lent interest and color to show, besides avoiding the pitfalls of overlong dialog.

The Marine segment included commands by a drill instructor at the Marine base at San Diego, a particularly timely bit in view of the current Parris Island probe, plus activity around the base swimming pool, to accent recreational facilities. The actual voices of the men and instructor, plus the chanting of, "Honey Babe," the Leathernecks' unofficial marching song, added interest and variety.

An interview with Brig. Gen. James Berkley, Assistant Chief of Staff of the Corps, accented the serious loss of trained personnel, after the investment of large sums of money for this training. Though the longterm advantages of service life, contrasted to the lure of higher pay in private industry, was pointed up, it is to Mrs. Cavin's credit that, at all times, both sides of the picture were shown.

A visit to Quantico, the Marine School in Virginia, wrapped up show with interviews with the captain of a student platoon; with a femme Marine trainee; and finally with a technical sergeant, a former commercial radio rep, now in the Marines as a radio-tv correspondent.

Show, with its careful attention to detail, its painstaking research, its newsworthines, plus a dramatic documentary quality, rates kudos for la Cavin, who conceived and executed the idea, as well as for director Everett Severe, and vet newsman Baukhage, who served as special consultant. Flor.

lost by the noise-making level of grim warfare.

The program, commemorating the third anniversary of the Korean armistice which went into effect just three years ago, was a shocking and dramatic reminder of the first U.N. war. The tape recordings and LeSeuer's commentary vividly portrayed the battles and the truce period.

A brief recording of President Eisenhower's message at the termination of the conflict opened the program. Additionally, recorded interviews with Army Chief of Staff Maxwell Taylor and General Matthew B. Ridgway (U.S.A., Ret.) attempted to answer the question of the lessons which the U. S. should have learned from the Korean war. Gen. Ridgway felt the Communists should never be trusted and Gen. Taylor put an accent on preparedness. The program wound up with a statement by South Korea's representative and a transcribed on-the-spot record by a CBS correspondent in South Korea.

All in all, the program added up to a dramatic documentary of the conflict and a cogent looksee at some of the problems which must be faced up to in that troubled area. Horo.

Alternate plans are proposed to provide for four all-VHF or all-UHF stations in Miami and Jacksonville, Fla. The Albany, N. Y., area would be assigned three VHF stations or be made all-UHF. New Orleans would be assigned three or four VHF channels or be made all-UHF.

ABC said the plan "would provide an interim solution which would be acceptable during the substantial period which must ensue before the long-range proposals (for all-UHF) bear fruit."

THE INSIDE STORY OF SUSIE... PRIVATE SECRETARY

They (the public) laughed when she (Susie) sat down to type, and that is what we hoped would happen...and that was four years ago—but the thing that is important is that the public is still laughing.

The place, CBS...the host, The American Tobacco Company...the agency, BBD&O...the name of the show, "PRIVATE SECRETARY" ...the star, Ann Sothern...the producer, Jack CHERTOK...Altogether this happy combination has made "PRIVATE SECRETARY" one of TV's most exciting and successful shows.

The formula for a success of this kind is, of course, a cinch—anyone can do it (with the right combination)—all you need is:

First, a good, sound, basic idea. Then find (and lock in a room) a dozen excellent writers (this is very important) and keep them at 98.6° temperature. Also see to it that you are at least twenty scripts ahead of production at all times (this will help to prevent ulcers all around and tends to keep the agency boys nice and happy)...Then find a top star (but make sure she's a real pro and knows her business...like Ann Sothern). Then get a good director (to be on the safe side better get a spare, directors have a tendency to break their necks in small sports cars). Next assemble a top flight technical crew (be sure the cameraman is a wizard)...then when you have all of these easy-to-find ingredients, turn them over to a producer (he should have the wisdom of Solomon, the wit of a Fred Allen and the ways of a Balkan diplomat) who understands how to subtly mix these highly volatile ingredients week after week and then, presto! you've got it made...a hit show!

The CHERTOK Company always follows the above formula with all its shows, and the results are, as you would expect, consistently high-rating, low cost shows with highly satisfied sponsors.

With "PRIVATE SECRETARY" we've had a double success. On a first run basis under the title of "PRIVATE SECRETARY" we have a happy, satisfied sponsor with The American Tobacco Company, and on a second run basis under the title of "SUSIE" we have many, many happy, satisfied sponsors from coast to coast.

Other Chertok Company projects in different stages of work include a new type ANTHOLOGY series . . . a series about a GAL PRESS AGENT starring Jan Sterling . . . a melodrama of the sea (tentatively being called "CAPTAIN McQUEEN") and a cracker jack Western called "FRONTIER JUDGE" starring Leon Ames (The pilot on FRONTIER JUDGE is finished and ready for screening.) For quick details on any of these shows call HOllywood 3-5106.

Ship Disaster Coverage

snared a rating that topped the competing "Lux Theatre."

ABC-TV cameramen were over the scene in airplanes from early Thursday morning on. Other ABC-TV crews were standing by at Nantucket and Boston. WABC radio remained on the air virtually all night, broadcasting bulletins soon after news of the collision.

Mutual utilized WOR's "Flying Studio," manned by Bob Garrity, for on-the-spot coverage. Additionally, MBS newsmen John Scott, Harry Hennessey, Frank Singiser and Henry Gladstone implemented the air-borne reports with accounts from piers, ships' offices, Coast Guard and Navy headquarters and rescue ships.

Stations of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., which recently broke its affiliation with NBC, had their first big opportunity to utilize their concept of offering localized coverage of national news events. Rod MacLeish, news director of WBZ-WBZA, Boston and Springfield as soon as he got word set up headquarters in Nantucket, interviewing Coast Guard pilots and others coming back from the collision scene. From early Thursday morning on, he began sending hourly reports by beeper phone back to Boston, from whence they were fed out to the other WBC radio and tv stations. WBC continued its coverage of the story as it reached New York, through a tie-up with WOV, whose president, Morris Novik, was rescued from the Italian ship.

New York indie WPIX sent its roving reporter John Tillman and a newsreel film crew to the collision scene, following this with a "live" remote pickup of the docking of the Ile de France.

WOV's Ship-To-Shore Coverage

On the radio side in N.Y., WOV made a ship-to-shore contact with its president Morris Novik. Throughout the day, the Italian-language station broadcast bulletins and reported many calls from listeners who had relatives aboard the sunken vessel.

WOR highlighted special programs from Garrity's "Flying Studio" and interview programs with survivors. WMGM remained on the air all night to give complete details of the rescue operation. New York Times' WQXR, which usually signs off at 1 a.m. and normally returns to the air at 6 a.m., began broadcasting at 4 a.m. Thursday morning in light of the disaster.

Elsewhere around the country stations were alerted to the emergency. WJAR-TV, Providence, R.I., supplied NBC with its initial films. WHDH, Boston, which stayed on top of the news as soon as the first bulleting was flashed, featured an interview the following morning with a doctor at the Nantucket Hospital describing the landing of four early survivors.

WIP, a Mutual affiliate in Philadelphia, held a short wave telephone broadcast with Philadelphia Mayor Richardson Dilworth from the Ile de France. Dilworth, who had been abroad the Italian liner, supplied a harrowing account of what happened. He also commented on the great rescue operation.

WEEI, Boston, stayed on the air all night, foregoing its usual sign-off period of 1:15 a.m. The accounts of WEEI newsmen, flown to the scene, were integrated in CBS' reports as well as those of the affiliate.

Hartford

that the TBS be allowed to put up a VHF'r here. Denied was the application of the Hartford Telecasting Co.

The FCC has before it a proposal to move channel 3 from here to Providence and make this an all-UHF area. Naturally, all the Connecticut Valley UHF stations are supporting this move. Even if the channel is allowed to remain here, there is the possibility of a court fight for the VHF'r. Hartford Telecasting has yet to make up its mind whether to court contest the FCC findings.

For the TBS it's a paper victory. For after nine years of trying, the radio operators are a long way from getting a tv station on the air. Reliable reports have it that the Travelers Insurance Co. progeny has spent over $1,000,000 in an effort to get a station on the air in that period of time.

TBS first applied for a station in 1947 when channels 8 and 10 were assigned to the Hartford area. Then came the deep freeze. In the reallocation of 1952 Hartford Telecasting and WDRC, as well as WTIC, became contenders for the newly-assigned channel 3. Fifteen months later WDRC cleared its skirts of the three-way fight by agreeing to merge with Travelers, if it won the channel.

A hearing conference opened in Oct., 1953, for the transference of exhibits, etc. A three months series of hearings got under way the early part of 1954 and resulted in an examiner's verdict for the Travelers.

In the event TBS eventually gets channel 3 on the air, WDRC will go on the market. WDRC is a lucrative CBS affiliate.

Also, in the event channel 3 goes airwise, there is the question of programming. CBS and NBC have both purchased local UHF outlets. The former has purchased WGTH and the latter WKNB. Both purchases are still subject to FCC approval.

Cake Mix Study

product catagories were studied: desert mixes, cold cereals, dog food, candy bars, baked beans, cake mixes, face soap, evaporated milk, floor wax, frankfurters, salt, scouring pads and toothpaste. Web has gotten what it feels is the effect of tv on a few of the products' sales, but has not finished the entire study because of the large amount of data involved.

Each questionnaire, the network states, took about 45 minutes to do. And the report, it feels, is validated, even though limited to just six markets, since it was in near perfect check and balance with findings of the 1950 census for the entire country. For instance, the six-city sample found that 61% of the 3,000 families were home owners, while the 150 national average was only slightly lower. Negro homes were 11% of the total ABC-Trendex sample and the same percentage held among total U. S. families in 1950, and so on. So far, 75,000 IBM cards have been used in tabulating the results.

Cake mixer, as an example, was one of the categories with most of the information completed. Fifty-nine percent of all housewives queried (interviews were directed solely at them) use cake mixes. Half are light users and half heavy users, the arbitrary dividing line being those that spend more than $1 a month for such products are considered "heavy." Pillsbury and Betty Crocker, the survey finds, are used "most often." Pillsbury gets 37% of the users and BC 36%. They beat out other brands by a wide margin.

Getting to "MMC" brass tacks, ABC discloses that in all video homes, 24% used Pillsbury and 22 used Betty Crocker. But of the "MMC" homes interviewed (which carries the Crocker line), 27% used BC and 26% Pillsbury, reversing the general situation. In homes not viewing "Mickey," 22% used Pillsbury and 19% Crocker. Point is that while Crocker was 14% to the rear of Pillsbury in on-"Mickey" households, it was up 4% over Pillsbury in homes viewing the 5 to 6 p.m. cross-the-board program.

A total of 50 tv shows were included in the survey by name, 25 being daytimers, the rest at night. On all other stanzas where cake mixes were advertised, Betty Crocker had less usage than Pillsbury.

Joe Schrank gets the nod for the adaptation of Somerset Maugham's "The Letter" for CBS-TV, which will star Susan Hayward, and he will also share screen credit with Shakespeare on the tv adaptation of the Old Vic's presentation of "Romeo and Juliet" on "Showcase."

Kraft's NBC-TV Wednesday night dramatic segment has scheduled "One Way West," by Lou Pelletier, for Aug. 1 presentation while Jack Kelsey has been set as writer of the new "Secret Storm" daytime strip starting July 30. Frank Barton, who did the last CBS-TV "Adventure" show the past season, has just finished preparation of a new Army show, "Get Set, Go" for Dancer, Fitzgerald & Sample.

Theatre Guild-produced "U. S. Steel" show has purchased an original teleplay, "The Long Boat of the William Brown," by Alfred Brenner. "Studio 57" has bought a half-hour tv play, "My Friends, The Birds," by Howard Richardson and William Berney.

Adrian Welles has just been signed by CBS-TV for exclusive deal as one of its stable of writers for hour and 90-minute vidramas. Hal Welles' "The Night I Died," "Laugh It Off" and "The Call" set for "Mystery Writers Theatre," with same show coming up with Mal Wald and Jack Jacobs' "Brokers' Special," "Get Off My Back" and "The Splinter."

On the directorial front, Mel Ferber has been assigned to direct the Frankie Laine CBS-TV summer show, which goes in as the Arthur Godfrey replacement this week; Don Richardson and David Alexander doing U. S. Steel segments and Len Valenta returning to "Big Story." "Producers Showcase" presentation of its "The Lord Don't Play Favorites" musical (which opens the new season) will be directed by Clark Jones.

WLW's Statement

Meanwhile Bob Dunville, prexy of Crosley Broadcasting Corp., has issued a clarification of WLW's status in Cincinnati in relation to its future dual affiliation. Crosley issued the following statement:

"WLW Radio, effective July 23, began broadcasting several of the ABC soapoperas, "Whispering Streets," "When A Girl Marries," and "My True Story," on a delayed basis. Previously, WLW began carrying the ABC Don McNeil "Breakfast Club." Robert E. Dunville stated emphatically that this move will not in any way affect WLW's continuing to carry the NBC programs. Many stations in the area, apparently, have decided to localize their schedules, with the net result that satisfactory network service throughout the WLW area could not be maintained.

"Conceivably there may be additional network shows carried from Mutual and ABC in the future, Mr. Dunville reitcrated. However, this will not affect the NBC affiliation nor does it mean the station is changing affiliation, but rather WLW is carrying more network shows from more networks.

"In making this announcement however, Mr. Dunville added that there are in the making, to be scheduled soon, several new local programs which are designed to meet the modern demand of radio in the WLW area."

Columbia Hitting Fall Market With Multi-Pronged Merchandising Drive

Columbia Records is relying on product, not deals, to get its new fall program under way. That's the pitch laid out by Col prexy Goddard Lieberson as the diskery's sales staffers start to fan out around the country with the presentation of the fall line to retailers. It's estimated that close to 12,000 persons will get a looksee at the new program in 65 meetings during the next two weeks. Conclave for the N. Y. area dealers was held at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel last night (Tues.).

Pegged to "Your Future Is Sound" theme, platform for Col's fall campaign is to get top product into the stores in what used to be known in the trade as the "slow season." In briefing the company's distribs at its national meet in Estes Park, Colo., July 21-24, Lieberson hammered home the point that for the most part record selling was oldfashioned and outmoded. "Creative selling," he stressed, "was as important as creating the product." He also pointed out that the Columbia Record Club was part of the new sell and that it's effect on building new record buyers has been positive. He also indicated that figures on the club's activities may be released in the near future.

Along with the new product, 10 popular and six Masterworks albums for August and 10 popular and eight Masterworks albums for September, Col will supply the dealers with a batch of merchandising promotion ideas. For the two-month drive, dealers will receive an 8% return privilege on Masterworks and a 4% return

Disneyland's 14 Albums in 1956

Disneyland Records, launched last May 15, is already swinging into high gear with 14 albums set for release by the end of the year. Label already has lined up 23 distributors to handle the line around the country.

On the upcoming album release schedule are soundtrack sets from old Walt Disney pix. Among them are "Bambi," "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and "Cinderella." Disneyland soundtrackers already on release are "Pinocchio" and Song of the South." Also set for release is a soundtrack set from Disney's "People and Places" series tagged "Samoa and Switzerland" and a soundtracker from his upcoming full-lengther "Westward Ho The Wagon."

Disney himself will bow on wax doing the narration for "Walt Disney Takes You to Disneyland." The package will be a musical tour of the five lands. Also on tap are albums by Tutti Camarata, label's musical director, by folk singers Frances Archer and Beverly Gile, and the Disneyland Park Band.

King Sisters Due For Disk Comeback on Cap

Phoenix, July 31.

Four King Sisters, once among top gal singing groups on disks, apparently are headed for a comeback on platters due to airchecks of their warbling on the Jack Carson Show over CBS this past year. Glenn Wallichs, Capitol Records prexy, played the airchecks anonymously for his a-and-r men and their reaction resulted in a deal.

First recording session is set for next week, with Lee Gillette supervising the date for Capitol. Initial cutting session of four sides probably will be part of a 12-tune album to kick off the return of the warblers. Marilyn, who was featured on the airchecks auditioned, is the newest of the King Sisters, augmenting Yvonne, Alyce, and Luise. Girls have just finished a week's stay at Silver Spur nitery here.

Ukulele Ike Back on Wax With His Hits of 1920s

Cliff (Ukulele Ike) Edwards, hit disker of the 1920s, is returning to the wax fold via a Disneyland Records LP. Package, which is tagged "Ukulele Ike Sings Again," includes 16 tunes he made famous during the '20s.

Among them are "I Cried For You," which Edwards' claims sold 1,720,000 platters, and "June Night," which soared to a 3,200,000 sales mark. Latter disk featured Edwards on uke and Joe Pardo on tuba. His recordings for Vocalion and Pathe, among other labels in those days are reported to have racked up close to 74,000,000 sales.

RKO-Unique Go After Film-Disk Parlay on Tunes

RKO Pictures and its subsid Unique Records are working out plans to coordinate film and disk activities. According to Marty Machad, Unique exec recently returned from studio huddles on the Coast, the stress will be placed on getting more commercial tunes spotlighted in the pix for tieins with the disk company.

Latest tunes in the RKO-Unique parlay are "Will You Love Me Tomorrow," from "The Young Stranger," and the title song from "The First Traveling Saleslady." "Tomorrow" has been grooved by Bob Grabot while "Saleslady" was etched by Tommy Mara." Ineidentally, the background theme music for "Saleslady" will be published by Lamas Music, Unique's publishing subsid. Another tune in the pic, "A Corset Can Do A Lot For A Lady," was cut for Unique by Fran Warren. Tune, however, is being published by Mills Music, which had a tiein with RKO up until a few months ago.

In line with closer liaison between pic company and diskery, Unique is mulling switching its artists and repertoire activities, headed up by Joe Lasky, to the Coast. Move will depend on the number of artists currently being lined up who are based on the Coast. Meantime, RKO is holding on to the building which housed Capitol Records until the latter diskery moved into its own circular building a few months ago. If Unique's a&r division switches to the Coast, it'll move into Capitol's old h.q. Label's sales division, however, will remain in New York.

VICTOR INKS LEE WILEY, OTHERS FOR JAZZ DISKS

Lee Wiley, jazz songstress who has been heard sporadically on some indie labels in recent years, has now been signed by RCA Victor as part of its jazz roster buildup. Fred Reynolds, head of the diskery's jazz operation, plans to cut Miss Wiley shortly with the Ralph Burns orch.

Reynolds also has inked Bob Scobey's Frisco Jazz Band with Clancy Hayes, a dixieland combo which headquarters on the Coast. Band features Scobey on trumpet and Hayes as singer and banjoist. Victor has also added Jack Montrose, tenor saxist and arranger. He'll record on the Coast in the fall.

Ted Fio Rito will be the new bandleader at the Chez Paree nitery in Chicago when it reopens Aug. 8.

BILL MILLER SETS TOP ORCHS

Bill Miller, operator of the Dunes Hotel, has great faith in the name bands as a solution for the ills of Las Vegas. Miller has booked one of the top lineups of name bands ever put together in the area. At this point, after the current show with Billie Holiday and the Jerry Gray orch, he has Count Basie coming in Aug. 2; Norman Granz' "Jazz at the Philharmonic" Aug. 16; Sauter-Finegan orch, Aug. 23; Lionel Hampton, Aug. 30; Stan Kenton, Sept. 6 or Sept. 20, and Les Baxter for Sept. 13.

Miller, giving two concerts nightly along with a free buffet, feels that name bands loom as logical competition for name acts. Having gone through the name-buying stage as talent booker for the Sahara and Royal Nevada Hotels, Miller says that he is now turning his attention to bands as one way to beat the gigantic talent rap. He feels that there is room for a band setup in Las Vegas, which he says was made by the ability of the greenfelt country to give the greatest entertainment value for the tourist dollar.

Miller said that after spending a nominal sum for a room and with meals being an easy bite, the average visitor could afford to drop a few quid at the tables. The situation is getting to the point, according to Miller, where costs of touring Las Vegas will leave less money available for the gambling.

The process of booking acts produces many inequities, Miller declared. He said that there's no reason for an act getting $2,000 in Chicago, then play Las Vegas at $10,000 and back to Lake Tahoe for $1,500. Miller doesn't feel that Las Vegas should abandon name entertainment, but thinks that the buying has gotten out of control.

Up Jim Davis As Victor Exec

James Davis, RCA Victor chief of the custom records division, has been promoted to the post of operations manager of the Victor disk division. He fills the spot formerly held by Howard Letts, who was recently named a Victor v.p. and is now the top administrative aide to v.p. Larry Kanaga, general manager of the disk division.

Davis' slot in the custom department, which presses records for other companies and also handles the RCA Thesaurus, will be filled by Emmett B. Dunn, former controller of the disk division and more recently manager of the custom department's administration. Davis has been with the company since 1940, having joined it as a cost analyst. Dunn came to RCA Victor a year later as an accountant.

Marhoffer Vice Ekstrand

Art Ekstrand has ankled his production manager's post at Columbia Records. He had been associated with Col for the past five years.

Upcoming B'way Shows in Disk Deals; Col Has 'Abner,' Victor Gets Merman

The scramble for original cast albums from the upcoming Broadway legituner season is already under way. Initial firm wrapup was made last week by Columbia Records for "Li'l Abner," while RCA Victor has copped the upcoming Ethel Merman starrer, "Happy Hunting."

Victor's "Happy Hunting" cast set stems from the 50% backing of stems from the 50% backing of the show by California National Productions Inc. (formerly Kagran Corp.), an NBC subsid. Miss Merman recently ankled her exclusive pact with Decca which will obviate a repeat of the rhubarb several years ago on the original cast set of "Call Me Madam."

Although NBC backed "Madam," Victor was forced to issue an original cast set without the star because of Decca's exclusive with Miss Merman. Decca bucked the original cast set with an album of songs from the show featuring Miss Merman and Dick Haymes. It's reported that Miss Merman didn't renew with Decca because of the NBC subsid's backing of "Hunting."

Show, which is set for a Broadway preem in December, has a score by newcomers Harold Karr (music) and Matt Dubey (lyrics). The score will be published by Chappell.

"Li'l Abner," which is being financed by Paramount Pictures, will be Columbia's first original cast set outing of the 1956-57 season. Col was front-runner in the original cast set sweepstakes this past season with the top-selling "My Fair Lady" and "The Most Happy Fella." Victor's original cast album efforts were "Pipe Dream" and "New Faces of 1956." Victor bowed out of cutting "The Vamp" and "Shangri-La," both of which flopped on Broadway.

The score for "Li'l Abner" was written by Johnny Mercer and Gene De Paul. It'll be published by Commander Music, Mercer's publishing firm.

Polka Beat Displaces R&R With Phoenix DJ

Phoenix, July 31.

The polka, rather than the police, is cracking down on rock 'n' roll in this town. KOY here is now stressing the "happy" polka beat rather than "sobbing" rock 'n' roll tunes on its deejay shows.

Bands like Lawrence Welk, Frankie Yankovic, Eddie Habat and Bernie Witkowsky are getting the big play. Mail pull has been okay on the new policy.

'Flying Saucer' Platters Soar; Piracy in High

Whatever the legalistic ballast it's now carrying, "The Flying Saucer" platter which took off early last week is now sparking big traffic on the retail level for the whole business. Even the disk labels, who don't like the lifting of their material in the "Flying Saucer" number, concede that it's given a much needed hypo to sales in a summer period when business is generally the lowest.

Inevitable, also, "The Flying Saucer," which itself is being sued for piracy, is being pirated. Dealers have been offered the platter by sundry characters who are trying to make a fast buck on a fast-buck disk. Bob Buchanan and Dick Goodman, writers and publishers of "The Flying Saucer" on their Luniverse label, compiled the rock 'n' roll satire by taking fragments of recent hits. The publishers and disk companies involved are trying to put the platter out of business via court action brought by attorney Julian T. Abeles (& Bernstein) in behalf of the Music Publishers Protective Assn.

Meantime, revamped versions of the "Flying Saucer" are being turned out by other labels. RPM, a Coast indie, has issued one called "Out of This World With Flying Saucers." Latter disk is made up of new material written by Vick Knight and contains excerpts from their own disks. Clearances have been obtained from the publishers involved. Sara Berner and Dave Barry are featured on the RPM label, which is owned by Joe and Saul Bihari.

Buchanan and Goodman, meantime, are expected to make a big cleanup before any legal action can take effect. No industry exec believes they have a leg to stand on in their use of copyrighted material and other disk artists without permission.

Csida in Hospital

Joe Csida, Trinity Music exec, is bedded in Roslyn, L. I., Park Hospital with an intestinal disorder.

He's being operated on this week.

Mike Conner Ankles Decca

Mike Conner exited Decca Records last Friday (27). He had been with the diskery for the past 11 years, most of it as director of artists relations, publicity and disk jockey promotion.

A replacement for Conner has not yet been designated but it's understood that the post will now be divvied up.

Conner's future tieup is indefinite but he's now mulling several projects and is also considering a shift to the Coast. He joined Decca in 1945 as head of midwestern recording after a stint as a CBS radio announcer in that territory. He was brought east about a year-and-a-half later to head up the artists relations division. As director of deejay promotion, he originated the artists disk jockey promotion tours.

It Figures

A roving VARIETY man was curious, when taken to a near-Munich seaside spa, a charming retreat called the Hotel Bachmair in Egern on the Tegern See, whether Oscar Hammerstein 2d and the late Jerome Kern were ever actually "In Egern on the Tegern See" (excerpt from their "Music In the Air" score). To which the librettist replied:

"I make a specialty of writing songs about bodies of water that I have not seen. I didn't get to the banks of the Mississippi until 20 years after I had written 'Ol' Man River.' Dorothy (Mrs. Hammerstein) made me stoop over and put my hand in its muddy waters."

(It's consistent with the mammy and Dixie legends about most of the Brill Bldg. habitues. Perhaps the saddest confession was made by Harry Ruby who, with the late Bert Kalmar, in the 1920s figured importantly in the Hawaiian song craze. It was many years later when they first visited the Beach of Waikiki that both were considerably brought down by its narrow stretch and relatively unimpressive terrain).

N.Y. Birdland's Powell OK'd for Rival Jazzery

The rivalry on New York's jazz nitery front is easing up. For the first time a Birdland regular has been given the okay to appear at another jazzery in town. The regular is jazz pianist Bud Powell, who'll bring his trio into Greenwich Village's Cafe Bohemia Aug. 24 for a six-week stand.

During the first week of the Powell gig, the alternate combo will be headed up by Phineas Newborn. In for a four-week stand to share the podium with Powell after that will be Miles Davis. Alternate combo for the final week has not yet been set.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Georgia Gibbs: "Happiness Street"-"Happiness Is A Thing Called Joe" (Mercury). "Happiness Street," a swinging number with a cute lyric and a good beat, should break through as a big one. Georgia Gibbs bounces it hard against an excellent background. In this "Happiness" coupling, Miss Gibbs also gives a standout reading to the great oldie on the flip. This standard is surefire program material for jocks.

Don Cornell: "Life Is A Song"-"Heaven Only Knows" (Coral). Don Cornell's belting version of the Joe Young-Fred Ahlert oldie, "Life Is A Song," could drive it all the way. It's a contemporary interpretation that will have juke impact for the kids. "Heaven Only Knows" is a solid new ballad handled in a slow, dramatic tempo also for big impact.

Barbara Lyon: "Puppy Love"-"Don't Ring-a Da Bell" (Capitol). Barbara Lyon, daughter of Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, makes a promising debut on Capitol Records. She shows an attractive set of pipes and a songselling savvy that should make Miss Lyon, a British resident with her parents, click on both sides of the Atlantic. "Puppy Love" is a ballad entry which has stepout potential. The Italo dialect number of the flip is not her cup of tea.

Oreste: "This Same Heart"-"Lord, I'm Glad I Know Thee" (RCA Victor). Oreste, an operatic Maltese-born tenor whose square handle in Oreste Kirkop, bows on RCA Victor with two tunes from the upcoming Paramount pic version of Rudolf Friml's "The Vagabond King" in which he stars. Much like Mario Lanza, Oreste has the power and range to turn up with a pop hit despite the legit quality of his pipes. He adds just the right amount of schmaltz to give it a commercial flavor. "This Same Heart" is an excellent new Friml ballad. Georgie Shaw handles it on the Decca label effectively in the pop crooning manner. On the Victor flip, Oreste does a large-scaled religioso pic number with dramatic punch.

Betty Johnson: "Clay Idol"-"Why Do You Cry" (Bally). Betty Johnson, a songstress who has been turning out some fine sides recently, could hit the jackpot with "Clay Idol." It's down the middle between the pop and folk grooves and she handles the lyric with feeling and simplicity. Like Cathy Carr's "Ivory Tower," it could go all the way. "Why Do You Cry" is okay in a more rhythmic format.

Roger Williams: "Tumbling Tumbleweeds"-"I'll Always Walk With You" (Kap). An interesting arrangement of the standard "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" gives pianist Roger Williams another commercial platter. He gives a highly elaborate keyboard display against an orchestral background, with some added choral effects. Flip is a straight instrumental ballad.

Ray Heatherton: "The Pirate Parrot"-"Alfred, The Air-Sick Eagle" (Cadence). Although Ray Heatherton has the top billing, a couple of feathered friends are real gimmicks on this platter. "The Pirate Parrot" is a cute novelty with lotsa moppet appeal via the interpolations of some real parrot ad libs. Flip has another amusing story to tell about an eagle who didn't like to fly. Heatherton handles the lyrics to both numbers in lucid style.

Johnnie Ray: "In The Candlelight"-"Just Walking In The Rain" (Columbia). Another sign of the changing times: Johnnie Ray now sounds like one of our tamer singers. A couple of years ago, his style was labelled as frantic and emotional. But that was before the rock 'n' roll storm which blew in Elvis Presley. In this coupling, Ray does a couple of nice ballads in a style that can only be described as "restrained."

Jimmy Young: "Rich Man, Poor Man"-"Lonely Nightingale" (London). "Rich Man" is a fine ballad with a catching rhythm and a good lyric idea. British tenor Jimmy Young gives it a strong ride and it should cop spins in this country. "Lonely Nightingale" is a very pretty item also rating attention.

Longhair Reviews

Torelli: Concerti Grossi (Epic). A selection from the concertos of Torelli, an important 17th Century Italian composer, played with flawless taste and artistry by the I Musici string orchestra and soloists, notably violinist Roberto Michelucci.

Erich Kunz: German University Songs (Vanguard). An outstanding collection of songs of "wenching, wining and other irreverent pastimes" rendered vigorously by baritone Erich Kunz with a male chorus and the Vienna Volksoper Orchestra conducted by Franz Litschauer. Translations of the German lyrics are included in this highly attractive package.

Brahms: Symphony No. 2—Tragic Overture (RCA-Victor). Two of Brahms' familiar and much recorded works in solid interpretations by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch's baton. The market for popular longhair repertory can apparently absorb a tremendous number of versions of the same work.

Beethoven: 32 Variations in C Minor; Tchaikovsky: Trio In A Minor (Heritage). Imported performances from Russia by a superlative trio consisting of pianist Emil Gilels, violinist Leonid Kogan and cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, all of whom have achieved prominence in the West. Recording surface at a good LP standard, and indicates steady improvement in the quality of the Russian-imported tapes. Herm.

Album Reviews

Frank Chacksfield Orch: "Close Your Eyes" (London). The tide of mood music continues to rise and the British orchs have been contributing an important part to this phase of the LP market. One of the smoothest and sweetest of the English crews, Frank Chacksfield's orch has packaged another neat collection of standards with Bobby Pratt's trumpet featured. As the title of the set suggests, the numbers are played in a slow, lilting tempo designed for very relaxed listening. Another Chacksfield set, titled "You," also has a lush quality with the repertory framed around a romantic theme.

Frank Sinatra Conducts the Music of Alec Wilder (Columbia). Frank Sinatra is doing a Jackie Gleason in this album, forsaking the trade he knows best for the baton. He is maestroing some offbeat instrumentals by the learned pop composer, Alec Wilder, who clearly knows a lot about chamber music. Sinatra actually conducts one side of this platter which features erudite Wilder numbers like "Air for English Horn," "Theme and Variations," etc. The other side are clever pop compositions played by the Wilder octet, a crew of crackerjack sidemen playing such unlikely instruments as oboe, bassoon, harpsichord, etc. Mitch Miller, Columbia's artists & repertoire chief, keeps his hand in as the oboe sideman.

Joseph Myrow: "Somewhere in the Night" (MGM). Here is an excellent piano LP by a fine composer who can read his own material in standout style. Hollywood film cleffer Joseph Myrow works his way through a songalog consisting of such tunes as "You Make Me Feel So Young," "It Happens Every Night," "Haunting Me," "Velvet Moon," "Autumn Nocturne," and others.

"The Magic Horn" (RCA Victor). The best part of the recent NBC-TV jazz story on the NBC-TV "Alcoa Hour" dramatic series has been captured in the groove by RCA Victor. Whatever the merits of the script, the music on the show was solid. Recreated in this Victor LP are the flock of dixie standards, such as "Struttin' With Some Barbecue," "Dippermouth Blues," "On the Sunny Side of the Street" and others as played by a group, organized by George Wein and featuring the lucid trumpet style of Ruby Braff on most of the tunes.

In addition, a flock of other jazz material has turned up on wax recently. Wilbur De Paris' jazz band has a knockdown session of New Orleans music on the Heritage label. In a more contemporary groove, Milli Vernon, debuting on Storyville Records, makes an uneven impression with a studied vocal style . . . A fine swinging demonstration turned in on the Norgran label by the Modern Jazz Sextet, comprosing the Modern Jazz Quartet plus Dizzy Gillespie and Sonny Stitt . . . From Britain, the National Jazz Federation presents "Modern Jazz" on the London label, a concert by three groups given a couple of years ago at the Royal Festival Hall in London. This is very cerebral stuff, much like the sounds made by the cooler groups in the U. S. . . . Back to the U. S. and the more traditional style of jazz, vet drummer George Wettling heads a neat, swinging session on a Kapp set titled "Jazz Trios," with clarinet, trombone and cornet solos featured.

George Marek 'Surprised' at the Way Europe's Taking to Made-for-U.S. Beat

George R. Marek, RCA Victor veepee just back from recording "Il Trovatore" and "Rigoletto" in Rome, as he has done the past two or three years with other big-name operatic stars abroad, is amazed by the continuing "Yank invasion of Europe" with such indigenous American items as Elvis Presley, "mood music" albums, not to mention the obvious impact of pop artists like Perry Como, freak diskery items like Marilyn Monroe (who happens also to be an RCA Victor recording artist) and, of course, jazz.

The impact of jazz by now is, of course, stock because Le Jazz Hot cultists in France and Belgium made the American rhythms generally acceptable. "But Presley, who even to some Americans is considered too offbeat to have that European impact from just a few records," surprises Marek. It's credited, of course, to Armed Forces Network and the British Forces Network playing of his platters.

The mood music and film soundtrack albums are also "following in the tradition of other things American, like automobiles, quick-lunches, Coca-Cola, and the like, which have taken Europe by storm." The sight of "service libre" (self-service) cafeterias off the Champs-Elysees is something Marek, an old European hand, wouldn't believe unless he saw it himself. Just as he is annually disbelieving about the constantly pyramiding Paris prices which, he feels, year after year, "just couldn't go higher, but they do."

No 'Free' Listening

George R. Marek, RCA Victor veep, was impressed on his recent Paris stopover from Rome to New York by (1) a big charge-it phonograph shop in the Gare de Lyons (railroad station), which has a unique (at least for Paris) merchandising pattern, and (2) a "200-franc per half-hour listening charge in the music booths."

Latter is to discourage the kids freeloading on the new platters, hence the 60c charge, but if they buy a disk there is no charge. The idea also discourages wasting a lot of time just to buy one platter, hence the 30-minute ceiling at the 200-franc fee.

The merchandising that intrigued Marek was the manner in which the commuters leave their orders for the new disks when they arrive at the railroad station, picking them up, already packaged, when departing; and, somewhat unusual for Paris, a charge-it system which this music merchant has built up.

Can't See the Musicians For the Mikes as Conn. Jazz Fete Hits Fat 18G

By LEO MILLER

Bridgeport, July 31.

First Connecticut Jazz Festival is claiming distinction of biggest paid one-performance attendance of any festival to date and most radio network remotes of any festival, but that's as far as the distinctions go.

More than 9,000, by far the record crowd of the current Connecticut Pops season, went through the turnstiles at Fairfield U. field Saturday (28) for an estimated gross of $18,000. Figuring music package at $4,000, net was very substantial. Event was for benefit of Connecticut Symphony Orchestra, making it a case of a jazz concert being staged to aid a long-hair organization. Sponsors were so pleased that a three-day festival is being projected for next year.

As a show the festival left a lot to be desired. Poor programming, poor production and an almost complete lack of coordination negated a great deal of the talents involved. It wasn't until the second half that the concert got off the ground as the very virtuoso Chico Hamilton quintet took over and established a high mood which generally maintained to the end of the evening.

With all its recent festival experience, the Duke Ellington orch missed many crowd-pleasing opportunities. The "Festival Suite" was a wrong choice to open the bill cold, and the sensational solo and ensemble smashes of the latter half were too long delayed. Much more successful were the visiting soloists—Willie (The Lion) Smith, songstress Barbara Lea, Buck Clayton and Hank Jones.

What marred the night as much as any factor was the overage of radio coverage. By the time ABC, NBC, Mutual, BBC, the Voice of America, WFUV-FM had set up there was such a forest of mikes the musicians could hardly be seen. And the time demands of the various programs also interfered with the normal processes of the live performance.

Sid Gross, the former British disk jockey who produced the festival, outdid himself in promoting the event—probably the best-sold concert ever staged in these parts. But as an emcee he was a dud—especially when the Connecticut Pops' regular emcee, Walter Kiernan, was benched for the night.

Glen Island Casino Sues RCA Victor, Others On Glenn Miller 'Air Checks'

The Glenn Miller air-check album has developed into a big legal headache for RCA Victor. Latest wrangle came up last week when the Glen Island Casino filed suit in N. Y. Supreme Court charging that Victor, Helen D. Miller (the orchestra leader's widow) and David Mackay had wrongfully appropriated the bandleader's radio broadcasts at the Casino.

The suit seeks an accounting and damages from the limited edition released by Victor. The plaintiff claims that the defendants appropriated for their own benefit the radio broadcasts which were made for the plaintiff, at the plaintiff's predecessor's expense, at the Casino from May 15 to Aug. 30, 1939.

The contract was between Michael L. De Zutter, owner of the Casino, and Miller had provided that all expenses for installation of wires for broadcasting be paid by the plaintiff and under agreement that no part was to be reproduced. The air-checks were made to help Miller improve his performances.

The suit claims that the Victor album totaled over $10,000,000 in sales and that the plaintiff was entitled to at least 5% of the gross.

Spina Sidling Up to Spinners With Own 'Packaged' Tunes for ASCAP Pot

Hollywood, July 31.

New ASCAP performance payoff system has cued a precedental move by tunesmith Harold Spina, who has packaged some of his own material in a set of promotional albums for disk jockeys only. Success of the scheme will be measured in performances of Spina's tunes—with the resultant boost in his performance ratings.

Since the new ASCAP formula went into effect, Spina has been corresponding with deejays around the country, suggesting they play specific recordings of his tunes. In many cases, the deejays reported they were unable to get the platters in question. As a result, Spina decided to supply the platters.

He selected 24 songs, ranging from the Guy Lombardo etching of "Annie Doesn't Live Here Any More" (1933) to "Phenix City Blues," as recorded by Meg Myles last year, and began the hunt for some of the more obscure recordings. The rare Dinah Shore etching of "So Nice to Have a Man Around the House" and Ben Pollack's "The Beat of My Heart," with Doris Robbins on vocals, presented the biggest problems.

When the disks were assembled, Spina turned them over to personal manager Red Doff, who produced a pair of 12-inch albums, each programmed for easy deejay use with the pertinent information carefully included on the liner cover. "Man Around the House" also was edited to delete material which had kept the platter from being broadcast over many stations when the tune was initially released in 1950.

Total of 1,000 sets were pressed, and the first mailing to deejays went out last week. Total cost is in the neighborhood of $3,000, a figure Spina figures to recoup through the added boost his ASCAP ratings will receive.

Set is clearly marked "Not for Sale" and will be available only on a free distribution basis to platter spinners.

Material includes Ozzie Nelson's recording of "Dark on Observatory Hill"; Fats Waller's "You're Not the Only Oyster in the Stew"; Bing Crosby's "I Still Love to Kiss You Goodnight"; and Patti Page's "Would I Love You, Love You, Love You."

Lieberson to Europe

Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records prez, planes to Europe Aug. 9 for a looksee at the overseas disk situation. It's his first hope abroad since taking over the presidential reins from James B. Conkling in June.

He'll be away from his N.Y. desk for about three weeks.

Mercury's Billy Daniels Signs With Polydor Also

London, July 31.

Billy Daniels, Mercury contract artist, now on a British vaude tour, last week was signed by the Polydor label (a subsidiary of Helidor) which gives them world rights to a number of disks he will cut in this country. By this deal, Polydor gets its biggest international name since it began British production.

Because of time limitations, Daniels' first recording session last Friday (28) took place at midnight; with him were accompanist Benny Payne and a group of picked British instrumentalists. He will not be available to cut other disks until Aug. 20.

Muse-Art Hits Muzak With Antitrust Action; Alleges Discrimination

An antitrust and conspiracy suit was filed in N. Y. Federal Court last week against the Muzak Corp. by the Muse-Art Corp of Philadelphia, a Muzak affiliate. Also named in the suit as defendants are three Muzak execs, William Benton, Harry Houghton and Charles C. Cowley.

Suit, involving a treble damages claim of over $1,000,000, alleges that Muzak entered into a conspiracy to obtain and maintain a monopoly in the field of wired music. The suit charges Muzak with practicing discrimination against particular franchise holders, including Muse-Art, by charging royalties that are greater than those paid by the favored franchisers. Plaintiffs state that Muzak can fix arbitrary and excessive rates which greatly increase the cost of services.

The suit further charges that there is a conspiracy between Muzak and WCAU in Philadelphia to destroy Muse-Art's business and prevent lawful competition between the latter two companies. Muse-Art charges that Muzak delivered, directly or indirectly, confidential information of Muse-Art's business to WCAU. Muse-Art has been affiliated with Muzak for over 15 years.

Under the agreement, Muse-Art, as a franchise holder, is required to pay 10% of its gross to Muzak plus supply a detailed list of names and addresses of its customers and charges. Muse-Art charges that the names on its list were supplied to WCAU which solicited them for new contracts.

Max Ingber, president of Muse-Art, said the suit had been "threatening" for several years and was "inevitable."

AFM 'Receptive' To Peace Talks With Local 47

Hollywood, July 31.

American Federation of Musicians appears to be "receptive" to suggested talks to achieve a fair and peaceful solution to the Local 47 revolt, it was indicated here following departure of AFM counsel Henry Kaiser for Washington. Kaiser was here to argue against the injunction sought by Cecil F. Read, expelled from the Federation for leading the rebellion, prohibiting the Federation from interfering with his work opportunities and restoring him to membership pending trial of his court suit against the union.

Injunction granted him full working privileges but did not restore membership privileges.

While Kaiser was here, it was learned, he held some informal discussions with members of the dissident group, notably Max Herman, elected Local 47 veepee by acclamation last week. Herman, though long a member of the insurgents, is known never to have publicly attacked James C. Petrillo or the union's International Executive Board.

Herman emphasized that the membership still feels it has a serious employment problem but reported there appeared to be encouraging signs that the Federation was willing to discuss the grievances.

"The Local is faced with a growing problem and we need relief. I think there is now a possibility we may get some form of relief through negotiation."

FLASH: ROCK 'N' ROLL DANCE IS NOT A RIOT

Tracy, Calif. July 31.

Some 1,500 youths danced peacably to Fats Domino's rock 'n' roll music here Saturday (21) night after the dance was switched at the last minute from Stockton.

Stockton police chief Jack O'Keefe denied Domino band's permission to appear after a dance at San Jose had turned into a riot. But here, 70 miles east of San Francisco, the dance was "orderly and well conducted," according to police chief Neil Tremaine. Only incident was the arrest of 22 minors caught drinking in a lot next to the dancehall.

Business Group Gives Haydn Society New Life; Catalog to Be Altered

A group of businessmen headed by Howard Rikoon has come to the aid of the faltering Haydn Society Record Co. Longhair diskery, which was slated to close up shop due to lack of funds, has been bought by Rikoon's group and will undergo complete reorganization and refinancing.

Immediate plans for the Haydn Society call for an overall catalog revision. According to Rikoon, the new catalog will retain only the most successful numbers. New materials will be added on a regular basis. Diskery also plans to extend its recording scope beyond the longhair field to include every type of musical material.

Victor Cohen was named managing director and chief recording engineer of the new operation. He joined the Haydn Society in 1954.

Tip to Tyro Writers: Cleffing's a Cinch But You've Gotta Be an A&R Genius

Amateurs take note: the secret of being a successful songwriter nowadays lies in being a great artist & repertoire talent. Anybody, even tyros, can write songs, but it takes a pro to showcase them in a saleable way.

According to Al Hoffman and Dick Manning, a prolific songwriting team who currently have the No. 1 hit in "Allegheny Moon," selling a song through a lead sheet has gone the way of the buffalo. For one thing, musical notations are now like hieroglyphics to most modern-day publishers and to many of the a&r men at the major labels. They can't read it and all they want is the "demo."

The demo, or demonstration disk, is now the key to Tin Pan Alley salesmanship and songwriters are spending an increasing amount of time and money on turning out the right kind of demo. Hoffman and Manning, for instance, will spend up to $150 on making a couple of demos with a singer like Ginny Gibson, plus a few sidemen and perhaps a vocal combo.

Via the demo, the songwriter can concretize his own interpretation of a song and, after he sells it to a publisher, the demo can serve to influence the disk a&r chief's version along the intended lines. The original demo, in fact, is used all along the line. The writer sells it to the publisher, the publisher to the disker, and the disker to the artist. Nobody has to read music any more. In the Hoffman-Manning demo of "Allegheny Moon," a harmonica part was used and then was repeated in the Patti Page Mercury click.

When the publisher buys the tune, he also picks up the tab for the demo. Songwriters of lesser calibre than Hoffman-Manning are lucky to get their money back for the cost of the demos and don't bother to ask for advances.

Hoffman and Manning, incidentally, are proof that a songwriter can buck a trend successfully. While rock 'n' roll was at its hottest, they were turning out click tunes in waltz tempo, among them being "Hot Diggity," "Allegheny Moon," and "We're Still Holding Hands." They also tried to write rock 'n' roll but couldn't make it in this idiom and went back to what they knew best.

Hoffman is one of the few remaining active pop songwriters surviving from the era of the 1920s. While others have retired on the ASCAP earnings, he, along with a handful of others, including Charles Tobias, Al ewis, Al J. Neiburg, Joe Meyer and perhaps a couple of others, are still busy writing and making the rounds. Manning, the younger member of the team, has been writing since 1940 and joined with Hoffman four years ago.

Hoffman and Manning recently completed the score for "The Congressman," a new Ray Bolger musical comedy planned for Broadway this fall. Book is by Don Apell, producer of the Vic Damone video show.

Score By Velona For 1957 Circus

Prepping for his new 1957 "mechanized" circus, bossman John Ringling North has tapped composer-lyricist Tony Velona to pen an original score. The '56 circus used tunes from the Frank Loesser catalog.

Velona will write about 10 new songs for the circus score which will be handled like a legit musical with a diskery tieup for an original cast album and pop singles. However, no publisher has yet been set to handle the score.

The deal for the circus was set by Velona's personal manager, Norman Rosemont, who is now dickering with several pic companies for the tunesmith's service.

Inside Stuff—Music

Recent snapping of flagpole by third base line at Wrigley Field, Chicago, prompted oldtimers to recall that this zone was the congregating point in old days for the Chicago music pluggers and vaude agents and layoff actors. Most violent bettor was the late Chicago music publisher Milton Weil, who one day falsely accused an actor in a loud voice (and Weil had no other) of welshing on a bet. Next day Weil took the loudspeaker microphone and apologized to the whole ballpark for having bum-rapped the actor, having gotten his bets mixed.

Jack Benny gets "program notes" credit on the upcoming Columbia LP by Frances (Mrs. Edgar) Bergen who, besides being the wife of ventriloquist in private life, has appeared on Benny's tv programs. She only recently essayed a nitery tour in the plush hotel and bistro circuit. Platter is a medley of stuff variously taped in Hollywood, Chicago and New York, respectively with Matty Matlock's orchestra, the Art Van Damme Quintet and Johnny Eaton's Quintet.

Latest advertising jingle to get a pop tune treatment is "I Wonder Where The Yellow Went," recorded for Decca by the Jumpin' Jacks, Jingle, a Pepsodent toothepaste plug, has been given a new set of lyrics by Don Williams, composer of the original jingle. Williams is a copywriter with Foote, Cone & Belding's Chicago office. It's his first pop tune effort as well as the Jumpin' Jacks debut disk. Flip side is "Frantic Antic," also cleffed by Williams.

George R. Marek, RCA Victor v.p. over the album division, is turning up in Harper's Bazaar August issue with a piece called "Offenbach in America." Actually, it's an excerpt from liner notes which Marek did for an album of that title which Victor is releasing in the fall. It's probably the first time that liner notes were given the "reprint" treatment in advance of publication.

When a Montreal columnist wrote that Elvis Presley wouldn't play the Forum, mainstem arena, because it wouldn't meet his price, Forum manager Frank Selke denied it. He said he wouldn't allow Presley to appear there because experience has shown that rock 'n' roll singers attract "undesirables" and sometimes start leatherjacket riots. "The Forum doesn't need the money," he added.

Dot, London To Share Distribs

Hollywood, July 31.

Dot Records marked the opening of its new Hollywood homeoffice by finalizing a new joint distribution deal with London Records, which will cover approximately 40% of the American market. At the same time, the existing agreement involving world markets has been extended for another three years.

Under the unique arrangement, which in no way affects the artists or repertoire setup of either label Dot and London will utilize the same distribution facilities in several key areas. In Los Angeles, Hart Distributors, which has handled London for some time, is taking over the Dot line with Al Bennett, former ot veepee, swinging over to Hart as general manager.

In Boston, Dot is switching its distribution to the London outlet there, Mutual Distribution, and the existing Dot-London setups with James H. Martin Inc. in Chicago and Lieberman Music Co. in Minneapolis, will continue.

In the foreign deal, London will continue to distribute Dot product in Britain, Holland, Germany, Italy, Spain, Switzerland and parts of the Near East.

Buddy Robbins Handling Styne's Stratford Music

Howard (Buddy) Robbins, son of music biz vet Jack Robbins, will handle the Jule Styne publishing setup, Stratford Music, which will publish "The Bells Are Ringing" score. Styne, besides producing the Judy Holliday starrer, wrote the score with Betty Comden and Adolph Green, who did the libretto. Staging is by Jerome Robbins.

Chappell Music will distrib the indie Stratford Music which will own the basic copyrights. Incidentally, Styne has Miss Holliday for two years' release from her Columbia Pictures contract by special understanding with Col prexy Harry Cohn who thinks a couple of seasons on Broadway, away from pictures, is good business all around. Miss Holliday has "Solid Gold Cadillac" and another Col pic, "Full of Life," in the can, awaiting release.

Madera Orch to ABC-Par

The Bobby Madera orch has joined the ABC-Paramount roster. The 13-man combo will cut several original tunes by Madera and Antar Daly, the band vocalist, this week under the supervision of the label's artist & repertoire chief Sid Feller.

Deal with ABC-Par was set by the Storper Agency, which handles the orch.

Mills Gains a Point In Legal Mixup Over 'Mary Lou' Assignment

A petition by Venus Music for a summary judgment to get the full copyright renewal assignment on the oldie, "Mary Lou," was turned down in N.Y. Federal Court last week by Judge Edward J. Dimock. Ruling gives the defendant publisher, Mills Music, a continuing interest in the tune which was written by Abe Lyman, George Waggner and J. Russell Robinson in the early 1920s.

Venus Music has the renewal assignments from Waggner and Robinson and also claimed an assignment from Lyman. Latter writer was responsible for the mixup because he admittedly signed several conflicting renewal assignments. Lyman gave Mills, which acquired the tune from the Henry Waterson Inc. ca'alog, his renewal rights for $200 in 1936, but this assignment was never recorded. In 1942, he assigned his rights to Fred Fisher Music, from which Venus later acquired the tune. Still later, Lyman signed an affidavit saying he was not fully informed about what he did in 1942 and thus he is in Mills' corner in this court action.

Judge Dimock ruled that Venus Music must establish that the 1936 assignment to Mills by Lyman was not valid.

privilege on pop albums. Label is also guaranteeing it's hi-fi product. That is, if a consumer isn't satisfied with the hi-fi sound on the Col albums, he can get his money back.

Diskery is also continuing its "Buy of the Month" program through the fall campaign. The "Buys" for August are Paul Weston's "Solo Mood" and Andre Kostelanetz's opera-for-orchestra version of "Madame Butterfly." For September the "Buys" will be the Lalo-Bruch Concerti with Isaac Stern and "Reflections" by The Four Lads and Claude Thornhill's orch. The "Buy" platters are regular 12-inch LPs set to retail at $2.98.

In addition to Col's distribs and field salesmen, diskery's representatives from Canada and Mexico and affiliates from Australia and South Africa attended the Estes Park powwow. Among the Col talent on hand for the shindig were Jo Stafford, Paul Weston, Tony Bennett, The Four Lads, Johnny Mathis, Eileen Rodgers, Jerri Adams, Cathy Johnson, Jerry Vale, Ray Conniff, Erroll Garner, Carl Smith, Johnny Horton, The Collins Kids, Larry & Laurie and Enrique Villegas.

Donegan Doesn't Think Much of U.S. Show Biz

London, July 31.

Shortly after returning from a 10-week tour of the U. S., Lonnie Donegan, the guitarist-vocalist whose line is folk music with a jazz beat, said of American show biz: "There almost isn't any, and what there is is very poorly produced. In fact, it's dead."

Donegan, star of the Pye-Nixa bestselling disk, "Rock Island Line," ventilated his beef against what everyone in Britain believed to be "slick and terrific" setup whereas, "outside of New York, there wasn't any show biz, just disk jockeys and more disk jockeys," said he.

He declaimed about the inefficiency of show management. At one stop, where he topped the bill, no one cared when the house orchestra failed to turn up, and musicians chosen to accompany him ranged from the best to the worst." Although he grossed around $980 a week throughout the tour, it was hardly enough to defray his hotel, agents' percentages, fare and publicity expenses.

"I would like to go back," said Donegan, "but next time, I shall take my own musicians, and I'll know what I'm doing."

He's now negotiating the formation of a three- or four-piece rhythm group to accompany his act. There are also prospects of an album release under his Pye-Nixa contract.

Kozloff Kicks Up a Fuss on Nevada's 'Cheap Politics' in Casino License Nix

Las Vegas, July 31.

Veteran gambler Jake Kozloff lashed out at Nevada's gambling czars, accused them of "cheap politics," and said he will demand a full review by Gov. Charles Russell of last week's action by the Nevada Gaming Control Board which saw him denied a license to operate the casino of the Hacienda Hotel on the Las Vegas Strip.

In thumbing down Kozloff's application for a gaming permit, Robbins Cahill, chairman of the three-member agency, said "Kozloff's past activities in the state, his operation of the Last Frontier and his current financial statement do not meet with the board's satisfaction."

The denial climaxed a day-long session in the board's Carson City chambers, a session that was punctuated by the revocation of several gambling licenses of clubs accused of cheating players. The clubs held in question are located in Reno and hinterland towns around the state. After taking negative action on Kozloff's application, Cahill told capital city reporters that "we (the Control Board) are merely trying to clean up Nevada's gambling industry and rid it of unhealthy elements."

100G for Equipment

Kozloff had sought to lease the casino of the recently completed hospice from the Hacienda Hotel Corp. His financial statement presented to the agency assigned to police the state's key industry disclosed that he had recently shelled out $100,000 for gaming equipment and has a current bankroll of an additional $100.000 on deposit in a Las Vegas bank.

The Hacienda (ex-Lady Luck Hotel) is presently operating its bar and restaurant and formal ribbon-snipping ceremonies were pending Kozloff's okay by the Control Board to headup the casino. A spokesman for the hotel told VARIETY that the spa will holdup its grand opening in lieu of further

London Cafes Hit Peak in Summer

The summer has become the busiest time of year in London cafes, according to Harry Meadows, operator of Churchill's there and who is currently in the U. S. buying talent. Meadows declared that the tourist influx has become so great that the better part of the business is being done at this time of year. Situation, he said, is all the more remarkable inasmuch as most cafes used to shutter during the hot months.

In former years, Meadows said, many of the business establishments and factories used to close and bulk of the population moved to the seaside or other holiday spots. The tremendous influx of tourists during the past few seasons has changed that, Meadows said.

Meadows is in the U. S. to buy a supply of talent for the ensuing year. He'll be here until the end of the month.

Billy Vine has been set for two engagements at El Morocco, Montreal. First one is for Oct. 15 and return takes place Jan. 21.

Fast Footwork Saves Sullivan's TV Circus After Acts, Union Balk

Last-minute balks nearly prevented the Ed Sullivan Show from going on over CBS-TV Sunday (29). Although the deal by which performers on the unfair list of the American Guild of Variety Artists would be permitted to go on that show had been worked out previously, question arose of initiation fees and dues of the acts on the prescribed list.

Several of the turns, booked for Sullivan by Al Dobritch, objected to having to join the union, and AGVA reps were equally adamant. The affair was settled at the last minute on Sunday when Sullivan stated that he would personally guarantee the $109 for each of the performers.

The performers from Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus were put on the banned list by the union for passing the picket line put up by AGVA and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. AGVA afterward passed a resolution placing the performers staying with the circus on the unfair list and fining them $2,000 along with a six-month suspension.

When question of permitting the acts to work for Sullivan came up, AGVA made a concession in the suspension, lifting it for one hour, if the fines were paid. However, further concessions were made by the union. In a telegraphed referendum to its national board which was completed Friday (27), when 23 affirmative votes came in (board has 45 members), it was voted to permit the acts that had made arrangements to pay the fine to work elsewhere during the period of suspension. Agent Dobritch guaranteed payment of the fine, but during negotiations with the acts apparently hadn't figured on the dues and initiations.

When three of the foreign turns balked at the initiation fee on the ground that this was a free country and they didn't need permission from the union to work, na-

Europe Boon For U.S. Thrillcades

Omaha, July 31.

American-type thrill shows are ready to reap top financial bonanzas in Europe. That was the report here of Leo Overland, general manager of the Trans-World Daredevils, who just returned from overseas.

"We did better business in our 70 performances in 76 days than in our first trip over there last year," Overland declared, "and spots that we repeated were exceptionally better. Next season should be better than ever."

Overland said next year's tour might be hiked to 20 weeks, with Belgium, Holland, Italy and Luxembourg added. This year the Earl Newberry-owned unit hit England, France and Switzerland.

Trans-World docked in New York July 18, and opened its U. S. junket at Chicago's Soldiers Field two nights later. It registered moneymaking turnouts of 2,700 and 3,500 at Playland Park here the following two nights.

Overland signed the Cytrix Troupe of English motorcyclists while in Britain to add drawing power for this fall's fair dates.

"It was only a few years ago that Paul D'Amato forecast stardom for Martin and Lewis, and as everyone knows his prediction ran true to form. Now he has high raves for the Christie girl. The youngster is loaded with talent as 500 Club patrons well know by now and those who have seen her report she can't miss making the grade as a star."

L.A.'s Daytime Rendezvous Shelves Acts, Keeps Orch

Los Angeles, July 31.

What is believed to be the only stronghold of afternoon floorshows in the country calls off its entertainment for the tired businessman next week.

Spot is the Rendezvous Room of the Biltmore Hotel, which has operated on a noon-to-dark policy since 1934, presenting floorshows at 1:30 and 5:30 p. m. Patrons apparently want more dancing and less show, so acts are being dropped. Arvon Dale orch will remain.

Room had a weekly budget of around $1,750, including orch. New policy will save almost $1,000 weekly.

Ice Review

Holiday On Ice

Portland, Ore., July 25.

A brand-new edition of "Holiday On Ice" is back in town for the second year, and everyone is happy about it. Last year's layout pulled over 100,000 customers through the turnstiles at Portland Meadows and current icer was greeted by over 14,000 opening nite (20).

Advance sale for this tremendous portable extravaganza is very heavy. This is only the second date for this new spectacular and it is by far the greatest, most entertaining ice show ever to work here. The two and one-half hours are loaded with talent, variety, change of pace, spectacle. The 60x140 portable tank is set on the ballfield and gives all stubholders a ringside seat.

Hayes Alan Jenkins, winner of every major national and international championship, is making his pro debut with this show. He is spotted in two slots and easily shows why he is a champ. The friendly guy moves with confidence and ability that gets the seatholders off their hands all the way. He will leave this unit after this date and head for a "Holiday On Ice" outfit in Sweden.

Pert Sonya Kaye also knocks the audience for a loop with her skill, speed, jump-splits and socko skating. The orb-filler is a real champ. Cal & Dori Cook are on for some hair-raising acro-adagio on stilts. The last one-leg spin stopped the show cold. Flip & Flop and Buddy & Baddy are two comedy duos with different styles. F & F please and get yocks for their knockabout antics. European duo work as hobo clowns. Both acts are tops and get solid mitting.

Ben Dova is great as a drunk. His tipsy stuff atop a corner light pole is a knockout. Glamorous Shirley Winter is a beautiful, graceful skater scoring with her glides and turns. Speed jumper Buddy Murray wows with his barrel jumping, building to an eight-barrel jump for sock results. Bill Blocker is on for several numbers with his speed, spins and acro-aerial work. He teams with Miss Kaye for a couple of smash numbers. Jack Raffloer & Jerry Mapes do some nifty seeing-double skating. They also team with Miss Winters in a cute number. Oldtimers Phil Hiser & Gina Rubaki get smiles, chatter and applause for their "Down Memory Lane" waltz.

Choreographer Chester Hale has come up with some smash production numbers climaxed by Ravel's "Bolero." Prop is a huge volcano that spouts steam and belches fire. This spectacular knocked the crowd over and left them talking to themselves during the intermission. "Totin' Ice Around The World," "The Guardsmen," "Noah's Ark," "Music For Americans" and "Winter Mardi-Gras" art topdrawer. The costumes, sets, lighting and production are outstanding. The musical score is tops. The skaters are well disciplined in every respect. Feve.

Circus Review

Circus Medrano, Berlin

Berlin, July 24.

With Ernst Arnold, 4 Jungoves, Cowboy Peter, Pomi, Pas de Deux, 2 Cowleys, Marlene, Medrano's Elephants, 2 Cartellys, Tulli Medrano & Renato Medini's Horses, Trio Amedeo, Karen & Stone, Franz Lukas & Tigers, Olivia Belfort, Original 3 Dovitas, Hella Medrano, Medini & Peter Huebner, Taxi Number 13, 4 Cutanos, Medrano Ballet, Medrano Clowns; musical direction, Josef Jezek; general direction, Robert Huebner; assistant director, Giovanni Pomi. Opened July 12 at Berlin Funkturm; $1.50 top.

After the appearances of Circus Collien and Circus Roland, it's again circus time in W-Berlin. This time, it's Circus Medrano from Vienna, a 4,000-seater and one of the oldest (it looks back on a 300-year-old tradition) big tops on the Continent. The group, incidentally, is appearing for its first German postwar tour on special German invitation. It recently completed an uninterrupted eight - year trek which took the ensemble to Turkey, Syria, Lebanon, Egypt and Italy.

The standout act has the Four Jugoves from the Moscow State Circus doing an eye-arresting foot-ladder balance act on a moving miniature automobile — probably the most applauded number. Next, a novelty around here with a sort of offbeat specialty, is "cancan in the air," a rope act done by the circus' ballet group. Another key contribution is by the Two Cartellys, a fast-paced acro act on roller skates. Also earning top ovation is Olivia Belfort's looping the loop (with net) in the circus cupola. Two Cowleys have an act of special appeal since their elastic puppet with which they go through practically everything turns out to be a girl. On the flying trapeze, the four Cutanos rate attention.

In the animal department, Medrano's Elephants, presented by Medrano-Belley and David Belley, are tops, mainly because of Baby, the star pachyderm. First-rate also are Tulli Medrano and Renato Medini's horse cavalcade, with Beyruth, a rope-jumping horse, Arab, a ball-kicker, and Bubi, a riding dog, garnering the lion's share of applause. Franz Lukas presents five tigers who, among other things, jump through a fire ring.

Of the comedy department, an act called "Taxi Number 13" gets the most chuckles. Then there's the dance duo Karen & Stone who start out with elegant terping and end up in grotesque.

Fast Footwork

tional administrative secretary Jackie Bright and AGVA attorney Harold Berg pointed out that by coming into this country, they had supplanted an American act. At the beginning of the circus season, each act in the circus was given the opportunity of joining the union for a reduced initiation fee of $50. Having refused that opportunity, they were told, they would have to pay the full amount.

Union spokesmen stated that Sullivan had told them that he wouldn't go counter to the wishes of the union, and union was anxious to permit Sullivan to do the show in light of the N. Y. Daily News' syndicated columnist's cooperation in this matter. Consequently, they made as many concessions as they could in helping get the show going.

Television networks performers are, of course, under the jurisdiction of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, also an affiliate of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America. All 4A affiliates are obligated to respect each other's unfair lists, and therefore, being under AGVA ban, it would mean similar action by AFTRA.

Tap Lou Walters For L'ville Expo

Nitery operation seems to be a career that is only the starting point for careers in other fields. Billy Rose took over the operation of the Ft. Worth fair; Jack Entratter, ex-Copacabana, N.Y., and now g.m. of the Sands Hotel, Las Vegas, is set to produce telefilms; and now Lou Walters, boniface of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., has been named booker for the Kentucky Exposition Center, Louisville, a $17,000,000 building which preems Sept. 7.

Arena operation, one of the faster developing aspects of show biz, has been eyeing experienced show biz personnel because of the necessity of filling time with box-office attractions.

Walters was named to his post by H. Clyde Reeves, exec director of the exposition, in which the nitery operator will receive 10% of the take after taxes and expenses.

A 52-week slate of attractions for the big hall is being planned. Events already set include the Kentucky Horse Show, Esther Williams Show, "Ice Capades" and the regular Kentucky State Fair. Other lures are being scouted.

There's a chronic shortage of attractions in the arena field, part of which is brought on by the necessity of fitting in the events with the regular athletic schedules, plus the fact that a first-rate show with music costs more than $500,000 to bring in.

Walters' appointment indicates that the large-seaters are angling for a bigger representation of shows in their schedules. Walters may even produce a show for presentation in the arenas.

Deep Rivers in Norway

The Deep River Boys, on their fifth tour of Sweden, ended a series of click engagements here and moved over to Norway this week for 26 days. They are also booked for a British tour.

They return to the U.S. in October when they are pencilled in for a date at the Club One-Two in Toronto.

"Ted Lewis' act is 45 years young. Tops. Ted Lewis is a showman, first, last and always. While he's on the floor, it's always jumping with gals, dancing, song and music. Ted Lewis really made 'Everybody Happy.'"

VARIETY—July 4
"The top hatted showman proves anew that whether its the gambling spas, the Dixie Belt resort stands, the so-called 'Broadway' rooms or in the plusher environs of the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf, he is palatable all the way." Abel.

NICK KENNY—Daily Mirror—July 5
"My auto radio is a wonderful comfort when I'm driving. The other afternoon I picked up some rare entertainment. WRCA played a nostalgic song from Ted Lewis' new 'Me and My Shadow' album which brought tears to my eyes. It was titled 'I'm Stepping Out With a Memory Tonight'."

"Is Everybody Happy"

JIM O'CONNOR (Gene Knight)
Journal American—July 3
"'Twas like the good old nites late nite. Scene was the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria, packed like Grand Central Station on the Lexington Avenue subway during the rush hours. Every inch of space in the room was occupied by the tables and the patrons. Others sat on the stairways or stood in the doorway. Total attendance according to Gigi Molinari, manager of the Waldorf restarants, was 695—the limit allowed by the Fire Department. The cause of all the excitement—Ted Lewis. He has showmanship and the ability to please an audience. Here indeed is a great performer in the great tradition of show business."

BILL SMITH—Show Business—July 9
"Ted Lewis jams Starlight Roof of the Waldorf at Preem. Ted Lewis with a beat up top hat and cane came on to yells, squeals, whistles and roars of welcome."

RAY WILSON—New York INQUIRER—July 9
"Hundreds crowded the beautiful Starlight Roof of the Waldorf and many more stood outside or sat on stairways and applauded wildly as Ted unfolded his unique revue."

VARIETY—RADIO-TELEVISION—June 27
"Ted Lewis should kudo his diskery ballyhooist judging by the concentrated impact this past post midnight week on New York's deejay shows. Keyed to Lewis' debut at the Waldorf's Starlight Roof next week, and in keeping with the veteran showman's 45th anniversary, it is surprising how effective his style is projected on wax. He has been a prolific recording artist and the platter-chatters have more than risen to the occasion with kudos and small-talk for the 'high-hatted tragedian of song.' Airing of his wax works discloses an impressive catalog of standards of the years."
Abel.

Kozloff Kicks Up a Fuss

developments aanent Kozloff's case.

In an unprecedented verbal assault by a Las Vegas casino baron, Kozloff charged Cahill with prejudice and conspiracy growing out of what he described as "cut and dried politics." He said that Cahill hinted that the rub may have come from a campaign contribution assertedly made by Kozloff to Vail Pittman, a Democrat, when the latter opposed Republican incumbent Russell in the 1952 gubernatorial race. Kozloff said "I squelched that report, though, during Thursday's meeting with the board when I presented Cahill with valid evidence that I had given his boss (Russell) a contribution—not Pittman."

'Acts in Variance'

Cahill told reporters in Carson City that during Kozloff's tenure (Aug., '51 to May, '55) as general manager and principal owner of the Last Frontier Hotel, Kozloff had committed acts in variance with Nevada's gambling laws. Kozloff explained that he had sold interests to several persons already licensed at other Vegas hotels without informing the Nevada Tax Commission, now the parent agency of the Control Board and then the only licensing agency in the state. "But," he said, "as soon as the Commission advised me of the infraction, I immediately submitted the names of my new partners and, via Commission approval, they subsequently joined me on the Last Frontier license."

Kozloff said that to further point up the alleged bias on the part of Cahill, he is securing affidavits from members of casino row here who he claims heard Cahill openly state that "Kozloff will not be granted a license under any condition." "That sounds like an out-and-out case of cheap politics and trial without hearing," Kozloff said.

Raps 2 Board Members

Kozloff also leveled a blast at the board's two other members. He described Bill Sinot, the former FBI agent who drew the $15,000 per year assignment as the board's investigative member, as a "five-cent cop who was thoroughly unfair in his investigation of my background." Kozloff labeled Newell Hancock, the board's auditor member, "a rank incompetent." "As a matter of fact," Kozloff continued, "they're (the board) all incompetent and the only thing they are capable of is conspiracy."

Meantime, VARIETY learned that petitions addressed to Governor Russell are being circulated around town seeking support for Kozloff. One gambler, who said he wishes for the moment to remain anonymous and who described himself as an "old friend" of Kozloff, reportetd he has secured the signatures of 100 persons in and out of the gambling business "who demand the governor review Kozloff's case and give him a fair shake."

Under law, Kozloff cannot appeal the board's decision to a court. Actually, the board's action is a recommendation—not a ruling—that is passed on to the Tax Commission whose members grant the license. Governor Russell sits as chairman of the Commission, while Cahill is an executive member in addition to his duties as chairman of the Control Board.

This could well evolve into the initial test of the state's newly published "get tough" gambling regulations which were authored following last year's collapse of three new Las Vegas resorts.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, July 31.

Ralph Atkins, secretary of Elks Lodge 61 Springfield, Mass., while enroute from Chicago's Elk convention stopped off to chat with Happy Benway and to sightsee the hospital.

Robert Simril of the Ballantyne Equipment Corp. of Omaha took about a year to beat the rap, rating an all-clear to go home and resume work.

Harry Meyers of Capitol Theatre in Gotham registered in for the general o.o. and rest period.

Murray Friedman, Randforce Theatres, Brooklyn, and his frau Beatrice Fiddler in for a vacation and annual checkup and both rated an excellent report.

Dorothy Vogeley took less than a year to regain her health and received 100% okay.

After being hospitalized for four weeks as result of a paralytic shock, Al Munroe, promotion manager of the Detroit Times, is now at home doing well and rapidly improving.

Edith Gurba, cashier Lane Theatre, Philly, in for a week's vacation to see her husband John whose progress is tops. She rates an orchid for donating favors and noisemakers for our hospital parties.

Mildred Jones back at the rest routine after spending a 10-day furlough in Gotham and Lexington, Va., where her husband is a projectionist.

Otto Hayman of Columbia Pictures hit the trail for N.Y. flashing a greenlight indicating he had regained his health and could resume work.

Thanks to Jack Beck, manager Globe Theatre, Atlantic City, for sending salt water taffy and reading matter.

Tom Arnold's Twin Shows For Edinburgh, Glasgow

Edinburgh, July 31.

Tom Arnold, British impresario, is readying his twin "Crazy Gang" shows for the Christmas-New Year season at Empire Theatres here and in Glasgow.

The Edinburgh edition will be titled "Meet You at the Empire," and will star Chic Murray, Dave Willis and Denny Willis, plus support acts. Denny Willis is son of vet comedian Dave Willis.

Jack Anthony, Duncan Maerae, Robert Wilson, new comedian Alex Don and an Auld Lang Syne dance orch are likely for the Glasgow Empire show, "Just Dafter," modelled on the 1955 success of "Just Daft." The Bobby MacLeod Scottish Country Dance Band, comedian Jimmy Neil and vet comedian Tommy Morgan are also mentioned as likely for the Glasgow show.

Harry Gordon, who was recently hospitalized with thrombosis, and is currently resting, will return to the stage with comedian Jack Radcliffe in pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, soon to be taken over as a tv theatre.

'Big Swim' in A.C. TV and B.O. Lure

Atlantic City, July 31.

Absecon Island, location of this resort and three other suburban communities, was a huge grandstand Wednesday (18) as the third around-the-island swim with prizes totaling $13,000 brought an influx of midweek visitors plus worldwide publicity in all mediums.

Big backer of the professional event, which attracted 22 top men and women athletes, was George Hamid Sr., who put up $5,000 first prize money, with the swim starting and ending at his Steel Pier out in the Atlantic Ocean. Other cash was advanced by hotel and amusement interests here.

CBS-TV brought its cameras here for a full-hour network telecast and a water pageant, viewed between 7 and 9 a.m. First half was carried by eastern network, second by western. Added attraction was water show featuring floats and models which preceded swimmers along inland thoroughfare, or the water in back of the island.

Swim, now regarded as one of the season's major attractions, this year was won by Canada's Cliff Lumsden, who broke Tom Park's two-year-old grip on the 25-mile event. First to finish was Greta Anderson, who, with other women contenders, got 30 minutes' start on the men in the field. Park, in second place, got $2,000 prize money while Miss Anderson got $1,500 plus $700 for finishing fourth. Steven Wozniak won third place and $1,000.

Judy Garland

initial run, she started with 12 shows weekly, but cut down her schedule considerably after that.

Miss Garland holds the record, both for length of run and the gate at the Palace. She pulled $750,000 during her stand. Danny Kaye had the second highest in a 14-week run, and Betty Hutton, only headliner to return, played two four-week engagements.

Miss Garland is currently on another comeback kick. She's breaking it up at the New Frontier Hotel, Las Vegas, at a reported $55,000 weekly. She's cracking all records at the gaming spa.

There had been talk that the show would go on tour following the Palace run with a series of two-dates in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Detroit and four or six weeks in Chicago. However, since the Palace has the right to exercise a series of options, no commitments can be made at this time.

One part of the picture changed since the actress-singer's first Palace stand. At that time, Abe Lastfogel, William Morris Agency's general manager, plotted her comeback with that date following a click at the Palladium, London. This time, Music Corp. of America is arranging the stands.

Mr. Kelly's, Chi Nitery, To Relight in August

Chicago, July 31.

Mr. Kelly's Rush St. nitery, owned by the Marienthal brothers, who also own the London House, is set to reopen in late August. Mr. Kelly's has been closed since last winter, when a fire swept the nitery.

The opening bill at Mr. Kelly's will consist of the Connie Milano Trio, Beverly Kenny and Audrey Morris, appearing on the new bandstand which has been moved from the bar into the main room. Kelly's will also debut a policy of showcasing record stars in town on promotional tours, on Monday and Tuesday nights.

Carmen McRae is booked for Kelly's Sept. 26 for four weeks and upcoming bookings include the Buddy Greco Quartet, Anita O'Day and Jeri Southern.

MEX COMPOSERS CRACK DOWN ON 14 NITERIES

Tijuana, July 31.

Fourteen top nitery owners here face fines plus possible jail sentences due to failure to pay musical rights to Mexican authors. Complaint, served by the Mexican Society of Authors & Composers, states that the cabaret proprietors had been advised on numerous previous occasions that monies were due the cleffers' organization. It also points out that the musikers' reps failed to make any headway when sent to collect the funds due.

Among the club owners detained by the police, but released on 5,000 peso ($400) bonds, were Jose Maria Camacho, owner of seven spots, and Antonio Gomez, of the town's swankiest, the 21 Club.

Sarah Vaughan Jamming 'Em in Jamaican Jaunt

Kingston, Jamaica, July 31.

Summer is concert season in Jamaica with a flock of U.S. names coming over to play this island. Sarah Vaughan is here on a three-week tour and she's been packing them in Kingston's open-air Tropical Theatre and at the Coral Theatre in Montego Bay. She's playing here with her own trio consisting of Jimmy Jones, Joe Benjamin and Roy Haines.

Due later this summer are songstress Carmen McRae, pianist Don Shirley and a rock 'n' roll troupe, whose personnel has not yet been set.

Blevins Davis

Bernstein, Robbins Music and Forester Publishing Co. of Chicago. The other publishing company is named for Frank Jennings Jr., another associate of Davis.

The recording firm will kick off with Monty Matthews' Foggy River Boys from the "Ozark Jubilee" show on ABC-TV. The talent roster also includes organist Eddie Dunstedter, singers Jon & Sondra Steele, pianist Betty Miller and Julia Lee, club singer.

Foremost will have Max Cooper in charge of sales. Onetime with Decca sales, he now is in the record shop biz here. Ed Roche is the technical adviser.

The trio of companies will also handle music from motion pictures which Davis is readying. Preparations have been under way for some time in Italy on "Last Days of Pompeii," and it is expected to go before the cameras in the spring at Titanus of Rome. Davis also recently bought the film rights to "We Must March," novel by Honore Wilsie Morrow. Scripting by Talbot Jennings already is under way on this one. It will be produced through Film Locations, Davis' producing company.

Philly Cafe Ops Nod AGVA Fund 'For Time Being'

Philadelphia, July 31.

A temporary agreement was reached here last week between the Philadelphia Cafe Owners Ass'n. and the American Guild of Variety Artists in the long dispute over the entertainers' welfare fund.

Bernie Oehman, attorney for the cafe owners, said his clients will begin payments of $2.50 per week per performer to the health and accident fund on a "two or three-week trial basis."

Ochman said the owners inked the agreement as a sign of good faith after meeting with AGVA representatives. "There is no set time on the agreement but our clubs will make payments until we determine the final legality of the plan."

Jack Wilson, Philly AGVA representative, said that if the agreement had not been reached AGVA would have pulled shows out of the eafes "one by one."

Cafe owners estimate that the 25 night clubs will contribute upwards of $20,000 a year to the national pool in New York. Negotiations between AGVA and individual night club operators have been in progress since June.

Disneyland's $8,632,954 First Year

Coast Amusement Park Now 100% Unionized at Scales Up to $2.82 Per Hour

Hollywood, July 31.

Disneyland marked its first anniversary last week by recording a gross of $8,632,954.89 for the first 12 months of operation. A total of 3,642,597 persons toured Walt Disney's giant amusement park, spending an average $2.37 each.

In its year of operation, the park has almost doubled the amount of free exhibits in addition to opening new rides and features. Free exhibits now number 21 as compared to 11 when the park opened on July 17, 1955.

As the park marked its anniversary, it concluded union contracts under which it is now fully unionized. As part of the deal, some 500 employes in 30 job classifications received wage boosts ranging from 13c to 16½c an hour, plus other benefits.

Highest pay for the crafts is $2.82 per hour for horseshoers, followed by $2.65 per hour for harness makers.

'Holiday on Ice' Wham 151G in Portland, Ore.

Portland, Ore., July 31.

Morris Chalfen's "Holiday On Ice of 1956" racked up a sizzling $151,000 in 10 evening performances at Multnomah Stadium last week (20-29). This is over $50,000 more than "Holiday" did at Portland Meadows last year when the plush icer made its debut here. Better location, terrific weather, and rep of last year's layout made the bigger take possible. Show played to capacity at Meadows and near-capacity here. About 13,000 good seats were set up at the huge concrete showcase with bleacher seats available for overages if customers wanted them.

House was scaled at $3.

New Black Orchid Ops

Chicago, July 31.

Although papers transferring ownership of the Black Orchid from Al Greenfield to a group headed by Paul Raffles, co-owner of the Cloister Inn, have not as yet been signed Raffles was lining up talent for the first show under his group's management last week.

Tentatively set for Sept. 5, date by which transaction should be complete, the first layout has Sylvia Syms and Yonely pencilled in.

Elvis 2-Niter Relights Olympia, Miami, Stage

Miami, July 31.

After hiatus of two years the Olympia Theatre here will install a live show on its stage when Elvis Presley comes in for a two-day stand Aug. 3-4. Florida State Theatres, which operates the big downtownery, will present Presley & Co. on a three-a-day basis, the r&r click reportedly grabbing 95% of the b.o. tote for his end.

Presley is due for one-nighters in mid-Florida earlier in the week, then heads for the Miami dates with his show. The house for decades was ace vauder in the southeast, featuring top names from all phases of show biz before switching to straight film policy after union pay-raise demands and dwindling b.o. led to cutoff of live shows.

Despite rough times experienced by exhibs in other cities with rock 'n' rollers who take over the premises for after-show riots, Florida State head Harry Botwick is evidently booking Presley on basis of recent "concerts" by other names in that field who played here with little-show incidents occurring among the cultists. Theatre returns to pic policy following the two-day engagement.

New Houston Agency

Houston, July 31.

Local bandleader Buddy Brock and agent Tom Martin have launched their own talent agency here.

Martin was formerly associated with the David P. O'Malley agency in Chicago and had been booker for the Edgewater Beach and Bismarck Hotels there.

N.J. Statute Rap Folds A.C. Games

Atlantic City, July 31.

With the New Jersey Legislature failing to pass a statute legalizing the boardwalk "skill" games, operators here have for the most part closed shop. Those few operating are offering coupons for each game—everyone playing getting one with the barkers declaring that there are no prizes offered. Enough coupons will get you a gift, but it's a tough deal to sell the gambling-loving public and so far the resort's visitors are not buying.

Situation is that games of the skill type are through in the resort and state, unless the Legislature approves a referendum and the voters indicate they want these games. Feeling is that it will be very hard to get such an act through the Legislature and that if it was, chances are good that it would never be approved by the state's voters.

Most operators say if the Supreme Court ruling outlawing the games had come in the fall it would not have hurt too much. Now they are stuck with thousands of dollars tied up in prizes and leases. Lyric Theatre here, an Atlantic Ave. picture house, operated one of these skill games for several years but has shuttered. Spots hit include the Hamid's Steel Pier, where a number of the games had lined the pier between the theatres and the big Marine Ballroom, some 19 places along the boardwalk and a number on the old Million Dollar Pier.

$50,000,000 Building Boom Blooms Wildwood; Game Ban Ups Cafe B.O.

Wildwood, N. J., July 31.

Bolstered by a $50,000,000 building boom, the Wildwoods can now comfortably accommodate 400 000 vacationists. It appears that a housing shortage is not now likely, although the "no vacancy" signs have appeared several times so far in July. Many hotels and motels are booked solid for the season, but the large number of units means that there are always plenty of places open for shortterm rentals. The building boom has created a pastel paradise of motels that is attracting only favorable comment from vacationists.

The state ban on gambling games along the boardwalk has resulted in increased grosses of as much as 25% in the night club belt. Lines from a half block to a block in length stretch from night club doors on weekend nights, while weeknight audiences are running at capacity.

Several added clubs are in the big name sweepstakes to hypo business. Oscar Garrigues, owner of a string of local hotels and a stable of racehorses, surprised competitive cafe owners by rushing in a big name policy to augment his ice show in the 1,500-seat Manor Hotel Supper Club. He kicked off the policy with the Four Lads, Marion Marlowe, Eileen Barton and Joni James. Currently in the headline slot is Sunny Gale. Garrigues has inked Vaughn Monroe for the week beginning Aug. 6 and Bill Haley's Comets for the Labor Day holiday week starting Aug. 31. "Adventures on Ice" at the Manor is proving a smash as augmented by record and tv stars.

Frankie Laine was forced to cancel his August appearance at Ben Martin's Club Bolero due to his new tv show. However, Martin has signed singer Steve Lawrence to fill the void starting Aug. 10 for a week.

Kaye's D.C. Lineup

Lineup of acts to play with Danny Kaye at the Carter Barron Amphitheatre, Washington, Aug. 21 for one week, comprises Dunhills, Three Houes, Barry Sisters and Clifford Guest. One more act is to be filled in.

This will be Kaye's repeat at this outdoor operation of the Feld Bros. In his previous two-week stint there several weeks ago, Kaye scored an alltime high of $160,000.

Stranded King Circus Plans 'New Look' Reorg

Stroudsburg, Pa., July 31.

King Bros. Circus, stranded here for more than week, has plans to reorganize before too long, Arnold Malev, a partner in the circus, disclosed on arriving here from Macon, Ga.

The circus has been camped along a creek here, having been enjoined from moving by the Government for delinquent taxes. Malev said if his plans develop, he will take to the road with a completely "new look," including a new name, and will stick to small towns. New stockholders and new financing are planned.

During the time the circus has been here, it has received much encouragement from local residents. Men, women and children are making daily trips to the site, drop money in the ever-present cigar boxes, give the circus hands stacks of canned food and help feed the animals.

Barney Bros. Circus, which was part of the King Bros.-Cole Circus that went bankrupt, also closed down. Malev said that circus will be merged with King if the new setup goes through.

Richard Bry has joined the publicity department of Music Corp. of America's Chicago office, assisting Dick Marcus.

KATHY BARR'S

SMASH LONDON DEBUT

VARIETY

"Kathy Barr is a stylish chirp who shrewdly adapts her soprano to achieve a hep balance. She's just as much at home when she delivers standard pops as when she makes with an operatic aria.

"A vivacious looking redhead she projects warmth and sincerity and her combination of personality and classy vocalistics insures a boff customer reaction.

"She opens strongly and her song line-up keeps on a warm and dramatic pitch, winding up with a sock delivery of a French aria."

EVENING NEWS

"Kathy Barr, a surprising young woman with the hourglass chassis, is the girl with a voice and a range of hot numbers. At her London debut at the Colony she also sang 'The Bell Song' from 'Lakme' with a style worthy of the New York Metropolitan Opera."

Ak-Sar-Ben Show

Omaha, July 24.

Ernie Young production with The Romas (4), Eriksons (5), Ted Miller & Smiley, Gascas (2), Honeymooners (2), John Tiebor's Seal, Chai & Somay, Myrt & Gert, Winlows (3), Chuck's Wonder Dogs, Buddy Peterson, Marty Gould Orch (13); at Ak-Sar-Ben Field, July 23-25, '56.

Ak-Sar-Ben, local civic org that stages two free outdoor shows for members and their families annually, tries to angle these along circus lines to please the kiddies, who are barred from the earlier indoor nitery-type layouts.

First outdoor show usually is handled by Ernie Young and the vet Chicago booker again has succeeded in giving the smallfry plenty to cheer about. In addition, with Ringling's closing, the circus acts may offer the mamas and papas some nostalgia.

Top act without doubt is the Eriksons, three men and two women, who work a speedy acro act featuring headstands. Quintet is always in action; offers fine costuming and excellent stunts and should be ready for any medium.

Other circusy acts include the Romas, flying trapeze, who suffered rigging trouble opening night; the Gascas, standard wire-walking turn; John Tiebor's Seal, who balked at several tricks; Chai & Somay, good contortionists and hand balancers; the Winlows, cyclists; and Chuck's Wonder Dogs, featuring a wall scaler.

In addition, the Honeymooners (Charlie & Jewell Poplin) offer their crazy Ford routine. Excellent costuming and a buggy that is rigged for nearly a hundred tricks make this a standout attraction, although three or four minutes should be lopped off the 13-minute presentation.

More for the oldsters are Ted Miller & Smiley, comics (latter a deadpan, of course), who employ up-to-date gags; and Myrt & Gert, a couple of femme yock-seekers who will even flop at the county fairs if they don't improve their routines.

Thearle-Duffield provided nightly fireworks and have earned a reputation in these parts of being the best. Buddy Peterson is adequate as an emcee and gets an excellent assist from cute blonde Patty Gray in a magic stint to open the second half. Marty Gould's band cut an outstanding show.

San Antonio's 4 Operas

San Antonio, July 31.

Four traditional items will make up the local San Antonio Symphony Society's 1957 opera Festival in February. Victor Alessandro, musical director, has set "Der Rosenkavlier." "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Rigoletto" and an English language "Martha."

Singers not yet set.

New Acts

DON AMECHE
Songs
25 Mins.
Top's, San Diego

In his debut as a nitery performer, the vet pix-radio-legit musicomedy star has many assets going for him. He charms from the start. He looks the perennial juvenile and his baritone pipes have a muscular ring. Despite his personable air, Ameche's act needs considerable bolstering before he can make any sort of a dent in the nitery field.

A less static approach is needed most of all. The act, which should get a new approach in writing altogether, could stand the light comedy touch at which Ameche has already proven his adroitness in several media.

As though to prove his standing, there's a nice recognition mitt as Ameche's entrance is preceded by the ringing of phone bells. "My theme song," Ameche explains, before venturing into songalog. "You Can't Have Everything," meriting okay response, is followed by a "romantic tour," including "Paris" and "All of You"—both spurring reference to "Silk Stockings" and Ameche's identification therein. Among the other songs are "Birth of the Blues" and "That's Amore." Sid Hurwitz's piano accomp is a helpful plus. A song or two of more current standing, especially a few more light-hearted in tone, would be to his advantage along with special material of which theres a dearth.

Overall, it's quite a sophisticated turn and even as it stands it might do for the lorgnette set, notably the Maisonette Room genre. For the general run of niteries—Vegas, more specifically—the act needs a hypo. But the guy's a charmer and should never be sold short. There's no reason why he shouldn't be able to cut it.

Bill Green's orch (5) fills the bill for showbacking and terping.

Don.

BARRY BLAKE
Songs-Impressiols
9 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Barry Blake is a youngster, about 13, who can do a lot of things, but not too well. It's strictly a juve turn that bowls over the grandparents in the parlor, but this boy is far from a good pro performer.

It's not that the youngster lacks savvy. In fact, his turn is spoiled by an excess of precocity. He knows all the tricks too well. He's learned how to move and mugg on stage as if by rote and the whole thing gives the impression of a wound-up mechanical man going through a set routine.

He sings—but off key. He hoofs—but it's an effort. He drums—a couple of easy riffs. He plays the piano standup style—but it's mostly some faked chords. And he also does some impressions of Cantor, Jolson and Gleason, and these are in the same class as the rest of his talents.

This boy should knock off show biz for several years, learn how to act naturally again and maye he'll be able to overcome his present misdirected stage training if and when he thinks of making a "comeback."

Herm.

THE NEW YORKERS (4)
Songs
10 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

The New Yorkers, one girl and three boys, have a legit vocal style that tends to be a bit stiff. They know, however, how to hammer home a song in big-voiced style and would be a greatly improved turn if they learned how to relax their formal harmonizing.

The girl, Lynn Munn, is a big asset. She's a standout brunet looker and she can trill way up there. She's in the forefront of the combo through a good repertory consisting of a "My Fair Lady" medley, a brace of gypsy tunes and some popular standards like "Autumn Leaves" and "Lullaby of Broadway."

Herm.

FOUR SAINTS
Music, Comedy
15 Mins.
Top's, San Diego

A fresh, youthful quartet of startling musical versatility, the Four Saints have their rough edges but the act stirs excitement and is a good bet for the less sophisticated rooms. Every member either doubles or triples on instruments—shades of Buddy Rogers!—with gamut including piano, trumpet, guitar, trombone, clarinet, violin, tuba. They sing, too—pops and classics. Unit's name stems from Dixieland theme of "When the Saints Come Marching In."

Comedy is of the obvious sort but still pleasing.

Don.

RAMONA GERHARD
Pianist
40 Mins.
Hotel Radisson, Mpls.

Pianist Ramona Gerhard provides a highly listenable musical recital of surefire standard and pop tunes with little extraneous embellishment. She's a talented musician and the pleasant melodics receive expert treatment at her hands. Her numbers include "Rhapsody in Blue," show tunes and "Eddy Duchin Story" medleys, a Mexican folk song, a Gershwin phantasy and "Claire de Lune."

As she develops showmanship tricks and projects her personality to better advantage, and incorporates some more distinctive and flashy arrangements, gimmicks and frills into the act, the offering should find favor in the better hotel supper clubs. Feminine pianist singles are rarities and the personable Miss Gerhard is capable of making the grade.

House Review

Palace, N. Y.

Al & Connie Fanton, Maxie & Millie, Phil Bennett, Barry Blake, Joe Morris & Barbara Barry, The New Yorkers (4), Frank Fontaine, Wilfred Mae Trio, Kal Kirby House Orch; "Raw Edge" (U-I), reviewed in VARIETY July 25, '56.

The current Palace layout is a typical package for this house with several veteran turns supplying the necessary strength to carry the whole bill.

Frank Fontaine, in the next-to-closing slot, performs like he has the customers in his pocket—and he has. It's an easy brand of comedics in which Fontaine does his excellent brand of mimicry, using Arthur Godfrey as the main foil since the physical resemblance is striking between the two. He comes on and goes off like the headliner.

Al & Connie Fanton open the show with some neat hoofing, working solo and together in several routines of tapping and acro for a nice hand. In the deuce, Maxie & Millie are a potent, fast turn in which the male partner toots a wide assortment of instruments and winds up playing several at the same time.

Phil Bennett follows with his trick black crow which performs a whole series of calls and whistles on cue. Bennett could add some comedy punch to his chatter, but it's still an effective novelty. Barry Blake, in the No. 4 position, is reviewed under New Acts along with The New Yorkers, No. 6.

Joe Morris & Barbara Barry, another act which plays here regularly, again score with their old-style vaude routine. She works from the stage mike and he heckles her from the box scat in a script that has stood up over the years.

In the closing spot, the Wilfred Mae Trio brings down the curtain with their standout display of hoop juggling. It's a sock turn which keeps 'em in their seats until the vet performer and his girl assistants bow off.

Kal Kirby cuts the show with a firm downbeat.

Herm.

Metro Deal

Metro product, which is wholly new to the nontheatrical 16m field in the domestic market, Films Inc. recently bought the 16m rights to the RKO library from Matty Fox for a reported $700,000.

If the Metro deal goes through, and with the RKO product on hand, observers are wondering what kind of a break 20th and WB will get under the new arrangements. None of the M-G library has gone to the nontheatrical market before.

As is the case with the other companies, Metro's new pix would go to Films Inc. in 16m version after a fixed period following their release. The RKO library has been around a lot since RKO used to handle its own 16m nontheatrical distribution.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Eydie Gorme, Gene Baylos, Delta Rhythm Boys (4), Copa Girls with Bob Trevis, Dotti Malone, Gail Robbins, Douglas Clarke, Michael Durso Orch, Frank Marti Samba Band; $5 minimum.

After the Martin & Lewis winging here, this Copa bill may be considered as somewhat of a breather from the b.o. panic of the past couple of weeks. But although the heavyweight marquee punch may be lacking, the present bill adds up to solid entertainment and strong biz.

Eydie Gorme, who played this spot once before for one night as an emergency replacement for Billy Daniels, is an attractive songstress who has made a niche for herself on the Steve Allen "Tonight" show. Miss Gorme has excellent pipes and considerable songselling savvy.

By some stroke of booking luck, Miss Gorme is breezing into the Copa with a disk number on ABC-Paramount, "Mama Teach Me To Dance," that is starting to kick up some noise. Of course, she does this number here, not forgetting the disk plug, and also makes with the commercial for her previous "Too Close For Comfort" etching.

The overall songalog is surefire, from the opening "Gypsy in My Soul," through "Hey There," "Sometimes I'm Happy," a Jolson medley and "Someone To Watch Over Me." It gives her a chance to belt, to swing and to sing pretty. The music is fine but the script needs sharpening. There's a bit too much of the cliched verbiage in the intros and in her staging, like the handmike bit in "Someone To Watch Over Me" where she walks around the ringside tables. Completely unnecessary and distracting. There's no question, however, that Miss Gorme has a big talent with lots of room still for growth.

Gene Baylos is potent in the comedy slot. Making his first date at the Copa, this veteran comic has played everywhere else and registers as a very funny man. The material may not be new, but the gags are delivered with an ease and timing that bespeak the old pro. He opens quietly, makes the usual ribs about the squares in the audience and rapidly builds into a steady laugh patter, containing one-liners, double-talk and fragmentary impressions. He goes over big.

Opening slot is held down by the Delta Rhythm Boys, a quartet of Negro singers who have played here before. Combo has a smooth style and an amusing repertory of song. It could stand some more variety in the vocalizing styles.

Production numbers, with Bob Trevis, Dotti Malone, Gail Robbins and Douglas Clarke in the solo hoofing and singing spots, are in an uninspired groove.

Mike Durso batons the show with a crisp beat, also making with the dansapation rhythms with Frank Marti's Latin combo in relief.

500 Club, Atlantic City

Atlantic City, July 28.

Roberta Sherwood, Billy Vine, Charlivel Trio, Ray Ireland, McKenna Girls (8), Jack Curtiss, Joe Frasetto Orch (10); $6 minimum Sats., $4 weekdays.

No celebrity appearing in Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's plush 500 club —and the best have come and gone in the past decade—has been accorded the welcome extended Roberta Sherwood at her opener.

For her first appearance in Atlantic City she was introduced to the swank crowd filling the 700-seater and overflowing into the aisles by none other than Walter Winchell, in town expressly for this purpose. As she terminated her act a dozen waiters carried to the stage as many baskets of beautiful flowers from admirers here and in New York, plus a beautiful orchid from Winchell.

Miss Sherwood again shows that she has the voice, the stage presence, to sing any kind of a song to the complete satisfaction of a tough first-night audience.

Attired with complete simplicity in a modest black cocktaildress, she enters through the audience to the stage singing "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" and scores from the first note. After a 45-minutes she begged off to go to the Winchell table.

Miss Sherwood is backed by two very strong acts, Billy Vine is one of the best comedians to hit the stage of the 500 in many a day. The holdover Charlivel Trio prove worthy of appearance in any night club. Show is wrapped up with production numbers of Boots McKenna Girls 8), nicest line in the nitery in seasons, plus the Joe Frasetto orch. Walk.

Cafe de Paris, London

London, July 24.

June Havoc, Arthur Coppersmith Orch; $8 minimum.

A combination of exuberance and natural talent go a long way in helping June Havoc to make the necessary impact in her London cabaret debut. But, as exposed on opening night, her act lacks form, having neither shape or coherency in its makeup. Indeed, it left the impression that it had been presented without much thought to planning. Yet, obviously, that is not the case.

In that part of her routine which calls for dramatic overtones, Miss Havoc excels. She's likewise on top form when she indulges in a completely uninhibited rock 'n' roll interpretation. Individually, most of her numbers get by; the routine only looks wrong when viewed as a whole.

On her first appearance down the cafe staircase — an advantageous point of entry for any looker—Miss Havoc is wearing a striking red cloak over a lush gown, and as her act progresses she's able to effect quick costume changes by removing top garments. Underneath her elaborate dress is a more simple creation and beneath that a short one-piece ensemble. The changes in dress style are timed to coincide with the varying mood of her routine.

Easily her best number is her rendition of "One More for the Road," sung with positive dramatic impetus. This demands as much acting as it does vocalistics and she's not to be faulted on either score. A comedy lyric, "My Harry," about a very refined gent, is not such a happy choice, but there are compensating values in her vivacious closing in the rock 'n' roll idiom.

Miss Havoc has a tendency to play heavily on the gab stakes and although there's a lot of talk it's never out of place. Most of it segues naturally into the overall routine. Arthur Coppersmith's resident orch does a standout job of showcasing a complicated act, as well as catering for the entire dance sessions. Myro.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, July 24.

Chuck Foster Orch (14), Joan Weber, Stanley Burns, Gregory & Cherie; $2.50 minimum.

The new layout in the town's top nocturnal rendezvous is a happy blending of song, music, humor and other ingredients that leave the customers in a gay mood.

Music is by Chuck Foster and his versatile crew, with Joan Weber, the "Let Me Go, Lover" chirp, as co-headliner. Foster, who's no stranger here, has assembled an aggregation that's equally strong on the vocal and musical sides, with performances noteworthy for the choice of numbers, arrangements and, most of all, entertainment. Band's rhythms cover a full range of tempos for terping.

Maestro is a personable chap who communicates his good nature to tableholders. He plays a hot clarinet besides fronting crew. His carboning of Ted Lewis is a highlight of the band's contribution to show.

Joan Weber gives conclusive proof that she has all the essentials for stardom, with a voice and delivery that register. She looked and performed like a luminary at the opening. Smartly groomed young thrush displays poise, charm, sincerity and singing know-how and puts across a diversified repertoire with fine skill. She sails through a half-dozen bits like "Mr. Wonderful," "Goody Goody," "Pet Me, Papa" and, of course, "Let Me Go, Lover," with authority that goes with complete confidence.

Sum total is a pleasing slice of night club songfesting calculated to score even more when the opening-night rough spots are smoothed out. Miss Weber bowed to enthusiastic palm-pounding.

Stanley Burns and his dummy pals made a good impression. Burns, who starts slowly, manipulates his dolls realistically and uses to telling effect his amazing voice.

Gregory & Cherie offer a novelty turn packed with musical surprises, extracting music from rubber gloves, etc. Highlight of turn is his demonstration of a theramin, scientific gadget which he "played" by waving his hands over it. The music is alternately weird and beautiful. They net nice hand.

Foster's vocalists, pretty Ursula Eden and Lee Sherin, also register solidly with their solos and duets off and on the bandstand. Liuz.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 25.

"High Hat and Low Down," starring Robert Merrill and Louis Armstrong with Velma Middleton & His All Stars (5), Natalie & The Beachcombers (4), Copa Girls (14), Antonio Morelli Orch (13); $2 minimum.

Three years ago, producer Jack Entratter raised quizzical eyebrows when he paged Robert Merrill and Louis Armstrong to share the topline on the Sands marquee. The mild amazement ("mild" because anything can happen in Vegas) expressed over this unique combination was transformed into a thrilling night club experience, for even the blase hepsters, on that initial opening eve. And now—three seasons later—the billing duet of opera and jazz has become one of Entratter's surefire lures that once again will see the turnstiles clicking merrily at the entrance to the Copa Room. This time, Merrill and Armstrong are in for a three-stanza roost.

Merrill is among those performers who can snare attention through instantly radiating warmth and charm through both voice and personality. The coming hoots of "bravo!" are established with his opening pronunciation of "Granada." His expression is definitive as he pairs the spirituals "Nobody Knows the Trouble Ah's Seen" and "Joshua Fit' the Battle of Jericho." He can tune up a ballad with the same skill he lends to the classics, particularly as evidenced in "Return to Sorrento" and "On the Street Where You Live." The staid personality one might believe to be a part of the makeup of a Met-opera star is quickly dispelled when Merrill tackles comedy, evoking roars for his offbeat impresh of w.k. crooners whom he describes as seeking a niche in the opera. But, of course, opera is Merrill's forte and it's the depth with which he interprets Toreador Song from "Carmen" and Figaro's plaintive aria from "Barber of Seville" that brings down the house.

Armstrong never was in better form, vocally or instrumentally. His initial trumpet trill and gutural echo of "Sleepy Time Down South" is greeted by a long salvo. From here, the jazz session is underway. Satchmo & His All Stars (Billy Kyle, piano; Trummy Young, trombone; Edmond Hall, clarinet; Barrett Deems, drums; and Dale "Deacon" Jones, bass) slide the glisses and generate a beat that keeps the aficionados toe-stomping throughout. The dixielandic sounds wail at a vibrant pitch as Satchmo spurs his windjammers through "Back Home In Indiana," "Faithful Huzzar" and the begoff alternates, "Stompin' at the Savoy" or "Mop Mop." Latter windowcases Deems' precisioned percussions. Armstrong takes a break midway in the performance and gives the downbeat to the rhythm section of Kyle, Deems and Jones who apply studious techniques and the devoted verve of the jazzman to "Perdido." Sock wrapup sees Velma Middleton bleat "Mama's Back In Town," toe some hilariously weighty gyrations, then duo with Satchmo for "Kokomo." Alan.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, July 28.

Mindy Carson (with Sherman Edwards), Joel Grey, Bobby Winters, Murray Schlamm, Sacasas Orch, Al Navarro Orch; $3.50-$4.50 minimum.

It's been several years since Mindy Carson worked hereabouts —at Copa City when that biggery was a must for cafegoers. Her return finds her playing the lush hotel-cafe which hastened the decline of the straight nitery in this sector; ironically, Copa City was first of that group to fold two years ago.

Miss Carson comes back a much improved songstress who has reached maturity in approach to the tunes she essays. She's a smartly gowned, smooth working performer with an adroitly staged act that befits her visual appeal and warm approach. Her book contains shrewed arrangements, blending torch with the bouncy, ballad with ringsider participation to sustain interest throughout. Teeoffer is zingy "Everybody Loves My Baby" to win fast acceptance, with change of pace in softly worked "Mr. Wonderful;" rundown that follows contains a sometimes demanding change of pace which Miss Carson handles deftly, setting up a Gershwin gambit, adding sultry "Lover Man," "Mean To Me," then hitting the big build with Frenchy "When You Wear A Boutonniere" to work in male ringsiders and bring-on of a willing tabpayer for a dance around stage and ad lib song-hoof routine to heavy plaudits.

Attention to staging is reflected in the smooth, easy approach to her chansons, the tablers attention-hold maintained through every facet of her stint. Sherman Edwards, who batons and accomps at the Steinway, lends an able assist.

Joel Grey has been showcased here before and returns with the same basics to feature his eager, boyish quality. The new item in his rep is a takeoff on "My Fair Lady" and contains the possibilities for a sock routine once he tightens the sequence—a matter of continued workover on the switch of the Pygmalion premise which has him as a naive slum lad taken over by glamorous femme sponsor. Biggest score is still his "Straw Hat" standard with incisive vaudegreat impreshes, and his "folk" song spoof leading into triple-tongued "Romania." Grey has added more lithe spin-hoofery to keep the pace at bright tempo adding to overall values.

Bobby Winters is an offbeat type of act for this room, but comes off in okay fashion with his laugh-angled juggling. Mugging and comedy biz spell his expert work, although there's a tendency toward too much of the interim stuff, sometimes slowing impact of his work with clubs, tambourines, etc. Sacasas and crew, per usual, background matters expertly, with Murray Schlamm, house emcee, making an intelligent conferencier for the layout. Lary.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 27.

Lillian Roth, Bert Stone, Lindsay-Day Dancers (6) with Jack Morley, Champ Champagne Orch (10); $1.25 admission; $1.50 Sat.

Strongly pre-sold by television, picture and book, Lillian Roth is bringing top business to the Gatineau Club this week and the customers, paying an upped tab, are more than satisfied. Miss Roth is strongly imbued with the gimmicks of act-selling and works them to heavy impact. Stanza is loaded with nostalgia but it's not everything; there's plenty of 1956 showmanship throughout, all of it Roth's. Canary flits back through songs she was connected with— "Ain't She Sweet," "Honey," "Goody Goody," others; draws on weighty pathos for "Guy Named Joe" segueing into weepy "Climb the Highest Mountain" and, night caught (27), she had more than 900 tablesitters, palm-slapping noisily only minutes before, sitting so quietly a match scratch was practically an explosion in the room.

Stint is superbly backed by Champ Champagne's house band, augmented by two brass for this booking, batoned from the 88s by chirper's music director, Dave Fleischman. Session's standout flaw occurs when Miss Roth leaves the microphone to gab and dance with ringsider males. She loses the mob until she returns to the electronics. Use of a hand or necklace mike would strengthen these weak spots. Gorm.

Chez Vito, N. Y.

Sirat, John Stanford, Rose Marrone; $3.50-$5 minimums.

Chez Vito, one of the intimate eastside eating spots, has hit upon a novel floorshow presentation. It encompasses informality with a maximum of entertainment and a surprise impact. Probably the idea that boniface Vito Piso has come up with is most simple, but the creation of the atmosphere in which such a presentation can go over seems extremely difficult.

The Chez Vito principal performers congregate at a table and just begin singing. It's a surprise to many patrons, at first, to hear well developed voices rise above the strings of the orchestra. Conversations are hushed, then stopped, and the show goes on with an air of easy informality.

Participants in this series of roundelays are Sirat, a Javanese soprano; tenor John Stanford and Rose Marrone. During the entire stint lasting just about 15 minutes, there are no announcements and only one departure from the table is made. Sirat roams around the room while singing "Un Bel Di."

There are moments when the offerings are interrupted by applause, but as the session is pulled off by this trio, there's the illusion that applause is not the payoff; the singers give out because they like to and hope that someone at a nearby table might also. It's carried off well and charmingly. There's a wide variety of numbers including a batch of operatic arias and musicomedy tunes. The medleys are put together excellently and the comparatively brief show has ample awards.

Chez Vito has copied, to some degree, the Monsieigneur (Paris) idea of the orchestra with strolling fiddlers banking the room. Candlelight and strings provide potent atmosphere. Jose.

Ambassador Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 25.

After an absence of some six months, Dorothy Shay is back on the saloon circuit with her slick repertoire of sly humor. It's still a turn that evokes merriment and the Park Avenue Hillbilly sells it for top response.

This time out, the format has undergone some mild changes with a couple of new numbers and some ventures into the musicomedy field with "Take Back Your Mink" and "I Wanna Get Married." Latter is better suited to her overall style and achieves a better impact with ringsiders despite the novelty on "Mink," of a Damon Runyon accent in the middle of the usual hillbilly material.

Best of the newer stuff is an "Uncle Fud Rock and Roll," kidding both the present trend and the use of "idiot sheets" by some performers. She has simulated "idiot sheets" distributed to ringsiders, ostensibly to help her remember the lyrics. It's all a solid buildup to the inevitable "Efficiency" and "Uncle Fud," which remain as two big items in an offbeat repertoire.

For an opener this time, the Cocoanut Grove has an amazing juggling team, the Half Bros., from South America. They achieve fantastic speeds and dexterity with their clubs, doing rapid-fire takeovers and continuing atop unicycles and through a leapfrog bit. Standout is their use of a bandsman as a stooge, knocking a cigaret from his mouth and a cap from his head, with the flying clubs.

Freddy Martin orch holds over dishing a great dance beat and spotlighting its wares in the show on a special "Park Avenue Hoedown" number that intros Miss Shay. Kap.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 26.

Gisele MacKenzie, The Goofers (5), Augie & Margo (2), Flamingo Starlets (10), Lou Basil Orch (14); $2 minimum.

Gisele MacKenzie steps into a smartly designed nitery repertoire that will receive plenty of attention from the show-shoppers during the four frames she holds forth in the Flamingo Room. She tunes up pops, ballads and specially cleffed material, the latter successfully aimed at yocks, all of which is neatly paced during a 25-minute sortie that garners plenty of kudos. Out of her initial number, a specialty which she carried with her here last trip, she glides into a poignant embrace of "Picnic" that allows her plenty of room with which to display ability to emote with a song.

She evokes hearty chuckles with her takeoffs on Marilyn Monroe, rock 'n' roll and hillbillies in "You've Gotta Have the Right Singer for the Right Song." More comedy is deftly translated as Miss MacKenzie presents the distaff view of things through a parody of "Sixteen Tons." Sprightly French intonation of "Le Fiacre" and a volin-vocal duo of "Vaya Con Dios" are sock. Mitts soar with begoff "When They Were Hard to Get."

The Goofers are five fellows who have coupled instrumental and vocal savvy to robust comedics to fashion an act that is solid on any bill. Following their zingy opening and a more-or-less serious harmonizing of "Bermuda," they launch their spirited gyrations that see 'em standing on their heads to windjam and, in general, turn everything and anything that comes along into nonsensical clowning that ignites a chain reaction of roars. Goofers' quickie blackout, a takeoff on radio soapoperas called "Portia Goofed," is riotous. Drum solo followup showcases lightning swift rhythmetic sticks of Jimmy Vincent. Another standout member is diminutive Jimmy Dell who, in addition to playing stooge for most of the act's antics, brings down house when he swings from a trapeze while playing trombone. Ditto performance on the suspended bar is accomplished by Tom Terry who plunks bass for his role.

Augie & Margo toe a series of slick Latino style numbers tuned up with a modern beat. Guy and lassie make handsome picture together, and Margo's swift change from gown to toreador outfit is smart showmanship. Flamingo Starlets repeat holdover from previous bill at the top, then return to provide eye-arresting background for finale durin which cast passes in review. Lou Basil is proficient with his baton, marking the show's score superbly throughout. Alan.

The Gimmick

Westport, Conn., July 25.

Philip Langner & Philip Turgeon presentation of comedy by Joseph Julian. Features Larry Blyden. Staged by David Pressman; setting and lighting, Marvin Reiss. At the Westport Country Playhouse, July 23, '56.

| Alva | Larry Blyden |

"The Gimmick" begins brightly, but the joke is soon overextended, the dialogue runs down and the show ends in a swamp of unlikely behavior.

The play's wacky premise involves a quondam advertising man who really wants to write plays but has no means of subsidizing himself and his bride. He takes a personal ad in the New York papers asking people to mail him dollar bills and, just like that, he gets 27,000 letters, each containing a buck.

When the wife rejects her husband's bonanza the amusing story line is forsaken for a series of bad farcical situations, with the couple separating and an interloper taking the wife's place.

Joseph Julian, the author, is not to be disqualified because the play fails to come off. After all, he did think up a funny idea, and he also devised an amusing situation permitting Heywood Hale Broun, an expert at this sort of thing, to turn up as a burdened letter carrier.

As the ad man-playwright, Larry Blyden is a breezy, better-than-competent comedian, with Patricia Smith okay as his wife. However, the best performance comes from Tammy Grimes as a derelict roomer whose scruples don't stand scrutiny.

"The Gimmick" is not for Broadway. Dont.

The Beggar's Opera

Boston, July 25.

Cambridge Drama Festival presentation of William Morris Hunt, Miles Morgan, Bryant Halliday & Michael Wager revival of musical in two parts, by John Gay, with book adapted by Richard Baldridge and music adapted by Daniel Pinkham. Production supervision, Burt Shevelove; staged by Baldridge; music direction, Morgan; musical staging, John Heawood; settings, Robert O'Hearn; lighting, Walter Russell and Francis Sidlauskas; costumes, Robert Fletcher; choral direction, Edward Low. At Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., July 25, '56; $3.50 top.

Cast: Shirley Jones, Jack Cassidy, George S. Irving, Jeanne Beauvais, Robert Burr, Betty Garde, Constance Brigham, Charles Boldender, Zamah Cunningham, Harrison Dowd, Sorrell Booke, Maria Karnilova, David Nillo, Roger Bowman Boxill, Maurice Edwards, Anita Cooper, Patricia Ripley, Lucy Landau, Shirley Chester, Francis Barnard, Arthur Malet, Morris Pancoast, others.

A rollicking, colorful and rowdy production of this oldie spills out over the three level stage at Sanders with bouncy verve which does credit to the Cambridge Drama Festival. This version of the two centuries' old "Beggar's Opera" retains the airs of nearly all of the original arrangements and chops down a lot of the incidental music.

The playing is bold, bawdy and boisterous, spotlighting several excellent vignettes, notably "Ladies of the Town." Shirley Jones is a delightful Polly Peachum and Jack Cassidy is a virile swashbuckling Macheath, and they sing the antique melodies admirably.

George S. Irving, as Mr. Peachum, is standout, scoring with a deep baritone and handling the characterization of the sharpie convincingly. Betty Garde gets kudoes for her low comedy as Mrs. Coaxer; Jeanne Beauvais is a captivating vixenish Lucy; Charles Bolender, as Filch, turns in a slick portrayal, and Constance Brigham makes a striking Jenny. The animating playing of distaffers Patricia Ripley, Anita Cooper, Lucy Landau, Shirley Chester, Maria Karnilova and Miss Brigham, the "ladies of the town," is forceful and sharply etched.

The Robert Fletcher costumes, effectively authentic and flamboyant, splash color across the stage. Macheath's gang, played by Robert Burr, Roger Evan Boxill, Francis Barnard, Arthur Malet, Morris Pancoast and David Nillo, is properly formidable and diverting.

Maria Karnilova is a click in a dramatic pas de deux. Pinkham's score, based on original harmonizing wherever suitable, brings some of the music into modern style. A string quintet, wind quintet, percussion and harpsichord, is used.

Ingenious musical effects on high string harmonics features the score, all new, somewhat restrained in view of the onstage boisterous histrionics, but always clear. The adaptation chops the original politico satire of the bygone period, but accentuates the ribald flavor. Guy.

Dona Rosita, The Spinster

Westport, Conn., July 22.

Lucille Lortel presentation of drama by Frederico Garcia Lorca, translated by Richard O'Connell and James L. Graham. Staged by J. O. Scrymgeour; decor, John Bageris; lighting, Andrew Marc Leventhal; music, Dominick Argento. At White Barn Theatre, Westport, Conn., July 22, '56.

Cast: Roger Plowden, Marion Raymond, Anna Berger, Zohra Alton, T. Loftus O'Hara, Eric Tavares, Sylvia Burnell, Nia Kristie, Ginette Martin, William Alton, Dolores Kapen, Kit Merriman, Nan Krulewitch, Elizabeth Stearns, Mike Antonakes, Francis Von Zerneck, Haig Chobanian, Stephen Press.

As laboratory theatre, this artistic effort by Frederico Garcia Lorca has merit enough to justify its presentation. Done against an attractive setting and costumed effectively in turn-of-the-century apparel, it is visually quite acceptable. If the pace falls somewhat short of matching the eye-appeal, it is probably because of a lightweight story.

The O'Connell-Graham translation of Lorca's rhythmic prose tells, sometimes poignantly sometimes lethargically, the tragedy of the young Spanish miss whose youthful romance with a cousin turns to ashes in later life when a plighted troth fails to materialize into marriage. There's a "Cherry Orchard" atmosphere to the play's closing as an old homestead is broken up to the accompaniment of a final packing scene.

Zohra Alton impresses favorably in early moments as the romantic senorita but has difficulty maintaining authenticity in more demanding segments as the frustrated aging spinster. Some shortcomings here, however, can be laid to an interminable speech she is required to narrate. Roger Plowden, Marion Raymond, Eric Tavares, Anna Berger add varying degrees of thesping interest.

An early love scene is especially well done and stilted sequences of 1900 parlor talk are faithfully recorded. Bone.

Susan and the Stranger

Barton H. Emmet, in association with Martin H. Leonard, production of comedy in three acts, by Robert Nathan. Stars Joseph Wiseman, Nan McFarland, David White. Staged by Emmet; setting, William Bohnert; lighting, Robert Goreth. At Westchester Playhouse, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., July 23-28, '56.

| Stranger | Joseph Wiseman |

The perennial Faust legend has been given another workover. Broadway currently has two variations on that theme in "Damn Yankees" and "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter." Now playwright Robert Nathan has come through with one more in "Susan and the Stranger," which was tried out last week at the Westchester Playhouse, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

Barton H. Emmet, operator of the Playhouse, and theatrical attorney Martin H. Leonard, producers of Nathan's play, have been considering it as a Broadway prospect. It's not strong enough for that, but seems an okay lightweight vehicle for summer theatres.

The play has some humorous moments in its be-content-with-what-you-are theme, but the situation and characters aren't particularly impressives There are also occasional stretches of poetry that add up to merely ineffectual chatter.

Nathan has located his threeacter in a picnic area and has focused on a family comprised o" a wealthy, aging business man, his wife, who's "not very smart," and their young daughter, who dreams of a more exciting life. There's also an emissary of the Devil, who gives the husband a feeling of youth, but in exchange for his heart instead of his soul, as is usually the case.

The stranger, however, gets a yen for the wife, and transfers her into a mentally alert woman. She has an affair with him in exchange for the return of her husband's heart. In the windup, the husband and wife contentedly revert to their former selves, and the daughter, unaffected by any of the supernatural goings on, meets a young boy and appears destined for a dull future.

Joseph Wiseman gives a smooth performance in the role of the intruder, while the others are acceptable. William Bohnert has provided a serviceable outdoor setting, and Emmet has staged adequately. Jess.

Vera Allen has succeeded Dorothy Sands as director of the American Theatre Wing's summer workshop at the Cape Playhouse, Dennis, Mass.

2 Buff. Area Strawhats Vie for Musical Trade

Buffalo, July 31.

Direct competition between Eric Greenwood's Princess Theatre, in Niagara Falls, Ont., and Melody Fair, in Wurlitzer Park, N. Tonawanda, is a notable development of the local strawhat season. The Princess has recently gone musical, offering touring packages of "Out of This World," "Where's Charley" and "Annie Get Your Gun."

The canvastop Melody Fair opened June 15 with 'Plain and Fancy" and is currently presenting "King and I." The two operations, although on opposite sides of the border, are within 10 miles of each other and generally vie for patronage.

Puddle-Jumping Gladys Cooper

Gladys Cooper, who costarred last season in Irene M. Selznick's original Broadway production of "Chalk Garden," planed Monday night (30) to London to take over the same part in the Tennent Productions edition of the comedy in the West End. She'll go into the Enid Bagnold play tonight (Wed.), subbing for Edith Evans, who must undergo emergency surgery.

Miss Cooper had just bought a new car and was planning to start driving in a few days to the Coast, to begin rehearsing in a touring company of the comedy, under the management of Edward Choate. With Judith Anderson as costar, the show is to open Sept. 6 at the Lobero Theatre, Santa Barbara, then go to Los Angeles for four weeks and San Francisco for a similar stand.

Having taken along the costumes she used in the Broadway run of "Garden," Miss Cooper is due to continue in the London troupe for four weeks, when Miss Evans is expected to be able to rejoin the cast. She will return immediately to the U.S. and plane to the Coast, arriving late for rehearsals of Choate's touring company. Incidentally, Peggy Ashcroft, costarring in the West End edition of the show, is withdrawing from the cast at the end of this week, with Pamela Brown set to succeed her.

Legit Followup

The Pajama Game

(ST. JAMES THEATRE, N. Y.)

Neile Adams, latest to play the pixie comedy-dancing role of Gladys in this longrun smash, is possibly a trifle young for the assignment. She's the cutest dish who's had the assignment, however, at least in the original Broadway troupe, so even her youth and limited experience tend to be incidental.

Lacking the engaging boobyhatch quality that Carol Haney brought to the secretary character originally, or the amusingly hoydenish flavor Helen Gallagher gave it later, Miss Adams compensates with a truly fetching face and stunning figger, plus infectious animation and eagerness. With added performance in the part, plus the pacing, projection and resourcefulness that only experience can bring, the comedienne-hoofer could become a real find.

Otherwise, "Pajama Game" is beginning to show the inevitable signs of its 116-week run. The indications are relatively minor, but unmistakable. Although John Raitt, in particular, retains his original performance quality to a really remarkable degree as the foreman and Julie Wilson holds up admirably as the grievance committee chairman, the ensemble playing has become almost slovenly. For instance, in the "Hurry Up" opening number, the song lyrics are now slurred unintelligibly, and the bits of business have lost the precision that practically guarantees audience response.

Even allowing for a possibly lethargic house at the show caught last week, the laughs are nowhere near as frequent or big as originally, and the overall performance clearly reveals the need of check-up directing and rehearsal. Some of the company even resort to that longrun diversion of breaking each other up, which remains cornily unprofessional, if traditional. It's difficult to spoil knockout material, however, and "Pajama Game" remains an enjoyable show. Hobe.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Coincidental with the sale of Carnegie Hall to the Glickman Realty Corp., for possible conversion into an office building, the old Maxine Elliott Theatre on West 39th St. has been purchased by a realty investment group for conversion into a textile building. CBS had the Elliott under lease since 1943 as a radio-tv playhouse. This leaves the Helen Hayes (nee Fulton) and the Ethel Barrymore as the lone Broadway legit houses named for thespians. The others—Golden, Cohan, Woods, Selwyn, Harris, Ziegfeld, Belasco, Shubert, Beck, Morosco, Cort—were named for managers, although in Cohan's case he was an actor-manager. The Selwyn and Harris on West 42d St. are now grind picture houses. The Alvin's billing was coined from Alex A. Aarons & Vinton Freedley, who built it originally; it's now a Norman Pincus operation. The Mark Hellinger was named for a newspaperman. The Ziegfeld was recently taken under NBC-TV lease. The (Edwin) Booth and (Richard) Mansfield were named for the eminent actor-managers. Of the above, the Woods, on West 42d St., is no more.

Recent move by the Shuberts to shift the current "New Faces" from the Barrymore Theatre, N.Y., to the Music Box, and book the incoming "Separate Tables" into the former house instead of the latter, was at the suggestion of Leonard Sillman, producer of "Faces." That is revealed by Sillman himself, with the explanation that his booking contract gave him the option of moving his revue from the Barrymore to the Plymouth (at Shubert expense) if the latter house became available. With the closing of "Janus," however, Sillman discovered that the Plymouth was not equipped backstage to handle the "Faces" physical production, so he proposed to get the Music Box instead. That was okay with the Shuberts, but producer Robert Whitehead has a contract for "Tables" to play the Music Box, and he declined to take the Barrymore or Plymouth instead.

Sylvia Siegler, commenting on a report in last week's issue about the N. Y. C. License Commissioner's recent suspension of the broker's license for her Personal Ticket Service, contradicts the statement that her defunct Show of the Month Club ever filed a petition of bankruptcy. "There is no doubt that when SOMC suspended its business voluntarily May 1, 1953, it was 'flat broke,'" she writes. "But you might also be interested in learning that many thousands of dollars of debts were paid off. As for the trade speculation as to who loaned me the $10,000 (to buy the entire house for a performance of 'My Fair Lady.' Ed.), there is sworn testimony that it was not any broker."

Understood Feuer & Martin were interested in the Sam Behrman-Irving Berlin musical, based on the Wilson Mizner saga by the late Alvin Johnson, but that the book requires further rewrite. At one time Max Gordon supposedly had the property.

'Cat' Hits the Roof Over Billing

Three Actors Have Same Agent, Whose Wife Is Agent for the Author

Matters have apparently returned to the state of normal tension backstage at "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," at the Morosco Theatre, N.Y. Just a few days ago, however, there was a prospect of at least one of the show's leads quitting because of "illness." The incident involved actor billing and the manouvering of an agent.

As of this week, Alex Nicol has returned to the cast from vacation, with billing upped from featured to costarred with Thomas Gomez and Marjorie Steele. Claiborne Foster is top-featured, with her name in the program in type of equal size to that of the stars. In the newspaper ads, where the larger type would cost an extra agate line of space, her name is in smaller print.

Although the production staff for the Playwrights Co., which is presenting the Tennessee Williams drama, is determinedly mum on the subject, cast members have revealed that the atmosphere backstage at the show has recently been as taut as a Near East diplomatic confab. With Gomez reportedly having threatened to walk out of the key role of Big Daddy unless matters were clarified, stager and silent co-producer Elia Kazan settled the squabble.

The situation had been brewing for many weeks, its genesis having been the various changes in the play's leading roles. Gomez, succeeding Burl Ives, was top-starred, on the basis of the size and importance of the part as well as his

'Sergeants' Nets $360,000 So Far

"No Time for Sergeants," which has been averaging $10,500-$11,000 weekly profit on sellout business since its Broadway preem last October, has thus far netted approximately $360,000. That's based on the take as of June 30 accounting, plus estimated profit for the ensuing four weeks.

Actually, the Maurice Evans-Emmett Rogers production has earned around $430,000 profit, but $68,475 of that was spent for the national company, which had a two-week breakin engagement at the State Fair Auditorium in Dallas in June, prior to beginning a regular road run Sept. 3 at the Erlanger Theatre, Chicago.

Highlights of the show's reeent audit include the following:

Original investment (repaid), $100,000.

Net profit (including $78.628 in miscellaneous ineome), $315,430.

Distributed profit, $240,000. Split 50-50 between investors and management.

Jerry Wayne Producing London Intimate Revue; Will Also Be the Star

Jerry Wayne, U. S. singer-aetor currently a resident in England, has aequired "Happily Ever After," an intimate revue (with a slight story thread), for production in London and possibly later on Broadway. The show has a book by Joseph Stein and Will Glickman, with music by Dave Mann and lyrics by Bob Hilliard.

Wayne, who came to New York last week on a quiek visit to obtain finaneing for scheduled West End productions in which he's partnered with U. S.-born Mark Marvin, planes back to England today (Wed.). He plans to star in "Happily" as well as co-produce it. The presentation of the show depends, however, on theatre availability, an even tougher problem in the West End than on Broadway.

"Happily" has been under option to several New York managements in the last couple of seasons, and sueh star combinations as Dick Powell and June Allyson, and Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy have been tentatively set to head the four-character cast.

Bob Ardrey Goes Swiss For Legit College Try

Robert Ardrey is going to Switzerland to change his luck. Although he is an established screenwriter, he has never had a boxoffiee hit on Broadway, and is understood to be figuring that the change of loeale may give him a new perspective for a legit script.

The scenarist-dramatist-novelist will sail Aug. 17 on the Caronia with his wife and two sons, having leased his home in Beverly Hills. He'll live two years in Lueerne, where the boys will attend the International School. He recently completed the sereenplay for "Moment of Truth" for Metro. It's a South American yarn and he spent a couple of months in Argentina to absorb local atmosphere.

Although he's an established screenwriter, Ardrey has never had a boxoffiee hit on Broadway. Of his five produced scripts, "Star Spangled" drew respectful critical attention and "Thunder Rock" was an "artistic success" and subsequently a critical and popular hit in London, besides being a steady royalty-earner in stock and little theatres and a repeat item on television via its British film edition.

SLEZAK IN 'FIRST GENT'; BUDGET: $125,000

"The First Gentleman," Norman Ginsbury's London success, is slated for Broadway production next spring with Walter Slezak as star and Tyrone Guthrie staging. Alexander H. Cohen will produee, with Ralph Alswang designing the scenery.

The show, to be financed at $125,000, with provision for 20% overcall, will have a cast of 21. Rehearsals are aimed to start in late February, with a New Haven breakin opening March 20, to be followed by two weeks' tuneup in Boston and Philly, and the New York preem April 8.

The play was originally done in London in the summer of 1945, with Robert Morley and Wendy Hiller as leads, and was subsequently announced for Broadway presentation by Stanley Gilkey & Barbara Payne. A film version was produeed in England in 1948 by Columbia, with Ceeil Parker and Joan Hopkins in the Morley and Hiller roles and Jean Pierre Aumont starred in a romantic part.

Also on Cohen's produetion this season are a musieal, "Countess to Beot," adapted from the Jaek Iams novel; Pirandello's "Pleasures of Honesty," to be done first in London with Alfred Drake as star, and "Duchess and the Don," by John Matthews, also slated for first presentation in London, with Constance Cummings as star.

Cohen will plane to London the middle of next week.

Toledo's Bard-Bus To Stratford (Ont.) Fest

Toledo, July 31.

A show-bus to the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespeare Festival is being readied for Aug. 10-11 by Dorman Richardson, who sponsored two Repertoire Little Theatre show-trains to New York last winter. The junket will accommodate 36 patrons.

Meanwhile Richardson is planning a new season of Broadway show-train operations with an initial trip Oct. 21-27.

CAREER WOMEN COMEDY

Sid Caesar's Writers Hit The Stem With 'Maybe Tuesday'

"Maybe Tuesday," a comedy by Mel Tolkin and Lucille Kallen, has been optioned by Walter Fried for Broadway production this season. The play is located in an upper west side Manhattan apartment house occupied by young career women. The authors are writers for the Sid Caesar television show.

Also on Fried's schedule for this season is "Casual Miracle," Howard Teichmann's dramatization of a story by Nathaniel West.

Royalties Deal For Musicalized 'Life With Pop'

Despite the previous adaptations of "Life with Father" for films and television, the rights are now completely clear for the proposed musicalization by Rodgers & Hammerstein and Lindsay & Crouse. Warners' lease on the screen rights and the CBS deal for the video rights have both expired. The straight play rights lapsed when the Oscar Serlin production closed on Broadway nine years ago.

Provided the two collaborating teams decide that the material is suitable for musical adaptation, R & H will produce the show, supplying the financing personally. However, L & C and Mrs. Clarenee Day, widow of the author of the original Day family sketehes, have an option to put up a portion of the bankroll. That will be similar to the setup of the reeent "Pipe Dream," for which R & H provided their own capital, with a few longtime investors allowed to take a rooting interest.

If the show is actualy done, it will probably be targeted to open on Broadway in the fall of 1957. Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse are to write the book, with Richard Rodgers composing the music and Oscar Hammerstein 2d supplying the lyrics. It's understood that the royalty agreement calls for R & H each to get 2½% of the gross. L & C to get 2% apiece and Mrs. Day the remaining 1%.

(Theoretically, the royalties to L & C and Mrs. Day would be split into two categories. This would designate 3% for the rights to the original Lindsay-Crouse play, with the co-authors and Mrs. Day getting 1% each. The other 2% would be designated as author royalty for the musical book adaptation, and L & C would get 1% each. Actually, however, that would work out as 2% each for L & C and 1% for Mrs. Day.)

The prospective musieal of "Father" joins the two most successful collaborating teams in Broadway stage history. L & C dramatized the original straight play, which holds the alltime long-run reeord of 3,224 performances. R & H wrote "Oklahoma," which holds the longrun record for a musical, 2,248 performances.

FEDER WINS DISPUTE OVER 'WIND' LIGHTING

Lighting designer Abe Feder has won his dispute with producer Herman Shumlin over the fee for the lighting for the touring edition of "Inherit the Wind." The decision was handed down last week by Aaron Horvitz, solo arbiter ehosen by the American Arbitration Assn.

The award gives Feder the $750 fee he sought for lighting the touring show. That was half of the amount he received for devising the lighting for the original production of the Jerome Lawrence-Robert E. Lee drama.

Incidentally, Shumlin and Feder had a dispute over the charge for the lighting assignment even before "Wind" went into production.

That initial spat was settled, however, and Feder was given the stint. Later, Feder won an arbitration of a dispute over expenses for the job.

In the ease of the fee for the touring company, Shumlin argued that the scenic union's rule requiring half of the original charge did not apply to lighting. However, the arbiter overruled him.

Celler Defends Arthur Miller's 'Sin'; Calls Charge Bad Propaganda Abroad

Washington, July 31.

Playwright Arthur Miller, actors George Tyne and Elliott Sullivan, and entertainer Peter Seeger were cited for contempt of Congress last week by the House of Representatives. All had refused to answer certain questions before the House Un-American Activities Committee and did not claim the protection of the 5th Amendment.

If found guilty in court, each can be fined up to $1,000 and imprisoned for up to one year. The House citations have been turned over to the Dept. of Justice for prosecution.

Miller, now honeymooning in Britain with Marilyn Monroe, was cited by a 373 to 9 vote of the House on charges brought by the Un-American Activities Committee. The playwright refused to provide names of other writers with whom he attended meetings of an alleged Communist writers' group. Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), who voted against the citation, told the House:

"Passage of a contempt citation certainly will not help us abroad. Propagandawise, our political status will not be helped—indeed, it will be hurt in foreign parts.

"What is his sin? He was candid in his examination. He told all about his own associations. He spoke openly and freely about his own views. He refused on conscience to play the role of informer. He would not disclose names at a meeting some 10 years ago.

"The Athenians forced hemlock on Socrates. Are we to coerce Miller? Like Miller, Socrates refused to foresake his unorthodox views. He refused to conform."

Replied Rep. Francis E. Walter, chairman of the Un-American Ac-

Careless Research

The recent revival of "Henry V" at the Cambridge (Mass.) Drama Festival was not, as announced by the management, the first performance of the play in the U. S. in 30 years.

According to Thomas D. Foote, of Brooklyn, the drama was presented on Broadway in 1928, the late Walter Hampden in the title role; at the Pasadena Playhouse in 1935 with Gyles Isham as Henry; at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival, Ashland, in 1952, and at the Antioch Area Theatre, Yellow Springs, O., the same year, with David Hooks in the name part.

'Fella' Still Has 150G to Recoup

"Most Happy Fella," currently in its 14th week on Broadway, is rapidly moving toward the black. The Kermit Bloomgarden-Lynn Loesser production, a virtual sellout since preeming last May 3 at the Imperial Theatre, N.Y., has thus far recouped about 60% of its $375,000 investment. It's been operating at an average $13,500 weekly profit.

As of a June 2 accounting, the Frank Loesser musical had unrecovered costs totaling $259,405. On the basis of business for the ensuing eight weeks, it's estimated that figure has been reduced to around $150,000. The tab on bringing the show to Broadway was $324,120, of which $268,806 represented production costs.

Preliminary tryout expenses accounted for another $3,491, while the loss on a seven-week out-of-town break-in came to $32,246. The tuner played four weeks in Boston and three in Philadelphia, with the management overquoting on its gross reports for practically all those stanzas. An additional $19,577 was spent on pre-N.Y. opening expenses.

As of the audit, $48.000 had been repaid to the backers.

HUB GRIPS, B.O. STAFFS SEEKING WAGE BOOSTS

Boston, July 31.

Local stagehands and boxoffice men are seeking wage raises. Both groups are members of the IATSE, the latter through the affiliate Treasurers & Ticket Sellers Union. The move applies to all Shubert-operated theatres in the Hub.

The grips are asking a $17 jump, from $113 to $130. They also want the minimum of $10.77 per performance increased to $12.39 and the hourly rate of $2.42 now jumped to $2.78. Under terms of the new contract asked, the 5-to-12 p.m. rate would be increased from $2.72 to $3.13.

The b.o. men want a basic salary of $125, instead of the present $77. Rate being asked for assistants is $115, an increase of $49. It is understood that J. J. Shubert has already turned down the b.o. bid.

Ed Sullivan Will Guest Act Again at Strawhat

Southbury, Conn., July 31.

For the second successive summer, Jaek Quinn, operator of Southbury Playhouse, has snared Ed Sullivan for a week of stock thesping. Last season, the columnist-tver guested in Quinn's presentation of "King of Hearts." This year, although the play, "See How They Run," is only tentative. Sullivan has agreed to face the footlights Aug. 28-Sept. 2.

While here, Sullivan will trek to New London for a day, as guest of the Navy, with a submarine at his disposal as a gesture of gratitude for his numerous Navy tie-ins.

MANHEIM-MARX PLAY

Max Gordon has acquired the rights to the Mannie Manheim-Arthur Marx comedy, tentatively titled "Gordy," for Broadway production this season.

Rehearsals are scheduled to begin in October.

Old Vic Ticket Scale Waits Theatre Booking; Upstairs Trade Factor

Although the London Old Vic company had been mentioned as opening Oct. 23 at the Winter Garden, N.Y., the theatre is not absolutely set. It's also been mentioned for the Broadway, although the latter house now appears likely to continue with the current "Mr. Wonderful" remaining above the stop clause.

Because of the relatively small balcony at the Winter Garden, it's not regarded as entirely suitable for Shakespeare repertory, which tranditionally draws heavy upstairs trade. Until the theatre is finally set, however, the admission scale for the show can't be decided. The Old Vic tour, the third Canadian-U.S. trek for the outfit, is under the management of Sol Hurok. The New York run will be probably eight weeks.

The repertory for the tour will include "Romeo and Juliet," "Macbeth," "Richard II" and "Troilus and Cressida," the latter not seen here since the Players Club revival in 1942. The company will include Paul Rogers, Claire Bloom, John Neville and Coral Browne.

The tour will open in Montreal for five days, do three weeks in Toronto and then two nights each at Indiana U., Bloomington, and Purdue U., at Lafayette, prior to the New York stand.

Gorlinsky's Drury Lane Deal to House 'Fanny'

London, July 31.

S. A. Gorlinsky, concert impresario, who is breaking into legit management with the London presentation of "Fanny," is closing a deal with Prince Littler to present the Broadway tuner at the Drury Lane. It will follow "Plain and Fancy" some time in October.

In recent months Gorlinsky had been negotiating with the Rank Organization for a lease of the Odeon, Marble Arch, but these talks have now been suspended in view of the Drury Lane deal.

William Hammerstein, who arrived in London last week to stage the musical, is now actively engaged on casting and the stars are expected to be chosen within the coming week.

Bea Lillie Record 16G at Ivoryton, 'P&F' $9,100 at Spa; Other Barns

Ivoryton, Conn., July 31.

Beatrice Lillie, in her "Beasop's Fables" revue, toppled a 26-year record at Milton Stiefel's Ivoryton Playhouse last week. Take of $16,000 was tremendous for a strawhat of limited capacity.

Season to date has been comfortably in the black, with a lineup that drew $6,700 for "Bus Stop," $6,500 for Carol Bruce in "Anniversary Waltz," $9,400 for David Wayne in "Ponder Heart" and the Lillie record.

Balance of sked includes "Strictly Dishonorable," with Cesar Romero, this week; "Solid Gold Cadillac," with Billie Burke, next week; "Tea and Sympathy," with Linda Darnell, Aug. 13-18; "Welcome Darlings," with Tallulah Bankhead, Aug. 20-25, and "Seven Year Itch," with Art Carney, Aug. 27-Sept. 1.

'Fancy' $9,100 at Spa

Saratoga, July 31.

"Plain and Fancy," with Sylvia Karlton, Karen Anders and Alan Manson, grossed almost $9,100 last week, the third largest on record, in John Huntington's 587-seat Spa Summer Theatre, at $3.30 top. Figure for the musical package had been surpassed only by the $10,306 for "Solid Gold Cadillac," starring Billie Burke, the previous week, and $9,300 for the tryout of "The Southwest Corner," in 1954.

The premiere of "All on a Summer's Day," comedy by Robert Saffron, is current.

'Carousel' 32G for 2 weeks

Wallingford, Conn., July 31.

Oakdale Musical Theatre wound up another multiple-week stand Saturday (28) with an okay gross for a fortnight of "Carousel." Considering that this was the second time the Rodgers-Hammerstein musical had played the local tent, the estimated take of $32,000 for the fortnight, based on an approximate attendance of 14,000 was a money-maker.

Following the next two musicals, "Plain and Fancy," this week, and "Kismet," Aug. 6-18, spot goes legit, with "Mister Roberts," Aug. 20-25, and "Teahouse of the August Moon," Aug. 27-Sept. 8.

2 Ind'pls Spots Slagging

Indianapolis, July 31.

Midway mark in the strawhat season here finds both Avondale Playhouse and Starlight Musicals still hoping for break in weather that will help them come out ahead. While only one night has been lost by rainout, early evening downpours or threatening skies have cost Starlight heavily in the first three of six shows on the program. Opening in open-air theatre on Butler University campus, "Great Waltz" grossed $28,000 in nine performances and "Annie Get Your Gun" and "Student Prince" about $21,000 each in seven. Starlight needs about $4,000 a night to make its budget. Evie Hayes is here this week in "Call Me Madam."

Avondale, playing in a tent, is less affected by weather but that, coupled with its location, 17 miles from midtown, has kept it from realizing full possibilities to date. Best draws in first five of 10-week season were Ruth Chatterton in "Jane" and Leo G. Carroll in "Ten Little Indians," just closed. Current at the 800-seater is Fay Bainter in "Glass Menagerie."

'Teahouse' $17,400, Asbury Park

Robert Rapport's touring tent production of "Teahouse of the August Moon" got off to a good start on last week. The comedy grossed $17,400 in seven performances at the Neptune Music Circus, Asbury Park, N. J. It was the second highest grosser at the spot and the first non-musical to play there.

The show continues there this week, and then moves out for other canvastop bookings.

Maggie O'Brien $8,400 in 'Gigi'

Traverse City, Mich., July 31.

"Gigi," starring Margaret O'Brien, grossed $8,400 at the Cherry County Playhouse here during the week of July 17-22. It was a complete sellout for the tent operated by producer-actress Ruth Bailey.

"Time Out for Ginger" opens tonight (Tues.) with Neil Hamilton starred.

Cincinnati, July 31.

A gigantic gross of almost $12,500 for last week's production of "Tender Trap," starring Keefe Brasselle and Betsy von Furstenberg, set a new record for Richard L. Rosenfeld's Cincinnati Summer Playhouse. Virtual capacity from third night on topped the previous record set last season by Geraldine Page in "The Rainmaker."

Current is Marsha Hunt in "Roomful of Roses."

'Madam,' 'King' Net $7,700, Seattle

Seattle, July 31.

Greater Seattle, Inc., and the casts of "Call Me Madam" and "King and I" will split only about $7,700 in profits from the two musicals staged this month at the Aqua Theatre.

Net is less than for season last year, but one of 1955's vehicles was "South Pacific," starring former local lass Martha Wright. Big draw of this combination was credited for last year's bigger success by Walter Van Camp, managing director of Greater Seattle, Inc. He also said fact that the "King and I" film was playing at 5th Ave. Theatre during Aqua Theatre presentation of the same musical hurt the legit edition.

Gross for two productions was $55,640, of which "Madam" garnered $27,172 and "King" drew $28,468. Each had five performances.

Local casts are paid on percentage basis, after expenses, musicians and stars are paid.

Revive 'Homestead,' Swanzey, N.H.

Swanzey, N.H., July 31.

Approximately 2,000 persons from 20 states and six foreign countries attended the 15th annual three-night revival of the 70-year-old play, "The Old Homestead," by an all-local cast, at Potash Bowl here, July 20-22.

By coincidence, there was a heavy rain within a few hundred feet of the outdoor theatre opening night, but not a drop fell on the audience. It was the second time in the history of the production that this phenomenon has occurred.

Willard L. Thompson, of North Swanzey, played the part of Uncle Josh for the 45th time as the revival was concluded in the amphitheatre within a stone's throw of the old homestead of Denman Thompson, who wrote the melodrama and starred in its tours of the U.S. and Canada for 30 years.

Walter Hanrahan, of Keene, who plays the role of Cy Prime, is one of the few persons now alive who saw the original production of "The Old Homestead."

Just a Coincidence

Visiting actors at the Ogunquit (Me.) Playhouse this summer are getting a kick out of having their clothes washed by Helen Hayes.

That's the name of the local laundress patronized by strawhat producer John Lane.

ROCKLAND PLAYERS IN BARN AT BLAUVELT, NY

Blauvelt, N.Y., July 31.

The Rockland Players, offering their initial season at the Greenbush Theatre here, have begun to draw moderate business after a slow start. The Equity group, with a non-star policy, plays a five-performance schedule, Wednesday-through-Sunday nights.

Producer Alvin Leber leased the converted barn last spring. The spot has been a Rockland County fixture for some years, but under a succession of managements and never attracting more than mild local interest. With a lively building boom under way hereabouts, however, the Rockland group has a chance to become big-time, provided it improves the the quality of its productions and performances, perhaps using at least occasional guest names.

Last week's production of "Reclining Figure" was more or less competent, with capable performances by Samuel Ellis, Nancy Wilder and Nancy Neel. The show was staged by A. Raymond Peck (who doubled as an actor), with a setting by Burt Drexler. The staff, besides producer Leber, includes stagers Peck, Royal Huber and Roy Pascal (the latter also a member of the acting company), and Judith (Mrs.) Leber as business manager and boxoffice, Drexler as designer, Robert Doidge as his assistant, Loris Bangs for properties and Irene Bray publicity.

Miss Neel, who had a supporting character role in "Figure," will play the femme lead in "Come Back, Little Sheba," opening tomorrow night (Wed.), and the balance of the season will offer "Dear Charles," "The Rainmaker," "Bus Stop" and "Tender Trap," closing Sept. 3. Biggest boxoffice draw thus far has been "Solid Gold Cadillac," week before last.

Although it has been getting patronage from locally-conscious residents, the Rockland group has been doing little to promote wider interest. It uses routine ads in the Rockland Journal-News, the local daily, and gets rather kindly critical coverage from that and other papers in the area. It has promoted little, if any, feature attention via press or radio, however, and doesn't place window cards, posters or even direction signs around the country.

Co-Producer Dalrymple Sez 'Teahouse' Not Flop On Latin America Tour

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Contrary to your story, the Latin American tour of "La Casa de Te de la Luna de Agosto" (Teahouse of the August Moon) could not possibly be termed a "flop" in spite of its financial difficulties. The play was well received everywhere except in Rio, and even there the audiences loved it.

In Montevideo it was the biggest hit they ever had. It ran for 21 performances to sold out houses. ("Porgy and Bess" gave three performances there.) In Buenos Aires it astonished the Portenos when lines two blocks long formed early in the morning to await the opening of the boxoffice.

The success of the American company in Latin America cannot be judged by finances. "La Casa de Te" company an Equity and ATPAM one, paid in dollars. Tickets were paid in local currency which hardly would cover the withholding tax, social security, hospitalization, etc., for an American company, even with sold out houses.

As for the "atrocious" Spanish spoken by the company, that is ridiculous. Romney Brent, who also directed the highly successful Mexican production, has spoken Spanish from birth, virtually. He was born in Mexico. The idea of the "atrocious" accent came mostly from the fact that as Sakini, Rosita Diaz Gimeno naturally used a Japanese accent, as have all Sakinis. Also Roberto Rodriguez as Sr. Oshira. That didn't seem quite clear to a couple of critics, who asked why the "pidgin Spanish." Your informant must have been one of those.

various film credits. Miss Steele, succeeding Barbara Bel Geddes, was second-starred, almost entirely because of the size and importance of her part as Maggie, since it is her first appearance on Broadway.

Nicol, who took over some months ago as the neurotic young husband, had been featured, as was his predecessor, Ben Gazzara. However, he and Miss Steele have the same agent, William Liebling, and the latter thereby appears to have been under pressure to get star billing for Nicol. With seasonal renewal of contract at stake, the agent was able to swing it.

That only complicated matters, however, as Miss Foster, who had come out of retirement to succeed Mildred Dunnock as Big Mama, also had Liebling as agent. Again the percenter sought to have his client boosted to star billing. At that point, the Playwrights Co. balked, but as a sop, increased the size of the actress' name in the program to equal that of Gomez and Miss Steele.

Because of the added line it would require, the larger type was refused for the newspaper ads. That didn't suit Miss Foster, or at least Liebling. The next pressure came from the agent's wife, Audrey Wood. She's not only the agent for Williams, the play's author, but in that capacity also has an interest in the production, in partnership with the latter and Kazan.

Gomez, though not directly involved in all this, had apparently been increasingly irritated at the complex manouvering, and hit the ceiling at the final incident. Despite his contract, he reportedly threatened to become too ill to continue with the show. Faced with that, the management contacted Kazan, who was on location directing a film, and with his authority, issued a flat turn-down for the equal-size feature billing for Miss Foster in the ads, although continuing it in the program.

Williams, who merely wrote the play, gets small-type billing below the title. Kazan's name is also in small type, but above the title.

Arthur Miller

tivities Committee: "Arthur Miller was not subpenaed for the purpose of squealing on anybody, as he and his high-priced lawyers would have you believe. He was subpenaed because there was information that he had been a Communist, that he was associated with Communists in these meetings, and at the moment he was applying for a passport to travel abroad. The committee, in its efforts to write the kind of legislation necessary with reference to the issuance of passports, was interesting in knowing who those groups were that were Communists."

It was further pointed out at the session of the House that if anyone could decline to answer questions of a Congressional Committee, outside of the safeguards provided by the Constitution, then any Congressional committee could be defied with impunity.

Seeger, a native New Yorker, appeared before the Un-American Activities Committee in New York, on Aug. 18, 1955. He described himself as "a student of American folklore, and I make my living as a banjo picker." He was questioned about membership in the Communist Party and entertaining at Communist Party rallies and money raising affairs. He declined to answer. At one point, he was asked:

"You are not relying on the 5th Amendment, are you?"

"No, sir," he replied. "I simply feel it is improper for this committee to ask such questions."

Tyne, in his appearance before the Committee, said he was a radio, screen, theatre and television actor, but refused to answer questions about the Communist Farty. He had previously been identified as a Communist by actor Lee Cobb. Sullivan, who also refused to answer questions but didn't claim the protection of the 5th Amendment, said he had been on stage, radio and television.

Los Angeles, July 31.

Town's legit offerings generally held their pace last week to give Los Angeles its third successive stanza of good business. A fifth joined the ranks last night (Mon.) when the al fresco Greek Theatre launched "Student Prince," first of the two operettas it is producing for the season.

'Fancy' Is Plain $36,000 For K.C. Outdoor Week

Kansas City, July 31.

Starlight Theatre had one of its more modest stanzas last week with "Plain and Fancy" as the sixth production of the al fresco season in Swope Park. It closed Sunday night (29) behind fine critics appraisals, but moderate play by the public. Week figured up to $36,000.

This is passable, but a woeful way from the previous week's $80,000 with Gisele MacKenzie in "Annie Get Your Gun," indicating the variable range in the big theatre (7,600 seats). Rains which have plagued the early season, have let up, giving the company a square shot at biz. "Plain and Fancy" had Evelyn Page, Robert Smith, Dran Seitz, Tom Reider, David Daniels, Toba Sherwood, Michael Kermoyan and Joseph Macaulay.

"Chocolate Soldier" opened last night (Mon.) as the seventh offering of the season with a moderate advance sale. Cast lists Laurel Hurley, Mitchell Gregg, Earle MacVeigh, Muriel O'Malley, Donald Clarke, Toba Sherwood and Kermoyan, with ballet team of Mia Slavenska and Robert Morrow.

'Wish' Gets Lush $51,500, Best of Season, St. Loo

St. Louis, July 31.

First local presentation of "Wish You Were Here," scaled to $3 in the Municipal Theatre Assn. al-fresco Forest Park playhouse, grossed a juicy $51,500 last week. That was the best take of the season thus far. Top roles were played by Patricia Marand, Andrew Gaines, Beverly Bozeman, Sonny Sparks, Jack Collins and Kenny Ackles.

"Kiss Me Kate," presented in the open air amphitheatre in 1953, opened a revival last night (Mon.), with a cast including Robert Wright, Terry Saunders, Peter Conlow, Laurel Shelby, Jack Collins, Olive Cliff, Bertha Powell and Gene Verrone.

'John'-'Measure' Okay At 23G at Stratford, Conn.; Ontario Fest Perking

Stratford, Conn., July 31.

The American Shakespeare Festival Theatre had its best stanza so far, with $23,200 gross for eight performances of "King John" and "Measure for Measure" last week. That was a welcome improvement from the $21,800 of the previous week. "Measure" has so outdistanced "John" that additional performances of the comedy have been skedded for August, with several showings of "John" being excised.

"Taming of the Shrew," third and last of the season's productions, opens Sunday (5) after several previews. Beginning the week of Aug. 7, Sunday night performances will be dropped and Wednesday matinees slated instead.

Canadian Bard Better

Stratford, Ont., July 31.

After four light weeks at the b.o., the Shakespeare Festival here hit 93% capacity, 14,400, in the fifth stanza, ending July 21. Five-week total neared 60,000. Scale is $1-$6.

Slow build may have been due to the early (mid-June) opening, plus Festival-sponsored jazz as well as serious concerts and opera offering competition to the drama. Nonetheless, it may add ballet next season, when the plays will be housed in the new $984,000 permanent theatre instead of the present big top.

'PAJAMA' NEAT $40,700 ON 2D WEEK IN WASH.

Washington, July 31.

Second week of "Pajama Game" at the National Theatre climbed nearly $2,000 over the initial stanza, with $40,700 in the till.

Holdover included a Sunday evening performance, instead of the less profitable Wednesday matinee. Including that night, the 1,658-seat house was scaled to a top of $5.50. Absolute sellout would have been $51,000.

Early sale on the current week indicates that the musical will do even better this semester.

Romero Not Bad $16,700, 'Guys' $16,000, Det. Tents

Detroit, July 31.

Biz continued to be canvas-backed at the area's two tenters, with Cesar Romero drawing only $16,700 last week in "Strictly Dishonorable" at the Northland Playhouse and "Guys and Dolls" grossing $16,000 at Melody Circus.

Northland's nut is $12,000, with a potential capacity of $25,678 at a $3.60 top, less 25% discounts to Kroger Supermarket customers. Melody's breakeven is $12,000, with a potential capacity of $41,982 ata $4 top, less discounts. Melody seats 1,500; Northland, 1,400.

Current offerings are "Gigi," starring Margaret O'Brien, at Northland Playhouse, and a second week of "Guys and Dolls" at Melody.

'Boy' Fast 48G, S.F.; 'Teahouse' $25,000

San Francisco, July 31.

Business is fantastically good here, with all three houses showing fat grosses last week.

"Boy Friend" improved in its second frame at the Curran, "Teahouse of the August Moon" at the Geary looked very healthy despite fact that this is show's second exposure here, and 37th round of "Anniversary Waltz" at the Alcazar rang up nightly takes unequalled since last January.

Estimates for Last Week

Boy Friend, Curran (2d wk) ($5.40; 1,752; $52,000). Almost $48,000; previous week, $47,000.

Teahouse of the August Moon, Geary (1st wk) ($4.40; 1,550; $37,000) (Larry Parks). Nearly $25,000 for the starting frame.

Anniversary Waltz, Alcazar (37th wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Richard Eastham, Marjorie Lord). Nice $13,800; previous week, $13,200.

Roosevelt, Miami Beach, Folds Stock Operation; Every Show Lost Money

Miami Beach, July 31.

Sam Hirsch has tossed in the towel on his initial stock season at the Roosevelt Theatre here. The operation folded last Saturday (28) after taking a financial beating on all shows offered. Hirsch attributed the closing principally to the high cost of name talent on top of a 60/40 rental deal with the owners of the theatre.

The Roosevelt was scaled to a weekly capacity gross of $22,000, but never came near that figure. One of the top takes was registered by "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter," which grossed $7,400 in the first week of a three-frame stand, then dropped sharply. Dagmar and Lionel Stander had the lead roles in the comedy.

Other productions offered at the spot included "Dial M for Murder," with Vincent Price and Louise Albritton; "Tender Trap," with Sloane Simpson, Dick Shawn, Johnny Desmond and Nancy Berg, and the windup entry, "Champagne Complex," with Bramwell Fletcher as a last-minute substitution for Frank Albertson. The latter left the show during rehearsals, after his daughter was killed in an auto accident in Connecticut.

A tryout of Edward Chodorov's new comedy, "The Spa," with Gloria Vanderbilt starred, had been skedded for the house, but was cancelled, as was "What's the Rush," package revue starring Robert Q. Lewis. Hirsch is now scouting another outlet for a winter operation, but feels that competition from the Coconut Grove Playhouse is going to be tough to beat. That spot, which opened last winter, is operated by oil millionaire George Engle, who's been booking top stars.

Cancelled—by TKO

"Matilda," a new play by Irene Gawne, will not be tried out at the Stockbridge (Mass.) Playhouse next week as originally scheduled.

Miss Gawne, a sister of New York talent agent Sara Enright, adapted the play from a novel, but reportedly failed to clear the project with the original author.

Hildegarde's Can-Can In $43,800 Week, Dallas

Dallas, July 31.

"Can-Can," starring Hildegarde in her first legit role, tallied a nifty $43,800 for the first seven performances through last Sunday (29) matinee at State Fair Musicals. Clear, hot weather greeted the opening week of the Cole Porter revival.

The Milwaukee chanteuse, known here from past nitery dates, had slight dialog mishaps at the July 23 opening, but scored heavily with her piping.

Charles R. Meeker Jr., Musicals' managing director, produced the current show, fourth of the 12-week season. Rehearsals started yesterday (Mon.) for "Great Waltz," Aug. 6-19. Liberace and brother George Liberace make their legit debuts here in the Johann Strauss musical.

'Silk' $23,300 (5), To Fold in Chi

Chicago, July 31.

Loop legit, revived with the arrival of "Silk Stockings" last week after nearly a month with no shows in town, relapses this Saturday (4) with the musical's quick folderoo.

Fall slate is beginning to shape up, however, leading off with "Bus Stop," Aug. 13, Harris; "No Time for Sergeants," Sept. 13, Erlanger; "Witness for the Prosecution," Sept. 24, Selwyn, and "Boy Friend," Oct. 1, Blackstone, and "Damn Yankees," Nov. 6, Shubert.

Estimate for Last Week

Silk Stockings, Shubert (1st wk) ($5.95; 2,100; $61,000) (Allan Jones). Over $23,300 for first five performances; opened last Wednesday (25) to negative notices from the four local critics (Harris, News; Kogan, Sun-Times; Dettmer, American, Raven, Tribune); tuner folds here this week, ending the tour.

'Can-Can' in Clear, 30G, Despite Rain in L'ville

Louisville, July 31.

"Can-Can," fourth production of the season's musicals in Iroquois Amphitheatre, racked up a good $30,000 last week, under hopes, but still satisfactory, everything considered. Heavy rain Saturday (28), ending before curtain time, didn't prevent show from going on, but hurt attendance.

Musical cast included Rita Dimitri and John Tyers in leads, with Erik Rhodes, Leonard Elliot and Marcella Dodge in support.

Broadway continued in the doldrums last week. Business, which dropped substantially for practically all shows, was particularly sour for the Saturday matinee, with brokers reportedly getting stuck with tickets for the only two capacity-grossers, "My Fair Lady" and "No Time for Sergeants."

"Most Happy Fella" fell out of the capacity lineup because of a bomb scare at the theatre Friday (28) night, resulting in a rash of refunds.

Literati

TV Books

Tad Mosel's "Other People's Houses" and five other plays are being published under that title by Simon & Schuster this fall. Paddy Chayefsky's "Television Plays" did so well that S&S is reissuing them in a $1.50 paperback edition.

In a lighter vein, Shepherd Mead's "How to Get Rich in TV Without Really Trying" is also an early fall item from S&S.

Walter White's Biog

Poppy Cannon, who is a Caucasian, widow of Walter White, longtime exec sec of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, who though blue-eyed, fair-haired and of decidedly white pigmentation chose to identify himself with the Negro cause, has done a book on her late husband. Miss Cannon is a cookery and style authority in her own right, with national radio and tv background and a number of books to her credit. Rinehart is publishing this fall.

Negro poet Langston Hughes' memoirs, "I Wonder As I Wander," is also a Rinehart item for November.

Bromfield's Farm

Friends of the late Louis Bromfield hope to buy the writer's famed Malabar Farm, near Mansfield, O., to serve as an agricultural research and demonstration centre.

More On Flying Saucers

Gray Barker, who books most of the pix showing in West Virginia, should be a sucker for the present crop of saucerian sagas. In fact in time he may even have a chance to book one of his own. He has written a lively one called, "They Knew Too Much About Flying Saucers" (University Books, $3.50).

He tells about what happened to certain investigators who presumably knew where the disks came from and reports in detail about one Charles K. Bender of Bridgeport who ran a research bureau until ordered by three men to concern himself with other things than flying saucers from now on. They confiscated all copies of Space Review. He wouldn't say they were Government agents but since they made him pledge on his honor as an American citizen to say no more the inference was they were from Washington.

This one seemed to follow a pattern, according to Barker, who tells the story in a straightforward documentary manner. Major Keyhoe, most prolific writer on the subject, has maintained that the Pentagonians are split down the middle between the silence group and those who want to tell all. Bender may have run into some of the silence group. Before he began W. Va's ace booker, Barker was a projectionist and later a theatre manager. He once headed the English department of a Maryland school district. Scul.

Van Druten's Novel

"The Vicarious Years" by John van Druten (Scribners; $3), is a novel of growing awareness to an independent life. Hero is a young Englishman with literary aspirations, who depends emotionally on the approval of a shoddy set of minor intellectuals. When he no longer requires the stimulus of these people, his own life, in reality, begins. It has been hinted that there are autobiographical references in the book.

If true, the van Druten who embellishes the contemporary theatre is not easily explained in terms of the colorless background he establishes for his central character in "Vicarious Years." Down.

Padula's Post

Charles F. Padula, veteran court reporter and political writer for the Albany Times-Union, has been appointed confidential assistant to the Appellate Division in the capital city, at an annual salary of $8,800. In his new post, to be assumed Wednesday (1), Padula will handle press relations and other assignments. It is a recently created job.

Padula started with the Times-Union as a copy boy 28 years ago. He has been covering courts for a quarter of a century and politics for 15 years. Padula has been public information officer for Albany County since 1948.

USSR's 'Squareroo'

The names of Vsevolod E. Meyerhold, one of the Soviet Union's most distinguished actors and producers, and Isaac Babel, Soviet writer of Jewish origin, both purged during Stalin's regime, are being posthumously rehabilitated, according to Soviet literary publications.

Meyerhold, innovator of new theatrical techniques in the late 1920s, first produced "Klop" (Bedbug), the play satirizing Soviet officialdom, now enjoying a great success on the Soviet stage. The newspaper Sovetskaya Kultura announced that a commission had been formed to consider the "literary legacy" of Meyerhold. He had been purged in the '30s after establishing a reputation as one of the leading actors of the Moscow Art Theatre and as an innovator of the modernistic and futuristic school of Soviet drama.

Commission members reassessing the late theatrical producers legacy will include his daughter and Ilya Ehrenburg, the writer.

Regarding Babel, the Soviet literary newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta confirmed reports of his death and established 1938 as the year of his passing. Babel, whose most famous work is "Red Cavalry," is believed to have perished in one of the big Soviet purges of the period. A committee has been appointed to study Babel's literary legacy and a collection of Babel's works is about to be issued.

The Soviet publication also confirmed the deaths of two other well-known Yiddish writers and poets, Itsik Feffer and Perets Markish, both believed purged during the 1948-49 anti-Semitic drive. The posthumous rehabilitation of Markish's name also is underway, according to Soviet dispatches, which indicate the wide sweep of the anti-Semitic literary purge during Stalin's regime.

Latest On Boston Post

Latest development in the Boston Post situation came Saturday (28) when atty. John S. Bottomly, who headed a group which sought to buy the paper after it failed to publish for one day on July 7, quit all negotiations.

The attorney charged that John Fox, publisher of the Post and the Post Publishing Co. "have broken their option agreement with me and under the circumstances I have no alternative but to cease all negotiations."

The Post published Saturday morning, but only after the representatives of unions in the plant held a long conference with Fox. It was reported that they demanded back pay and other benefits owed them and gave Fox a deadline to meet them.

It was reported that the unions have given Fox until Wednesday (1) to meet back pay demands. Fox, reportedly, said that he would have an additional $4,000,000 by Wednesday.

Rev. Mal Boyd's Book

Rev. Malcolm Boyd, the former radio-tv program packager who worked with Mary Pickford and Buddy Rogers, will have his tome, "Crisis in Communication: A Christain Examination of the Mass Media," published by Doubleday early next year.

Final draft on the book was done by Boyd as he studied at Union Theological Seminary in N.Y. last year.

'The Japanese Film'

Charles E. Tuttle Co., publisher operating out of Rutland, Vt., and Tokyo, plans an illustrated "The Japanese Film" for this winter. Text covers all phases of the local industry from historical survey to business angles. Authors are Joseph L. Anderson and Donald Richie, two Americans active in the Japanese film world.

Neb. Kidding Itself

U. of Nebraska Press, in compiling a book re the home state, is devoting a full chapter in the tome to jokes and wisecracks, since they helped formulate many of the public's attitudes about Nebraska. Publisher is currently seeking radio-tv gag-files to cull material, according to a spokesman, since the electronic media "reach the widest audience."

Francoise Sagan's Encore

Francoise Sagan, the 20-year-old French authoress whose "Bonjour Tristesse" was a 1955 No. 1 bestseller for 12 weeks (38 weeks in all on the national bestseller lists), has broken a 30-year record in the 104-year history of E. P. Dutton & Co.

Her current "A Certain Smile" paces like two bestsellers in a row of unprecedental proportions at this old house because the first print order of 50,000 was exhausted in four weeks, resulting in repeat order of the same. Which means that the book, which is officially published on Aug. 16, will have 100,000 copies in print. Film rights were bought by 20th-Fox from the galleys. Otto Preminger has "Tristesse," which will be a Columbia release.

P-H's 3% Stock Divy

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, July 31.

One of the convictions of modern print is that you can hold to almost any ideas and write for the reactionary press but if you write for a leftist publication you must surely share their ideology. This conviction is less true in England than in America but, generally speaking, it's accepted on both sides of the ferrous drape.

We have had writers in the past who could turn out detective stories, upholding law and order one day and anarchistic essays on art the next, but such schizophrenics have no place to go these days. Claud Cockburn (pronounced Coburn in the cockeyed way Britons fight phonetic spelling) may be the last of these non-conformists.

He has tossed off an autobiographical item called "A Discord of Trumpets," which Simon & Schuster has published on this side for $4.10 including tax, or $3.95, excluding tax, and who can?

Rarely has a newspaperman come to his craft in more devious ways. Cockburn's greatest achievement I suspect was becoming a foreign correspondent for the London Times without first being indoctrinated in the paper's partyline in Printing House Square. His next big success was in getting in circulation a mimeographed periodical called The Week, which was full of what England considers libel. The Week was judgment-proot because it had no assets to attach. He himself brags that it was "the nastiest-looking bit of work ever dropped on a breakfast table." It had none of the typographically clean qualities of Kiplinger's mimeographed reports from Washington on finance or Pearson's on politics, but it was loaded with the inside stuff big wheels talk around a luncheon table but never include in state papers.

Seven Subs, All Paid For

It was the first publication to describe Lady Astor's fascist minded friends as "The Clivedon Set" and to tell what they said and thought. It got hold of the sucker list of Foreign Affairs, mailed out thousands of copies and roped in seven subscribers. From there it began to build, for obviously it couldn't go lower without going out of biz.

In two years diplomats, bankers, senators, kings and Indian maharajahs read it before they read their bank balances. Joe McCarthy listed its editor as one of the 269 most dangerous Reds unjailed. That was the week a Czech Communist confessed he had been recruited to the cause of anti-Communism by this same Cockburn and was promptly hanged for his dereliction.

Correspondents around London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Budapest and New York knew Cockburn as an odd screwball who could certainly write believable pieces for his London Times in "the little moment," in French Ambassador Paul Claudel's phrase, "which remains between the crisis and the catastrophe."

Between issues of The Week, Cockburn wrote features for The (London) Daily Worker, a Communist rag, all of whose views he certainly didn't share. But the anarchists of Spain came within seconds of shooting him when he presented the credentials of the Worker to their leader during the civil war there. The anarchists seemed to hate Communists as much as McCarthy and Capone claimed they did. The anarchists were sure Cockburn was Franco spy and was heading to join the counter-revolutionaries when they caught him wandering beyond their front lines. He saved his life by outshooting them as proof that he was a stronger enemy of France than they were.

Cockie Rides Again

Claud was the first member of the Cockburn family to visit Washington since Admiral Sir George Cockburn burned the White House in 1814. The correspondent saw history almost repeat itself when on his first night in Washington the dome of the Capitol burst into flames from a house painter's dropped cigar. His experiences in New York during the crash of 1929, however, struck me as more interesting.

I was in London for VARIETY at that time and all that went on during Prohibition and the bull market were incredible hearsay to me. It took this gangling to bring it home in clearer focus than anyone else has been able to do—barring of course VARIETY's explanation that it was an egg Wall Street had laid.

Cockburn as a plaid-colored fish out of water from the start. Though of Scotch descent, he actually was born in Peking where his father was in the British diplomatic service. But of course he was shipped home to Oxford when it came time for him to be educated like a gentleman.

His wanderjahre through Central Europe after he came down from Oxford was hardly above the economic status of an American road kid of the Dempsey-Tully era. But he managed to latch on to the fringe of the London Times Berlin bureau and from there climbed to eminence in their far-flung news chain. He baffled the paper's brass when they wanted him to succeed Wilmott Lewis as chief of the Washington bureau and he quit the paper instead.

Messrs. Dawson, and Deakin, high priests of Printing House Square, tried to talk him out of quitting. "I have always regarded the Times," Dawson assured him, as something of an organ of the left. Though never, I hope, of the extreme left.

This shows you what people think of themselves. Around London we thought of the Times as right of Neville Chamberlain.

Wilmott Lewis must have been a doll of a boss. He had been an actor, down and nearly out. Once in Eastbourne he sat up all night writing new material for the stranded troupe. The only thing he retained in Washington from those sad days were the gestures of an actor.

He once asked President Hoover, "As you gaze into the future, as you peer down the gray vista of the years, do you not apprehend, sir, that the problems of the United States are not only problems of growth but" his voice sank to a whisper—"of decay?"

Hoover didn't think so and later in a speech said the country's problems were those of growth only, not decay. Of course everything that grows, even redwood trees, eventually decays and dies. But Hoover was an engineer, not a philosopher.

Within a year he was to see the stock market skid until investors losses equalled half the national debt. Yet that September and October weren't all bad. Felischmann was still selling 2c cakes of yeast and doing so well at it they were hiring Rudy Vallee at I5,000 a week to croon to time-servers, his being theirs. At least so he said.

But Cockburn was aware of what a dent the boom-or-bust would make on the face of the world. In time it produced millions of layoffs in all countries, 14,000,000 in this country alone.

Cockburn's cloak and dagger version of how he nearly got the exclusive of Edward VIII's fight with Prime Minister Baldwin for his mimeographed Week is a fascinating example of how reader-belief is sometimes vastly more important than circulation figures. It ended, however, with a messenger on a motorcycle tearing across town from the King's palace to the garret office of The Week at one o'clock in the morning with a one line unsigned letter. It read: "The situation has developed too fast." Baldwin won, and the King abdicated to join his Wally Simpson in France.

People may think Cockburn died years ago. Actually he returned to Ireland, took the name of James Helvick and is writing novels now. I guess his long legs went back on him after all.

QUESADA: LATIN CONCERT KING

Inside Stuff—Concerts

London Daily Telegraph reports that Zinka Milanov, of the Metropolitan Opera, deliberately flaunted theatrical precedent (or superstition) by appearing onstage at Covent Garden carrying a bouquet of real flowers in the role of "Tosca." Subsequently it was argued that beyond superstition there's a commonsense reason for it: fallen leaves or petals are a potential danger to chorus and dancers.

English-Guided Dutch Ballet

Amsterdam, July 31.

In the month of July when artists of the Netherlands Opera and the Netherlands Comedie are having their (paid) holidays, it is possible for other theatrical groups to lease the Amsterdam Municipal Theatre. Thus the Ballet Der Lage Landen (Ballet Of The Low Countries) could give five performances (July 17-21) for prestige.

Working with only small subsids and touring the provinces, this ballet group has been improving its level during the last three years under guidance of and in training by English dancers Angela Bailey and Jack Carter. Its repertory consists of some 25 ballets, of varying styles, including "Coppelia," alternatively danced by Norman McDowell and Ben De Rochemont.

Carter, who is first choregrapher of group, has conceived an imposing "Witch Boy," violently danced by Norman McDowell. New item in repertory is "Caleidoscope" (preemed July 17) by Walter Gore who made a new version of his ballet. It is a light divertissement along rather architectonic lines, a colorful spectacle and spectre, that is danced with style and perfection.

DISPEKER LINES UP EUROPEAN DATES

During her recent seven-week roundrobin of the Italian and German opera houses, N. Y. manager Thea Dispeker signed a bevy of American singers. They include Claire Watson at the Frankfurt Opera, Donald Grebe with Krefeld Opera in Rhineland, Florence Rochelle at Kaiserslautern, Germany. Doris Young goes to the Swiss (Zurich Opera).

Meanwhile other Dispeker clients include Franca Duval making a film on "Tosca" in Rome and Heidi Kroll readying as Elsa and Desdamona at the Berlin Opera in Sept. and Norman Scott, the Met basso, who'll do Mephisto come fall at Vienna's Volksopera.

High Schoolers at Philly Ormandy Rehearsals

Four open rehearsals are planned for this season with about 3,000 students attending each. Letters have been sent to heads of public, parochial and private high schools inviting them to participate in the program.

Ormandy will play host at the four sessions and explain inner workings of orchestra to students.

Concert Reviews

New Jersey Festival

Millburn, N.J., July 31.

New Jersey's Summer Music Festival ended here Sunday (29) with the largest audience of the three-program series, the gross hitting close to $2,500 for the pop program under direction of Samuel Antek. Operatic and operetta excerpts with Richard Cassily tenor, and Maria di Gerlando, soprano, soloing with the festival orchestra outpulled the all-Mozart menu which opened the series and the "Bach to Barger" fare that had Leonid Hambro and Jascha Zayde, WQXR duo-pianists, as principal soloists.

It was the inaugural season and the modest deficit for the tri-part fest indicates there will be more in the future at Frank Carrington's Paper Mill Playhouse, long successful in drama and operetta. Maestro Antek, according to report, donated his services for the summer concerts, a good-will gesture that cannot hurt his position in the Jersey communities that support his winter season activities as musical director of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday's festival finale opened with Antek directing a sparkling, lively performance of "Dance of the Comedians" from Smetana's seldom-performed opera "The Bartered Bride." He took it at a brisk pace, but the attacks and intonation were clean and the ensemble was all that could be asked. Egmont Overture followed, then Antek did the prelude to "La Traviata" to set the stage for Miss de Gerlando's solos from that Verdi all-time fave. Miss Gerlando, an attractive, personable gal did "Ah forse lui," followed by "Sempre libera" with solid results and encored with excerpt from the Broadway hit of some years ago, "Song of Norway". Warbler has possibilities for the smarter bistros, if she elects to go into that field. Broadway musicals also are her dish.

Tenor Cassilly did the "Flower Song" from "Carmen" and encored with "Yours is My Heart Alone" by Lehar. His is a robust tenor, and he scored with the audience, particularly with the Lehar. He could loosen up a bit on the stage; presently, his platform manner does not equal his vocalizing.

After two light works by the orch, solo pair returned to do the duet that ends the first act of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly." The warmth and drama of Puccini's melodies were fully realized and the two voices blended ideally. Batoner Antek kept the orch well under control and gave fine support to his soloists, who encored with Viennese-type duet. Concert closed with Strauss' "Emperor Waltzes," which would have profited with a more "eecht" Viennese lilt, but it was a well-received closer to a pops program that sent the Sunday audience home to dinner in a happy frame of mind. Wien.

Oceanside Recitals

Atlantic ity, July 31.

The ninth annual Ventnor Summer Music Festival Aug. 7, will be topped by Leon Fleisher, pianist. Recitals occupy Ventnor's pier auditorium.

Other bookings include William Warfield, baritone, Aug. 14; Beaux Arts trio, with Daniel Guilet, violinist; Bernard Greenhouse, cellist; Menahem Pressler, pianist, Aug. 21; and Elaine Malbin, soprano, on Aug. 28th.

OBSCURE BUT TOP WORLD BOOKER

By PAUL PIMSLEUR

As far as the concert business goes, Latin America is just one big happy hemisphere, solidly booked by one man. He is Ernesto de Quesada, of Havana, Cuba. As president of Conciertos Daniel, he has a hand in booking almost every artist performing anywhere in his vast territory, which stretches over 5,000 miles from the U. S. southern border to Cape Horn, and contains 175,000,000 people in an area almost three times as large as the U. S.

Since his name rarely appears in print, Quesada is comparatively little known, even in the concert trade. But in terms of distance and population covered, he is the world's top impresario. Only one other, Sol Hurok, comes to mind, the difference being that Hurok has heavy competition, so he can "make 'em" but he couldn't "break 'em."

One of the keys to Quesada's preeminence is the fact that he has three sons strategically located as the leading managers of their respective cities. Alfonso de Quesada runs the Buenos Aires office. Ernesto Jr. is the manager in Mexico City. Brother Enrique is ditto in up-and-coming Caracas, Venezuela. Having these three pivotal playdates tied up, plus other playing time assured by long-time agents in other places, Quesada has sure knowledge of how long a tour he can offer an artist.

Combined with his 40-year record for scrupulous honesty, this gives him a strong position in contracting artists.

His only competition for big-name performers comes from rival Conciertos Iriberri in Buenos Aires, run by an equally long-established and equally reputable gentleman. But Quesada can offer the whole of Latin America, while Iriberri works mainly in Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil. Their rivalry over the years has been stiff but friendly.

Madrid Office, Too

The big cohesive factor in Quesada's empire is the Spanish language tie. He is Spain's major manager, as well as longhair king of Latin America. His Madrid office, run by Swedish Felicitas Keller, provides most of the foreign artists for Spain's orchestras, opera and concert tours. But Quesada's area is not all Spanish-speaking. Portugal and Brazil speak Portuguese, some of the Caribbean islands speak English, and one of his spots (Curacao) speaks Dutch.

Perhaps most important in explaining the unflagging loyalty of his widespread associates is the personality of Quesada himself. He is a small, wiry, bright-eyed man, now mid-sixtyish. Conversation with him is always exciting, for he bristles with energy and creative ideas. Most astounding is his memory. He remembers every detail of all tours he ever managed, and all aspects of the many current negotiations. He rarely keeps records, except on scraps of paper. Hundreds of these, bound with a rubber band, bulge in his jacket pocket.

He has no regular place one could call an office, his telephone number is secret, and he has no secretary other than a stenographer who comes in every morning to take dictation and type the scores of letters he writes daily. His world-wide business is conducted solely by correspondence, with a liberal sprinkling of cablegrams. An idea of the number of cables he sends can be gathered from the fact that his Buenos Aires office paid a cablegram bill of $4,000 in 1955—far under the Havana figure.

A Dependable 'Latin'

Most of Quesada's agents have been working with him for years, contributing to his remarkable pioneering effort in developing the concert business in a part of the world where distances (and therefore costs) are enormous. His far-sighted leadership has resulted in an imposing number of regular concert series all over Latin America, even in small towns. Quesada has often dropped considerable sums, selling attractions at less than cost to help a fledgling series grow. He's been known to rent a special plane, costing more than the fee received, to make sure an attraction got to its performance on time. He has established confidence in a volatile, or manana, part of the world. He is no devotee of the fast buck.

A list of the artists Quesada has managed in Latin America would include almost every important concert name of the last four decades. Just a sampling: pianists Hoffmann, Rubinstein, Iturbi, Brailowsky; violinists Elman, Kreisler, Thibaud, Heifetz, Francescatti, Stern; cellists Casals, Feuermann, Fournier; singers Flagstad, Schumann, Moore, de los Angeles; Quartets Budapest, Kolisch; dance attractions Ballet Theatre, both Ballet Russes; conductors Furtwangler, Karajan, Weingartner, Ormandy, Rodzinski, Kleiber, Markevitch; group attractions Vienna Choir Boys, Trapp Family, both Don Cossacks, Yale Glee Club, Salzburg Marionettes.

On many of these tours, Quesada himself accompanied the artists as tour manager. Knowing the headaches of a tour in mananaland, certain big-name artists have a proviso in their contracts that if Quesada doesn't go with them, they dont' go.

A normal tour of Latin America under Quesadas management last from three to five months. In most places, an artist will perform on a series booked mainly or wholly by Quesada. Many of these take place in small cities with unexpectedly high interest in serious music, fostered over the years by Quesada in cooperation with local citizens who devote time, money and effort to boosting their concert series. More than one local manager has summed it up by saying: "If it weren't for Quesada, we wouldn't have live concerts here."

Is Mrs. R. The Masked Benefactor?

Music tradesters have been speculating about the identity of the "anonymous donor" who has guaranteed the fees for six young pianists to appear in a special series at the Metropolitan Museum of Art next season. The test run for the tyro keyboarders at the Museum may lead to a similar showcasing in other cities, according to the plans as revealed in VARIETY last issue.

Generally, when a concert is given or a work commissioned in the longhair field, credit is given to the foundation, organization or individual who is the source of the funds. In this case, however, strict secrecy surrounds the details and it is believed that less than half-a-dozen insiders are acquainted with the facts.

One guess: Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. made possible the Metropolitan Opera's new production of "The Magic Flute," which cost upwards of $90,000 and which was the Met's principal celebration of the Mozart Bicentennial. She has helped many young singers and musicians get special coaching abroad, all on a sub rosa basis and with even the recipient, in most cases, being unaware of his benefactor. In her youth, she herself was a pianist and, in fact, studied with the late Artur Schnabel, generally regarded as one of the all-time greats.

Regardless of the correct identity of the Museum's musically-minded donor (and other guesses mention foundations) a number of colleges and institutions throughout the country will be watching the results with interest. Many cultural projects support concert series, but none can afford to present the youngsters who need engagements. Emphasis, even away from the commercial impresarios, is on the big names with b.o. pull. But, given a subsidy in the shape of free concerts by talented youngsters, many non-profit institutions could expand their concert series, giving more to their public and at the same time helping to build careers for the future. Therein lies the far-reaching significance of the New York experiment.

TOO BROAD A JUMP

Schwieger's Kansas City-To-Nuernberg Alternating Off

Kansas City, July 31.

A stunt whereby Hans Schwieger would have become the first symphony director to commute between jobs on two continents fell through last week when timing proved impractical. Schwieger is conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic, and was in the running for the parttime job of director of the Nuernberg, Germany, Symphony.

Schwieger has been in Germany all summer conducting, and did a guest shot at Nuernberg.

Nuernberg post has now gone to British-born Erich Riede, who is director of the Palatinate Opera at Kaiserslautern.

Paris, July 24.

New company is financed by dancer Eveline Cournand who will be one of the leads of the new outfit which, however, will have no stars in the accepted tradition. Equal opportunities will be given to all the 20 dancers who will form the new company. Vitale Fokine, son of famous choreographer, has been put under contract for two years in order to revive all the principal ballets of his father.

MAGYAR BALLET CO. A CLICK IN GENOA FEST

Rome, July 25.

The Hungarian State Dance Group is the latest of a series of successful performers which have made this year's Nervi (Genoa) Ballet Festival a top event in its second year. In for five performances, troupe, already known to many via its filmed appearances in Hungarian shorts, received national attention via press and newsreels. Group featured 130 dancers with choruses directed by Bela Bartok and Zoltan Kodaly, orchestra led by Imre Czenki. It's their first appearance in Italy.

Ballet Festival ends next week with performances by an Indian dance company, led by Ram Gopal, also on its first Italian swing. Previously, fete had spotlighted the Royal Theatre Ballet of Stockholm, the Scala Theatre Ballet Co., and the Hungarian soloists, Nora Kovach and Istvan Rebausky, who incidentally had a close call on their U.S. return voyage aboard the illfated Andrea Doria.

about making a deal behind the Iron Curtain if the terms are right.

Countries like Czechoslovakia, Russia, Hungary and Poland had indicated repeatedly they're now again anxious to buy U.S. pix. However, the attitude of the American industry to date has been not to sell. Availability of the Warner and RKO libraries, now both controlled for the most part by tv interests, may change that picture drastically. It is also likely to make it tougher than ever for the Motion Picture Export Assn. to maintain a common front abroad, inasmuch as countries currently being boycotted—Spain and Denmark—could then avail themselves of outside pictures and could resist the MPEA demands indefinitely.

Yet another aspect of the situation is that, in many European countries, the "old" stars are still very popular and the age of the films sold to tv actually is a boon rather than a handicap.

It is also a fact that in the "free" markets — particularly in South America—the tv-held libraries will undoubtedly be used as competition vs. the new pix being brought in by the very distributors who originally sold out to television.

we're always afraid the other fellow might step in and grab a buck.

"Take the suburbs, for instance. We know that there are places where it would pay to take some houses and turn them into second runs instead of having a brace of theatres all play the same film. Yet, we don't do it. And why? Because we're afraid some other fellow might come along and upgrade his second run situation to firstrun. So we stay where we are, and everybody suffers.

Same with double billing. I know of a number of exhibitors who'd love to chuck twin bills. But they won't do it, and for only one reason — the fellow across the street mightn't follow suit, and maybe he'll gross a couple of dollars more. In fact, instead of dropping the dual bill, I know of some instances now where a man is booking triple features."

from Italy with her three-year-old son, Richard, was also aboard the Italian luxury liner. They were separated going down a rope ladder on the ship's side. She returned on the Ile de France, which picked up many survivors, and the boy was returned aboard the badly-limping Stockholm. Janet Stewart, a friend of the actress who was also aboard, and NBC associate director Gordon Rigsby made appearances on NBC-TV's "Tonight" when they returned Thursday, to recount their adventures.

Miss Stewart and Rigsby told of passengers' heroism. Michael Stoller, who cleffed "Black Denim Trousers" and other songs in the rock 'n' roll idiom, accused Doria crewmen of negligence. He led a petition to that effect. John W. Griffin, exec secretary of the Record Industry Assn. of America, was also on the Doria.

Betsy Drake, actress-wife of Cary Grant, was on the Doria. Mrs. Cianfarra had been working on a story about Grant in Spain, and the two women stayed together on a rescue ship.

Morris Novik's Account

Morris S. Novik, president of New York's indie station WOV, which specializes in bilingual broadcasts, had returned from an extended trip to Italy with his wife. Their visit had cultural and quasi-official overtones, in light of his station's partiality to Italian-language broadcasts.

His closeup on the catastrophe is one of being eminently fair, disclaiming that he "naturally couldn't know what was happening in other parts of the ship, but the fact is that suddenly I found myself something like a school monitor in trying to help the women and children slide down the 45-degree decks to the Jacob's Ladder from whence they debarked into lifeboats." (Mrs. Novik observes that every one of the rescued femmes "must have real sore backsides, but we sure were lucky getting onto the rope-ladders that way").

The radio station executive continued, "It is true there were no instructions in English, that all the Italian crew said was an occasional 'be calm,' spoken in Italian, but that's all that would have been heard by the Americans if, whoever was issuing the infrequent admonitions, could have been heard. I don't say it wouldn't have helped but with 200-300 passengers in our segment of the ship we were doing all right, just because there was no panic in our group and a few of the Americans were calm." Novik had praise for one diningroom steward who came along, rather belatedly, but when he came along he took over from him and then the male passengers were able to descend into the lifeboats from the Ile de France.

TV GUIDE offers you the attention of America's top 4,000,000 television families (the families who live, eat, breathe, and talk television.)

Television viewing habits don't carry over from one season to the next. Every fall, new shows, new stars, and new times make it necessary for the viewer to remake his own personal viewing schedule.

The time for promotion is when those schedules are made. The rating sweepstakes knows no stretch runners. A show makes the grade in the first six weeks, or, usually, not at all. Viewing habits are easier to make than to break.

Shows that want the maximum possible effective audience promotion should build their advertising plans around TV GUIDE. Its readers—100% television viewers—are concentrated in the key television areas, in the important city and suburban areas where mass audiences live.

4,000,000 families will begin making their fall viewing plans on September 12, the issue date of TV GUIDE's annual Fall Preview. In this important and eagerly awaited issue, TV GUIDE will offer a comprehensive analysis of the new season, giving every available fact about every entry, new and old, on the network lineups.

20th Pays Dramatist Inge $60,000 Bonus to Unfetter 'Bus Stop'

Twentieth-Fox late last week concluded a deal with playwright William Inge allowing the company to release the screen version of "Bus Stop" at its convenience. Arrangement reportedly involved payment of $60,000 to Inge.

Marilyn Monroe starrer, one of the "big" ones from 20th this year, is skedded to open in Atlantic City Aug. 14. It won't get into New York until after the current run of "King and I" at the Roxy.

Issue of the "Bus Stop" release created a legal wrangle between Inge and 20th, when the playwright asked for—and obtained—an injunction to keep the company from releasing the film until Dec. 1, 1956. Inge said he wanted to protect remaining roadshows of the play which is supposed to open in Chicago Aug. 13.

20th, which originally paid $75,000 for the play—with a top of $250,000—was very eager to get "Bus Stop" on its release sked as originally planned. Once before, in the instance of "Seven Year Itch," also a Monroe pic, 20th paid $175,000 to obtain earlier release of the film version.

20th is opening "Bus Stop" at Chinese Theatre in Hollywood Aug. 29.

TV Public Wants Levant Back; Had Been Fired For Anti-Nixon Barbs & Smut

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Oscar Levant, bounced only last Thursday (2) from his KCOP show, "Words About Music," may be back on tv this week following deluge of protests to sponsor and station over the axing. Al Terrence, his carpet sponsor, and KCOP received over 500 protests when Levant was axed because show was "too dirty" and made cracks against v.p. Richard Nixon, according to Terrence.

Terrence is now mulling Levant's return to tv via 90-minute kinescoped show which would be trimmed to an hour airtime. KCOP manager Jack Heintz said, "A kinescoped show where we would have absolute control of program content would be acceptable to us." Terrence also stressed that if he can control show via edited kine he is very interested in sponsoring Levant locally, also syndicating it in half-hour version nationally.

Terrence, admitting he is being flooded with protests over Levant axing, remarked, "I feel I've done an injustice to a great artist. I've been upset about cancelling show. Oscar says a lot of things he shouldn't, but if we can control show through edited kine, may sponsor him again."

When axed, Levant said the action was "unilateral, high-handed

India Adams Doing It Herself in 'Can-Can'

India Adams, who supplied the off-screen singing voice for Joan Crawford in "Torch Song" and Cyd Charisse in "Bandwagon," has joined the do-it-yourself vogue. She began a six-week, three-tent tour as femme lead in "Can-Can" last Monday (6) at St. John Terrell's Neptune (N. J.) Music Circus.

The stand there is for a fortnight, to be followed by three weeks at Terrell's Lambertville (N. J.) Music Circus and then a week at the Camden (N. J.) Music Circus. Miss Adams understudied the part during the tour of the original Broadway production of the show.

Again Take Note Of N.Y. Suburbs' Whopping Future

Population of metropolitan New York area will grow to 18,000,000 in 1970 from the present 15,000,000, but the greatest growth will come in the suburbs and not in the city. City itself is expected to gain only about 450,000 in the next 14 years over its current population of 8,107,000.

Figures of special interest to the film industry, are contained in a Daily News reprint of a series of articles by John Lewis and Sidney Mirkin on the shape of New York, circa 1970. Series appeared in Feb. 1956.

The Lewis-Mirkin articles, underscoring the trend to the suburbs, said Nassau would go from 967,000 to 1,500,000, Suffolk from 380,000 to 650,000, and Westchester from 683,000 to 900,000. In New Jersey, both Bergen and Essex counties should hit the 1,000,000 mark by 1970.

TV Making Us Nation Of Fatties, Sez Expert

Minneapolis, Aug. 7.

Television is helping to make the U. S. a nation of fatties.

At least, the present fondness for video watching easily can be a factor in avoirdupois, it's pointed out by Dr. Ancel Keys, Minnesota U. faculty member whose research in human nutrition in his physiological hygiene laboratory has won him world renown and who now is conducting experiments in weight reduction.

While he himself is no tv addict,

CLASSROOMS IN POP ART PROBE

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Every highschool and college instructor of English courses ought to be a classroom critic of the popular arts of film, television, radio and even jazz music. Such is the viewpoint of an increasingly articulate bloc of young pedagogs who are finding a new sympathy in the "school press" which has quietly begun publishing criticism.

Elementary English (10,000 subscribing schools), English Journal (19,000) and College English (4,800) have all recently added comment (monthly) on the popular arts, while other scholastic periodicals started some time ago. This is in reaction to a ferment described, affirmatively, as "developing the cultural potentials in mass communications" and, negatively, as "taking the educators' hex off less-than-fine arts."

In a few reported instances jazz has sneaked in the back door of English courses as a new way of illustrating "style" in poetry. Students readily dig poetic metre and rhythm when parallels are drawn with jazz styles familiar to the modern generation.

English classes also come alive, it's asserted, when teacher makes like Bosley Crowther. After viewing one picture based on a Pulitzer Prize work, a class voted with fine youthful extremism, "Resolved, that the Pulitzer Prize doesn't mean a thing." Discussions as to the screen treatment's discrepancies from the original text and whether dropping certain characters or em-

Strike Threat On Eve of Convention

National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians notified NBC-TV in N.Y. that if it doesn't come to terms on salaries of air-conditioning engineers and maintenance men in the web's N.Y. plants a strike will be called this weekend. Strike threat by the union, which also represents radio-tv engineers at NBC, coincides with the radio and television coverage of the political conventions in Chi and Frisco.

A union spokesman said that negotiations in behalf of the 51 airconditioning staffers and nine maintenance men in the network's N.Y. setup have been going on since May, in a "lackadaisical once-a-week" fashion. Source said that the webs didn't want to meet the salary demands set down by NABET, which assumed jurisdiction of the two disputed groups shortly before haggling began.

Germans to Show French Film Short Dealing With Nazis' Hell-Camps

In a move carrying over ones of surprise, the official German press and information office has purchased the German rights to "Nuit et Brouillard" (Night and Fog), a French short about the Nazi concentration camps.

Intention, according to reports from Germany, is to add a German commentary and to show the subject to German governmen' officials as well as to youth groups, etc. It'll also be made available to the film trade.

Purchase was made at the orders of the Bonn government and involved 25,000 marks (a little over $6,000).

Incident has its odd aspects. First, most Germans today still prefer not to talk or think about the camps and the millions who perished in them, so that—even if officially sponsored—such an unpleasant reminder isn't likely to be particularly popular.

Second, "Night and Fog," was withdrawn from the Cannes film festival earlier this year by the French when the latter became aware of German sensitivity regarding the topic of concen'ration camps. In return, the German "Himmel Ohne Sterne" (Sky Without Stars), considered potentially offensive to the Soviets, was pulled from the competi'ion. It so happens that "Sky" was the only German entry.

Sources in New York speculated that the German government move may have been motivated by a desire to still foreign cri icism to the effect that German officialdom was trying to play down that macabre aspect of the Nazi era. "Whatever the reason, it's a very decent thing for the people in Bonn to do," was one comment.

Disks Hop on James Dean Vogue Via Tune Tributes

The disk industry is latching on to the new popularity vogue for the late James Dean. MGM Records has packaged instrumental workovers of the themes from "East of Eden" and "Rebel Without A Cause," two of the pix in which Dean appeared, in a special sleeve featuring a photo of the actor and clips from the films. The tunes were cut by Art Mooney.

Coral Records also got into the act with a Dick Jacobs cutting of the theme from "East of Eden." It, too, is being pushed via the Dean tieup. The indie Forest label has hopped on the bandwagon with "His Name Was Dean," etched by a new crooner, Nathan Russell. About a year ago, RCA Victor had a waxing of a tune called "The Ballad of James Dean" but nothing happened to it.

See Tents Lush Field for Tiring B'way Musicals

Wallingford, Conn., Aug. 7.

Instead of slogging through the summer doldrums on Broadway, no-longer-capacity musicals might profitably be booked for hot weather tours of the showtent circuit. That's the belief of Ben Segal, general manager of the Oakdale Musical Theatre here.

The local canvastop impresario figures that a show which has just about used up its Broadway potential by late springtime would be better off to call it a day on the Main Stem and cast its lot with the tent setups, where a 12-week season is available at weekly potential gross up to $34,000. Un-

Stevens Isn't Quitting Show Biz for Politics

Roger L. Stevens has no intention of giving up the theatre for a political career. Even if Adlai Stevenson should be elected president, the producer-realtor is not interested in holding public office.

Stevens concedes that what he's seen of behind-the-scenes politics is fascinating, and he's looking forward eagerly to sitting in one of the traditional smoke-filled rooms as major party decisions are made during the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, starting

Gordon MacRae's 'Fair Lady' Medley Unfair To Show, Levin Squawks

The line of demarcation between grand rights and small rights, always a point of contention, may get another airing in court. This time, attorney Irving Cohen, acting on behalf of producer Herman Levin of "My Fair Lady," has wired Gordon MacRae and his wife, Sheila Stephens, that unless they delete a 22-minute portion of their turn in which they enact songs and narration from that musical, suit will be filed. MacRae, it's alleged, has done this bit in Nevada niteries. The MacRaes are current'y at the Desert Inn, Las Vegas.

Producers, as well as performing rights societies are constantly on the watch for infractions of the copyright, which they claim are involved when an act takes substantial portions of a musical for reproduction on a nitery floor. Pro-

Stevens Disdains Dean Morbidity Bit

He and Warners Agreed on Straight Merchandising Of 'Giant' on Its Merits

George Stevens, producer-director of Edna Ferber's "Giant" which Warner Bros. is about to release, states that he anticipates no promotional problems regarding James Dean because he is firmly opposed to any ballyhoo capital being made of Dean's short career and untimely death and the attendant furore on the newstands, where Dean is still (nearly a year after his death) hotter'n a pistol (or Presley) as a somewhat morbid piece de resistance.

Warners is standing aloof from the postmortem angles both by its own preference and under instructions from the Stevens-Ferber-Henry Ginsberg coproduction owners.

Stevens is particularly impatient with the fan periodicals which have sought to read "mystic or cultic meanings" into young Dean's short life and tragic passing.

Stevens and WB are agreed in steering away from any psychological or other mysterioso ballyhoo even though, for a time, it might attract a little attention to the actor's third and final feature. Young Dean "had no premonition of death," as one fan mag approached Stevens, and it is not true that somebody had told the director, "don't you think we'd better finish up Jimmy Dean's part of it first?"

Stevens is vehement against exploitive fan mag approach, though well aware of the strange Valentino-like mourning for the 23-year-old player who made but two pictures. "It would not only be bad taste for us to think developing the morbid tangents, if values they

Aud Hoots, Crix Assail Wagner Opera Festival

Bayreuth, Aug. 7.

The 80th Wagner Opera Festival (sixth since the second World War) to be performed at Bayreuth in the theatre which composer Richard Wagner designed himself, has just gotten underway here, with 1,800 on hand for the sellout opening performance. This was the year's new addition to the annual schedule, "The Meistersinger." Wolfgang Windgassen and Gre Brouwenstijn sang the leads. With Andre Cluytens of Paris conducting the opening Fest and the setting of the historic opera created in the modern style of 39-year-old Wieland Wagner, grandson of composer Richard, the crix were less kind to the production than they have been to the innovations of the two Wagner brothers in recent years.

More Rose Red 'Deals'

Billy Rose, who last week made an agreement in principle with Russia for the exchange of U. S. and Russian talent, concluded a similar accord a few days later with the Red government in Warsaw.

Deal was made with the Polish Ministry of Culture. Soviet agreement might bring as many as 500 American performers to Russia and a similar amount of Russians here.

Name Talent Big Lure In Miami Marlins' Hot Try For League Pennant

Miami, Aug. 7.

With show biz toppers headlined to hypo attendance, the Miami Marlins, hot in the race for the International League pennant in first year as this city's entry into topflight baseball, will go after the League attendance record tonight (Tues.) in a specially staged show-game at the Orange Bowl.

Sid Salomon Jr., prexy of the club, after enlisting civic and business organizations in the area to aid in block sales of tickets, is turning all net profits over the Variety (Tent 33) Childrens' Hospital and several other child-welfare groups. Some 80,000 ducats at 55c each have been sold to the organizations in the all-out drive to fill the Bowl, with the buyers allowed to dispose of the tickets as they see fit. Most are offering them to customers who patronize their stores, restaurants, et al.

Name lures from showbiz include Martha Raye, Russ Morgan, Helen O'Connell and their tv company, Gloria DeHaven, Betty Reilly, Margaret Whiting, Kirby Stone Four, Ginny Simms, Cab Calloway, Anne Baxter and the Preacher Rollo band.

Borge Boffo On BBC-TV, Hope's Wintry Jokes NSH

London, Aug. 7.

Two American performers took over the spotlight on British teevee last Tuesday (31) and results point to two extreme reactions. Victor Borge's live telecast on BBC, at 8:30 p.m., was regarded as probably the top event of this or any other season, while Bob Hope's telecast (film) which started on ITV at 8 p.m. was panned.

Clifford Davis, of the Daily Mirror, called Borge's 50-minute exhibit "the best thing of its kind ever seen in Britain," while Hope got an opposite reaction. As Cyril Ainsley pointed out in the Daily Express, Hope's show, on film, had been made the past winter, during Britain's severe cold spell, and

Arts-for-Ike Group

Washington, Aug. 7.

A new drive to capture a share of the intellectuals and artists—the eggheads—for the Republican Party is being undertaken by the newly launched Committee of the Arts and Sciences for Eisenhower. Its sponsors hope to make it nationally known as "CASE."

Co-chairmen of the committee are actress Helen Hayes and Dr. Harry Carman, retired dean of Columbia College. Executive director is M. Robert Rogers, on leave as president of Station WGMS, Washington.

Among other organizing members are Robert Montgomery, the President's personal tv adviser; Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Howard Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman-Rochester School of Music; J. Donald Adams, editor emeritus of the New York Times book review section; James P. Baxter, president of Williams College, etc.

Silvers to Sub Injured Sullivan

Phil Silvers will stand in for Ed Sullivan on the latter's CBS-TV stanza next Sunday (12). Sullivan broke several ribs in an automobile accident last Sabbath night after his show, and now the network reports that his physicians fear a chest cold he had before the crash might develop into pneumonia.

CBS declared that Sullivan's absence from the 8 to 9 p.m. show next week was simply a "precautionary measure." The emcee-columnist had finished the program last Sunday at McGuire Air Force Base, in New Jersey, and was returning to his farm home in Southbury, Conn., when his auto was smashed by another which had swerved out of its lane. Both cars were almost completely demolished.

With Sullivan in the car were his son-in-law, Robert Precht, and a private detective working for Sullivan, Ralph Cacace. Precht, an assistant on the tv stanza, sustained a broken arm and facial bruises. Cacace was reported in serious condition yesterday (Tues.) with a skull fracture, chest injuries and multiple lacerations. The driver of the other vehicle, 22-year-old Joseph Palmucci, was described in poor condition, having a hip fracture and possibly a broken jaw.

Sullivan is in Griffith Hospital, in Derby, Conn., where a spokesman said he might be returned home tomorrow (Thurs.).

Silvers is not new to the substitute route. The comedian, who has his own filmed show on CBS-TV, filled in for Jackie Gleason over a year ago, when Gleason broke his ankle.

German 'Devil's General,' With Anti-Nazi Message, Set for U. S. Handling

"The Devil's General," German film based on the Carl Zuckmayer play of the same title, has been acquired from Real Film (Hamburg) by Richard Gordon, Emile J. Lustig and a Canadian group for distribution in the U. S. Gordon had prior interests in the property.

"Devil's General," directed by Helmut Kaeutner and starring Curd Juergens in the role of the airforce general, will be released in the U. S. in subtitled version.

Pic, with a distinct anti-Nazi message, was a big hit in Germany.

'Taint So

N.Y. Times has been running teaser ads on the upcoming Kingsley International French import, "We Are All Murderers."

Woman reader wrote in protesting against the Times' accepting ads of such bitter and inflammatory nature. "Any way," said the complaint, "the statement just isn't true."

A Giant At 75

None has written the story of the motion picture in all its size and glamor more resoundingly than Cecil B. DeMille who, next Sunday (Aug. 12), marks his 75th natal day.

This year's Paramount release of the latest DeMille epic, "10 Commandments," also marks his 70th production. Just to round out the basic statistics, 1956 also marks his 43d anniversary in the picture business. That's almost as long as the history of the industry itself.

DeMille's record of boxoffice, since he first produced and directed his first full-length motion picture, "The Squaw Man," from a play by his brother, William C. DeMille, in 1913, at a time when Hollywood was a drowsy, rural suburb of Los Angeles, is parred only by his personal record as a first citizen of the picture business. DeMille always personified the tradition of film-making at its best. His penchant for "epics" of size and stature, usually with a Biblical connotation, endowed his personal handiwork with a particular stamp of dignity. The boxoffice acceptance, of course, is always a pleasant corollary to artistic achievement.

DeMille, at the three-quarter century mark, is a vital and vibrant personality. He is prophet with much honor in his homegrounds, as witness the "Milestone" dinner by the Screen Producers' Guild last winter saluting him. A two-time Oscar winner and the holder of the coveted Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award "for consistent high quality of production achievement," his intra-industry recognition has been generous and often. His Biblical screen stories have singled him out for identification as "a prophet in celluloid who has had the privilege of bringing some of the Word of God to more people throughout the world than any other man." That same SPG intra-industry dinner produced the startling statistic that his various motion pictures resulted in 3,214,000,000 regular paid admissions. It was computed that these over-three billion admissions are one and one-half times the present population of the globe.

A fleeting glance at the bibliography of DeMilleana shows his handiwork on themes that range from American westerns to Canadian mounties; from railroad epics to problem plays; from Biblical themes to the circus. (He broke the time-honored jinx that a circus picture couldn't be b.o., just as an incidental footnote). Fittingly, Cecil B. DeMille brings in a $12,000,000 Paramount picture called "10 Commandments" to mark his 75th.

Ike Okes Incorporation of Nat'l Music Council, Lauding 'Effective Role'

Washington, Aug. 7.

Bill incorporating the National Music Council has been signed by President Eisenhower. In a message accompanying his approval, he wrote:

"Congress has chartered the National Music Council because of its important and effective role as a central body representing virtually all of the major voluntary musical organizations in our country. Its members include symphony orchestras, songwriters, choruses, educational associations, publishers, labor unions, music clubs and others. Thus, the National Music Council is truly representative of the American way of life, in which music can flourish as it should in a free democratic society, as a voluntary activity under the nourishment and control of private citizens."

'Trading Favors' In Foreground Of 1957 Fests

London, Aug. 7.

Degree and nature of restrictions nominally imposed on foreign films by any given country will be taken into account hereafter when an international film festival in such country applies for accredition from the International Film Producers Assn.

This was decided at the London meeting and will come into effect when 1957 festivals are graded at a November meeting in Paris.

Seems to mean that cooperation in future may be more insistently two-way. Favors to nations not extending favors will presumably be more closely examined.

Everybody a Circus 'Expert'

Since the recent fold of the Ringling Bros. & Barnum & Bailey Circus, for the first time in its 72-year history in the middle of the season, virtually everyone has become an expert in circus matters. Whether it's an oldtime performer, whose only recent connection with the Big Top has been that of a paying customer, or performers, pressagents, roustabouts and newspapers, all have discovered the "true reason" why the circus had to run for cover for a route in arenas.

Virtually every newspaper (including this one) has received any number of letters describing the arc of destruction of this venerable American institution. Bulk of the letters and many articles, including the Phil Santora series which started yesterday (Tues.) in the N.Y. Daily News, place the blame squarely upon the circus prexy John Ringling North. They blame his tendency to "Hollywoodize" the show; to personal habits, to the fact that he wouldn't listen, stubbornness, yes-man, etc., which caused him to fire "every experienced circus hand" in the higher echelons. Few blame labor troubles inasmuch as the circus traditionally got along with a crew to whom money was a secondary matter, and many stayed because they liked the life under the tent.

Whether North is to blame wholly isn't so easy to decide, according to a lot of observers. All phases of show business have undergone tremendous changes and many feel that if the Big Top didn't try to keep up with this fast moving world, it would have headed for limbo anyway. Many feel that the day of the big travelling circus may be over, whether North runs it or not, and many think that it would be more economically feasible to run the Ringling show in hardtop situations and under auspices of some organization. It will have to fight hard to get sponsorship away from some of the existing circuses.

At any rate, the future of the circus will be left to the stockholders. North, controlling 51% of the show, is facing a showdown fight currently in Sarasota, from the minority group which controls the remaining 49%. Showdown may come within a very short time.

PIX' BIG & BOLD BID FOR GOLD

Low-Interest (2⅜%) Debt at Loew Tough to Re-Negotiate; Divorced Halves Lose 'Integrated' Charm

The separation of Loew's domestic theatre division from production-distribution, scheduled to meet a court-decreed deadline of next February, continues as a king-sized problem. Crux of it is the manner in which assets and the $30,000,000 indebtedness is to be divided by the two surviving companies.

It had been hoped that the matter would be resolved by next month. That's now out. Whether the February date can be met is not for certain. It's conceivable that the Dept. of Justice, whose antitrust suit resulted in the divorcement decree, might have to step in with a definite program for Loew's to adhere to.

The $30,000,000 borrowing, from Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., is at preferential interest (2⅜%) rates. Met, though, provided the capital to the integrated parent Loew's corporation. Question now centers on how to divide the loan between exhibition (with what assets?) and production-distribution (also with what assets?). And the breakdown of one company into two smaller ones will mean a rewrite of the loan agreement, doubtless at higher interest rates.

Comfy Democrats

Chicago, Aug. 7.

The seats salvaged from the Paradise Theatre, erstwhile Balaban & Katz deluxer which was razed this summer, are to have at least one final fling in the limelight. They have been installed in the International Amphitheatre by the Democratic convention committee for the comfort of the delegates at the party's presidential nominating conclave which starts Monday (13).

Pews will be updated with bright slipcovers.

42-Min. 'Second Feature' by WB

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Warners is underway with production of new-type program pictures of shorter than conventional length to supplant the usual second feature on theatre bills. First of the series, already eompleted, is "Amazon Trader," which runs 42 minutes and is billed as "documentary fiction."

Tom McGowan, who directed "Trader," reported that Cedric Francis will head the new production setup which, in effect, is an experiment tied in with the theory that the public finds standard double-feature programs too long.

Curiously, however, the WB studio last January reported plans for an hour-long telefilm series under the "Amazon Trader" title and starring John Sutton, who's in the 42-minute entry. WB now states that the latter was filmed for theatrical distribution right at the outset.

Paris 2d-Guesses On Venice's New Ground Rules

Paris, Aug. 7.

The director, N. Ammanati, of the Venice Film Festival is in Paris tying up independent French industry participation although France officially is not joining the event due to the Italian having unilaterally changed the ground rules.

However there is some growing disposition locally to think the Venice changes may be for the better. If a film festival is truly international and artistic mere deal-making is not the main appeal.

Will Venice recover its own lost prestige of recent years? Can it end the log-rolling which follows too many pictures and too many prizes? There are observers in Paris who are impressed that Venice will have only three prizes to bestow—the Golden Lion grand prize for the best feature and two Volpi Cups for best actor and best actress.

SKEERED OF TV 'PULL'

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Light boxoffice results of feature films starring television figures has cued postponement by producer William F. Broidy at Columbia of projected "Wild Bill Hickok" feature until next year.

Was to have rolled late summer with Guy Madison and Andy Devine recreating video roles.

Czech Ideology Winners: Russia, Japan and India; Grand Prize to France

Karlova Vary, Aug. 7.

With "If All the Guys in the World," French entry, having copped the grand prize at Czechoslovakia's International Film Festival, other of the main awards were given as follows:

Russia's "The Case of Srgey Runyanstev," so-called Fight for the New Man prize; Japan's "Darkness at Midday," world progress, and India's "Visit to India," international friendship. Last listed is a documentary on the road tour of Soviet Premier Nikalai A. Bulganin and Communist party leader Nikita S. Krushchev.

Special jury citations went to "A Half Pint of Beer" and "The Abyss," both Hungarian.

'MAKE 'EM EPIC OR PROVOCATIVE'

By GENE ARNEEL

Make 'em big or make 'em provocative. This in essence is the credo of more and more picture-makers as Hollywood steps up effort to turn out merchandise completely dissimilar from what's for free on television.

That films are growing in physical size has been recognized for some time, of course. There's now to be a further reaching out—a still greater bid to cop the public's attention with mammoth properties. For, there lies the gold.

Although neither "epic" has opened yet, Paramount's "War and Peace" (running three hours, 28 minutes), and "Ten Commandments" four hours) doubtless will have an important influence on the future of the film colony's thinking if they reach anywhere near the level of success that Par anticipates. Every studio and every independent producer will be giving the double-barrelled Par move close attention.

Importantly, the trade is convinced in large measure that the roadshow is to have a more important role in the scheme of things. Ticket-buyers have demonstrated their willingness to shell out top coin for the two-or-three-a-day. "Oklahoma" is in its 42nd week at the Rivoli in New York, and still is no slouch at the boxoffice. The third Cinerama entry—the third travelog in a row in that process—is a hot money item.

'A' Material

King Vidor, veteran topnotch director, says he's convinced that bigness is the key to success; the ordinary entertainment on film is no longer worthwhile. Having called the turns on "War and Peace," he's partisan, natch. But in view of his extensive background, his opinion carries weight.

Other voices around town (Gotham) are raised anent the same subject. While distribution execs traditionally have liked their features the shorter the better—90-to-100 minutes for "A" material—the top echelons at some homeoffices have more advocates for the "all-out" treatment.

Comment from an eastern v.p.: "We spend a fortune filming a Broadway musical that's a smash. It runs two hours and 15 or 20 minutes. And then we cut it to

It Was a July to Remember; Four Top Films Amass $6,108,000; 'King and I' Maintains Roaring Lead

July's Top 12

2. "Trapeze" (UA).
3. "Moby Dick" (WB).
4. "Duchin Story" (Col).
5. "Certain Feeling" (Par).
6. "Cine Holiday" (Indie).
7. "Seven Wonders" (Indie).
8. "Away All Boats" (U).
9. "Oklahoma" (Magna).
10. "Locomotive Chase" (BV).
11. "Fastest Gun" (M-G).
12. "Somebody Likes Me" (M-G).

It was a mild, rainy July in many sections of the country, which helped new, strong fare smack over. The pacesetters, included, of course "King and I" (20th), "Trapeze" (UA), "Moby Dick" (WB) and "Eddy Duchin Story" (Col).

Just how terrific the take was is realized from the fact that the first four top grossers, listed above, racked up a gross total of $6,108,000 which is a new high for the year. "King," the new b.o. champ for the month of July, showed $2,185,000 in the keys covered by VARIETY.

"Trapeze," second-place winner, amassed $1,614,000. It wound up first two weeks during the month. "Moby Dick," which was third, grossed $1,340,000.

"Duchin Story" tallied at nearly $1,000,000 for fourth position. This musical did not start getting extensive bookings until the middle of the month, and may be heard from additionally this month. "That Certain 'Feeling'" (Par) wound up in fifth spot.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) finished sixth, with notice of its closings in favor of "7 Wonders of World" (Indie) boosting totals in several keys. "Wonders" took seventh position, only a step behind "Holiday."

"Away All Boats" (U), which just got started the final two weeks in July, managed to land eighth place. It likely will be heard from more in the future. "Oklahoma" (Magna) finished ninth. "Great Locomotive Chase" (BV) managed to capture 10th position although a bit spotty after the first week out.

"Fastest Gun Alive" (M-G) wound up 11th, being surprisingly stout in many spots for a western. "Somebody Up There Likes Me," also from Metro, rounds out the Big 12 list. "Johnny Concho" (UA), which just missed the top 12, heads the runner-up pix. "Santiago"

Italy Boxoffice Up May & June

Rome, Aug. 7.

Despite the much talked-about crisis and the pessimism in Italo exhibitor circles, both the May and June boxoffice returns in the key first-runs throughout the country have shown an improvement over 1955.

At the same time, in June, the Yank slice of the Italian firstrun market resumed its dominant 80% lead (from 71% in May), which gives the Americans the same ratio as in 1955. At the same time, the Italian cut dropped from 11 percentage points last June (1955) to a 7% figure during June, 1956. The French got 5% of the market and the British took close to 4%. Other nations hit 3%.

The key city firstrun gross in June was $1,192,500 against a comparable $1,092.000 last year. In May, the boxoffice stood at $2,250,000 against $1,950,000 last year.

Todd May Light Selwyn

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Producer Mike Todd was in Chicago last week, o.o.'ing the long-dark Selwyn legit house as the possible showcase for his Todd-AO process film, "Around the World in 80 Days."

Pic would bow here in November on a two-a-day roadshow basis.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Tapers Some; 'King' Champ for 4th Stanza; 'Duchin' Second, 'Moby' 3d, 'Pardners' 4th

Return of torrid weather and plethora of longruns will shave gross totals over the country this stanza. However, most firstruns report highly encouraging b.o. returns for this time of year, with still more supposedly big product still to come out.

"King and I" (20th) is taking first place again, making the fourth week in succession it has been champ at the wickets. Pic is hitting close to $400,000 in some 23 key cities covered by VARIETY currently. "Duchin Story" (Col), which was third a week ago, is moving up to second position while "Moby Dick" (WB) is slipping to third spot, just a short distance behind. Latter was second last stanza.

"Pardners" (Par), with additional playdates, is pushing up to fourth spot. Martin-Lewis comedy, too, is making stronger showings in numerous keys. Total gross will come close to $200,000.

"Away All Boats" (U), which was sixth last stanza, is climbing to fifth spot this round. "7 Wonders of World" (Indie) will finish sixth.

"Trapeze" (UA), which has finished many of its big firstrun dates, managed to take seventh place. "Earth Vs. Flying Saucers" (Col) is winding in eight while "Somebody Up There Likes Me" is landing ninth position.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie), is capturing 10th money. "Oklahoma" (Magna) and "Johnny Concho" (UA) round out the Top 12 list in that order. "Fastest Gun Alive" (M-G), "Francis in Haunted House" (U) and "Fantasia" (BV) (reissue) are the runner-up pix in that sequence.

"High Society" (M-G), which opens at the N. Y. Music Hall this week, started out with smash opening round in L. A. "These Wilder Years," also from Metro, is good in Detroit.

"Walk the Proud Land" (U), another newcomer, is rated nice in L. A., playing in some 10 spots. "Rebel in Town" (UA), slim in L. A., is fine in Denver. "Bigger Than Life" (20th), another newie, is trim in N. Y.

"Proud and Profane" (Par), which has been playing on extended-run in some four key cities, is big in Detroit. "Ambassador's Daughter" (UA) continues smash in second Chi stanza.

"Autumn Leaves" (Col) shapes socko in N. Y. "Ladykillers" (Cont) is fast in Chi, fine in Frisco and great in Portland.

"Godzilla" (Indie) is doing fine in Denver, being one of top new entries.

Today the Writer-Exec Shines Bright

Guild Finds 96 Also Directors and 65 Production Executives

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Never in the history of Hollywood is the writer as important as today, as a record number of 96 writers are also directors while 65 are production executives, according to a survey just completed by the Writers Guild of America West.

Guild said its survey proves the writer is no longer a man with a function, that of writing a screenplay; that today with the market so highly competitive, he is in great demand as an executive and a director. "It's obvious that the writer today is called on not only to write, but to sit across a desk and buy stories, to create and produce and function in various executive capacities," said the guild.

Guild said Hollywood has gone through a variety of influences, that at one time exhibitors strongly influenced content of films; then b a n k e r s dominated and influenced content; then the sales departments; "but it's now where it belongs— in the hands of the writers," observed the guild.

Double and triple function of the writer in production capacities in the film biz is being paralleled in tv, added the guild.

Guild cited as examples of the writer's success in functioning as director or production exec such top b.o. pix as "The King and I," produced by Charles Brackett, a writer originally; "That Certain Feeling," turned out by producers-writers Melvin Frank and Norman Panama; "Blackboard Jungle," directed by Richard Brooks, also writer of the film.

Among writers now also directors are Brooks, Delmer Daves, Valentine Davies, Philip Dunne, Melvin Frank, Mel Shavelson, Robert Aldrich, Nunnally Johnson, Joseph Mankiewicz, Richard Murphy, Claude Binyon, Nicholas Ray, Dan Taradash and Billy Wilder.

Writers now production execs include Dore Schary, Jerry Wald, Brackett, Henry Ephron, Don Hartman, James Hill, Norman Krasna, Ida Lupino, Russell Rouse, Taradash and Harry Tugend.

Miller New Pathe G.M.

Arthur J. Miller this week was named general manager of eastern operations for Pathe Laboratories, moving up from technical director. Lew Mansfield, who has had various supervisory posts with the outfit in recent years, was appointed plant manager in New York.

Last week Pathe president Kenneth M. Young disclosed the appointment of Otis W. Murray to exec v.p., up from v.p. in charge of Coast operations. Also, David J. Melamed, treasurer, was retitled v.p. in charge of finance.

Loew-Publicists Pact

Loew's and the Screen Publicists Guild in New York this week wrapped up a new employment contract calling for a minimum $5 weekly increase plus other adjustments bringing the total average weekly hike to $8.50. Two-year deal, retroactive to June 4, provides the publicists and members of the ad and exploitation departments with an average payoff of $172.50, highest in the industry. It means all 21 members of the Loew's homeoffice shop will receive at least $10 over guild minimums.

This is the first union agreement for the film company since it left SPG six years ago. Pact was worked out by Loew's v.p. Howard Dietz and Ben Berman, guild organization director, and Martin Blau, SPG prez.

WB's 9-Mos. Net Of $2,165,000

Warner Brothers this week reported a net of $2,165.000 for the nine months ended May 26, 1956. Profit is equivalent to 87c per share on the 2,482,247 shares of common outstanding on May 26 and is at least partially attributable to the rake-in from the sale of the WB library to television.

Though film rentals and sales were up over last year's 40-week period, the net was down. Same period in 1954-55 showed a profit of $3,312,000 or $1.33 per share. This was after $3,500,000 in federal income taxes and after $400,000 in contingent liabilities.

The 1956 net was after $1,700,000 in taxes and $250,000 for contingent liabilities, but before a special credit of $3,000,000 representing a reversal of reserve of contingent liabilities.

Film rental for the nine months ended May 26, 1956, were $54.225,898 as compared to $53,080,867 the prior year. Total income was $57,088,187 in 1956 against $55,986,210 in 1955. Amortization of film costs showed a sharp rise to $20,106,382 from $12,031,032. Operating and general expenses, on the other hand, dropped to $13,990,475 from $14,132,541.

Total costs were $52,972,986 against $48,773,410 during the 40 weeks ended May 26, 1955.

Warners reported on the $21,000,000 tv sale to PRM Inc., stating that $16,000,000 had been paid in cash of which $5,000,000 was included in the 40-week statement. Remainder was given via a noninterest bearing promissory note payable at intervals over a period of three years. A WB subsidiary "has been granted the right for a five-year period to continue distributing certain of the pictures in foreign countries," the statement said.

'Diversification' Clouds Meaning Of Statements

Diversification moves in the film industry have tended to obscure the specifics as to earnings of individual companies which, in past, were made clear in official financial statements.

List Industries, formerly RKO Theatres but with the chain now wrapped up with Gera Corp., had consolidated net income of $317,471 for the first six months of 1956, it was disclosed this week. Same period of 1955 brought $804,757 before special items, and this was reduced to a net of $599,757 upon adjustment for special nonrecurring items. The "special items" were not identified.

Hard to tell how the RKO circuit is doing since it's under the same corporate roof with Gera.

Based on the number of shares outstanding at the end of each period, the proforma earnings (with Gera included) amounted to 40½c per share in the first half of the current year compared to 25c before special items and 18½c after special items for the first six months of 1955.

FARCICAL RE PURITY, 'FRUITS' RATED 'C'

"Fruits of Summer," French import distributed in the United States by Jack Ellis, this week was given a "condemned" (C) rating by the Legion of Decency.

"Theme of this picture," said the Catholic reviewing organization, "is seriously opposed to Christian and traditional standards of morality and decency by reason of a light and farcical presentation of the virtue of purity. In treatment, an atmosphere of suggestiveness in costuming, dialogue and situations permeates this film."

UA's 5 Owners 'Go Fishing'

The five owners of United Artists spent the weekend together at St. Vincent, Thousand Islands, N.Y., but business wasn't on their agenda.

Quintet comprised board chairman Robert S. Benjamin, president Arthur B. Krim, distribution v.p. William J. Heineman, foreign department v.p. Arnold Picker and ad-pub v.p. Max E. Youngstein.

They went, they said, fishing. The party was set by Heineman.

These are the days of merger talk, diversification, stock transfers, options, hot competition for big screen properties, sales to television, etc.

And all they did was go fishing?

Girls on the switchboard at VARIETY's home office are accustomed to all sorts of queries but a new dilly occurred last Friday when a woman's voice asked, "VARIETY, can you tell me if there's a street merry-go-round parked anywhere in Queens today?"

Under the title "A. P. Giannini: Boy of San Francisco," by Marie Hammontree, Bobbs-Merrill is publishing a juvenile biog of Amadeo Peter Giannini, the founder of the biggest bank in the world, the Bank of America, which has figured so intimately in motion picture financing.

James Dean, whose eerie popularity in death was detailed in a VARIETY streamer story last issue, is on the newsstands in still another special onetime periodical aimed at the 13-18-year-old-girls. Captioned: "Read his own words from beyond the grave." . . . Meanwhile Elvis the Pelvis Presley, very much alive, is also getting the idolization treatment aimed at approximately the same audience. Quest, newsletter of magazine world, reports that Presley has at least two one-shots on the stands with print orders of 500,000 and comments that "a one-shot of Bing Crosby or Bob Hope would die on the stands. . . . Eddie Fisher barely squeaked through." . . . Lecturing-for-his-supper at the Waldemere hotel at Livingston Manor, Paul Denis writes that the most asked question of his audience is: will the Monroe-Miller marriage last and, related, will she turn Jewess?

David Sturgis billing himself as "The American Nostradamus" addresses this journal from Cannes anent his Sun Girl of Paris contest to be tied in with French film producer Henri Bernadac's "Bon Jour, la Chance" Sept. 3-29 . . . it's a new kind of beauty stunt with a "Sun-Zodiac basis" and Sturgis states he'll repeat it this side in the fall via a Sun Girl of New York contest. . . .

Capitol Theatre nixed intermissions during the "War and Peace" run, being wary of a wild scramble for choice seats during the proposed 10-minute breaks . . . King Vidor, who produced the bigscreen epic, incidentally, shot "Billy the Kid" for Metro in 70m nearly 25 years ago. It was called the Grandeur process in those days . . . Oscar A. Doob is back working for Metro, stationed in Washington on special assignment for "Tea and Sympathy" . . . M. D. O'Brien, head of Loew's Theatre's projection department, retiring from the company after 30 years, due to ill health . . . Huntington Hartford's model agency, all male) has a new executive director, Philip J. Kennedy. . . .

Hal Wallis has "Billy The Kid" in mind for Elvis Presley's film debut.

Lillian Arnold who did screen (and stage) casting at the William Schuller agency has departed that shop . . . Judy Canova motored in from coast with hubby Phil Rivero and two young daughters . . . Republic star will be east some weeks, making television appearances.

William H. Mooring who syndicates a screen column to Catholic papers headed a recent piece, "Who Inspired Attack on Legion of Decency?" Allusion was to the action of the Motion Picture Council in Hollywood condemning the Legion for slapping a special classification on the Bette Davis-starrer, "Storm Center" which revolves around a small town librarian who defies the book-burners of her community. A Columbia release produced by Julius Blaustein the film was criticized (Aug. 1) by VARIETY as "Principle rendered dull. Much ado about civil liberties angle. Spotty boxoffice prospects." Mooring's article called the Council's action an "astounding and unprecedented statement," as indeed it was since the film colony strictly refrains from counter-attacking the Legion. He then attempted to use the red paint pot to daub a Hollywood trade writer as having influenced the Council. As a special pleader for his own cause Mooring is a pretty dull fellow.

Deal for Mike Todd's "80 Days Around the World" to play Rivoli Theatre, N.Y., was wrapped up yesterday (Tues.). Mike Todd Jr. will be general manager . . . Actor Yul Brynner giving 20th-Fox headaches by servicing his own stills from the "Anastasia" set in London . . . Italo thesp Rossano Brazzi dickering with Art Cohn and Milton Krasner to coproduce and star in "The Orchid Man," Georges Carpentier biog . . . Producer Samuel Engel off to Paris for huddles with Spyros P. Skouras on casting "Boy on a Dolphin." Gina Lollobrigida's been mentioned . . . Those Warner News negotiations are close . . . 20th not happy with the dubbing job on "Oasis," a French-German coproduction which it's supposed to release here . . . West Coast's Herbert Rosener (artie chain) combining business and vacation in N.Y. . . . Richard Davis to Europe Aug. 15 . . . A Drive-in theatre was hurt by rain, which kept concession sales down prior to the show. When the rain stopped, the operator faked a film break and called a forced intermission. Everyone piled out happily, concession sales soared and ten minutes later the show started again.

There is "still too much violence" in American motion pictures, and not enough of the "family type" are produced, but the quality of domestic releases has "improved, principally due to better scripts." So Mrs. Ruth McGowan, of Brooklyn, preview chairman for the Motion Picture Service of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, observed in Hudson, N.Y. while attending the world premiere of "Walk the Proud Land". . .

Robert Mitchum opposite Deborah Kerr in "Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison," which 20th rolls Sept. 15 with John Huston directing . . . Dennis O'Keefe due in London next week to do "Mistress to Murder" for Bert Balaban. . . .

Merrie Therese Smith, exec assistant to Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy Eric Johnston, has become engaged to Joynes Beane Jr., president of the Foreign Research and Management Corp. of New York. The wedding will take place in late August . . . Anita Ekberg had the scribes in a stew last week by pulling a Marilyn Monroe and being more than fashionably late for dates. At least one columnist blew his top in print . . . Companies have received their formal invites to an industry conference from Allied's Rube Shor. It's Allied's reaction to the Small Business Committee report which seemed to favor the distributors' point-of-view . . . Warner Bros.' title for the Ingrid Bergman picture, "Black Satin." Mel Ferrer is costarred . . . Edward L. Kingsley and Mrs. off to Venice . . . IFE exec v.p. Seymour Poe not due back from Rome for a couple of weeks now . . . C. C. Murray, city manager for Fox Midwest Theatres, in a letter to Alex Harrison, 20th-Fox general sales manager: "In many instances, a trailer will unsell an attraction rather than sell" Murray liked 20th's policy of providing only CinemaScope trailers on future 20th C'Scope releases.

Charles F. Vetter Jr., Amalgamated Productions v.p. off for London to supervise the firm's production, "The Counterfeit Plan" . . . UNESCO, jointly with the Bureau of National Affairs in Washington, announces publication of "Copyright Laws and Treaties of the World," an exhaustive compilation of the copyright laws, orders, rules and regulations of 85 countries . . . U.S. Information Agency preparing a "package of feature" yarns about the film biz for worldwide distribution . . . Vet Broadway publicist Paul W. Benson and actress-wife Charlotte Van Lein, in Dublin on first stop of two-months European holiday, lunching with Robert Briscoe, Dublin's first Jewish Mayor.

Exhibitors have agreed to hold charity midnight previews on several pix, with proceeds going to a Spyros P. Skouras created fund to help victims of the recent earthquake disaster in Greece.

TODAY'S 'B' RETURNS $450,000

Stop Kidding Awreddy!

By ABEL GREEN

Those figures. Those statistics(?)!! B.o. up many millions. Now it's up to 85,000,000. While at the same time the struggling exhibitor was praying for Ike to sign the 90c. tax exemption law which he did only this week.

And those pronunciamentos on what's wrong with the business. What's right with it. Shoulders-to-the-wheel, nose-to-the-grindstone, chase-the-gloom, excelsior!

And the fingerpointers on the Great Mistakes of Yesteryear. The smugness, and the aloofness, and how come tv was able to produce so much new writing and directing blood in so little time? The cracks that "you can't run a circus from the Stork Club" and the yesman and paraphrases on Joe E. Lewis' nifty (out of Eli Basse): "A film producer with $2,000,000 can be as happy as one with $3,000,000."

The answer? This journal of dissemination has given sundry interpretations. Maybe the U. S. is overseated. Maybe some rundown cinemas should have been scrapped long ago. Sure, tv is not gonna k.o. a 50-year habit. But technocacy must be taken into consideration and maybe that's where Hollywood erred.

But stop kidding with slaphappy statistics. It's no secret the picture business ain't no "Happy Fella" these days, and just because, seasonally, they pile into the ozoners and the airconditioned theatres isn't the full answer. The way to get real happy is to make pictures they want to come out and see. There are other unilateral factors, of course, just as old theatres; bad projection; rubberstamp "management"; lack of theatre personality; and not forgetting the juvenile delinquents which require stronger-armed handling than of yore because they're chasers of whatever solid business there is around in certain locales.

No Tax Up to 90c Admission

Ike Signs—Law Effective Sept. 1—Eric Johnston Hails New Relief

Washington, Aug. 7.

The admissions tax bill—regarded as vitally important for thousands of small theatre owners across the nation—was signed into law yesterday (6) by President Eisenhower.

The measure provides that all tickets costing 90c or less shall be exempt from the 10% Federal admission tax. It goes into effect Sept. 1. This replaces a two-year old law under which tickets costing 50c or less were made tax-free and the previous wartime 20% was cut to 10% above 50c. Other spectator amusements in addition to motion pictures will benefit.

Treasury Dept. estimates the new law will cost the government about $60,000,000 annually in revenue. Theatre men argue that a portion of this will be returned in the form of income taxes. They add it will save up to 5,000 theatres which might have gone out of business.

D. C. exhibitors were unable to announce immediately what changes will be made in their prices. However, it was understood that tickets costing 95c—including tax—will be reduced to 90c. This will also put more in the pockets of the theatre men. Tickets priced at $1—including tax—may be lowered.

However, tickets priced at over $1 are expected to remain unchanged. There is no indication of any plan to drop the prices of tickets price—including tax—at between 51 and 90c. The exhibitors argue they need the added revenue to remain in business.

Eric Johnston greeted the President's action in a statement in which he said:—

"All of us in the motion picture industry are pleased that the President has, by his signature, today enacted into law the bill which exempts admissions up to 90c from the 10% excise tax. This measure is of vital economic importance to all elements of the industry, and particularly to many thousands of smaller theatre owners, whose principal competition comes from tax-free media. We hope that the relief thus granted will permit these small businessmen to keep going and provide to their communities the great entertainment that the American motion picture industry gives the world."

Eartha Kitt to Nigeria Oct. 12 for location work on "The Hawk" for Associated British.

Improved Text

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Dan Duryea thought he'd make Universal execs happy by naming his new boat "The Battle Hymn," after his most recent film for the valley studio.

Unfortunately, the painter couldn't read Duryea's handwriting.

Which is why the boat now cruising Lake Arrowhead is drawing double-takes from the name proudly emblazoned on the stern — "The Battle Hymie."

KING VIDOR MUSINGS ON 'WAR AND PEACE'

King Vidor, director of "War and Peace," lensed mostly in Italy for Paramount release, had some notes and comments to pass along while in New York over the past week, such as—

There is a possibility of censorship trouble because of the line, "Damn you, Napoleon, damn you to hell," plus apparent (but not actual) injury to horses . . . Irwin Shaw was among the five writers on the "W & P" script but is refusing screen credit because he doesn't want to be grouped with the others . . . sometimes scenes were shot directly from the book, without scenario, in the rush to complete the picture before Mike Todd's announced (but what ever happened to it?) version of Tolstoy . . . Italians are great in fashioning sets and costumes.

Also, "W & P" was budgeted at $6,000,000 . . . It's good for a director to work away from a big organization lest he begins to rely on it too much . . . You find Wilder, Huston and Mankiewicz getting away to escape such atmosphere . . . A Metro v.p. visited the set, commented that the story is the greatest but M-G couldn't afford to produce it . . . Original running time was 4¾ hours.

WIDMARK'S 'TIME LIMIT'

Heath Co. Pays $100,000 For Denker-Berkey Play

Backed by United Artists, Richard Widmark's indie company, Heath Productions, paid $100,000 in acquiring the screen rights to "Time Limit," legiter by Henry Denker and Ralph Berkey. Actor is to star in adaptation of the play.

Plan is to roll in Hollywood in December. Writer and director are as yet unset.

ECONOMY A MUST ON L'IL FILMS

While big and costly productions are taking more of the spotlight, United Artists is continuing with its program of 48 releases a year, with a number of them obvious being of the modest-budget variety.

Significantly, though, the cost of the smaller pictures must be trimmed more and more if the company, which finances and distributes its lineup, is to emerge fiscally okay.

A second feature in today's domestic market can yield $450,000 to $500,000 in distribution revenue. And that's with some heavy pushing for the big circuit bookings, such as in Loew's in New York. Since the pre-production blueprints are drawn to bring a film to at least the breakeven point in the home market, the $450,000 grosser must be brought in at $225,000 (general trade figuring has it that the gross should double the negative cost).

Also importantly, the smaller pictures are becoming tougher to sell in many foreign territories.

Not long ago a good second feature could play 10,000-to-12,000 domestic dates and gross $600,000 or over. That is now a thing of the past.

Buena Vista's 2 Import Items

Buena Vista, Walt Disney's distribution subsidiary, has begun taking on outside productions for release, with two imports already set for the current year. These are "Yang Kwei Fei," made at the Daiei Studios, Tokyo, and "If All the Guys in the World," French, produced by George Loureau.

Plans for new Disney production and sale of newly completed pictures plus a number of reissues were discussed at a BV meeting in New York yesterday (Tues.). A schedule that goes through 1958 and into 1959 was outlined by Card Walker, Disney v.p.

Two new features awaiting release are "Secrets of Life," which is one of the True-Life Adventure series, and "Westward Ho, the Wagons," Disney's first western, lensed in CinemaScope. One new entry in the True-Life category will be distributed each year, according to Walker.

Set for sale at the end of 1958 and early 1959 is "Sleeping Beauty," feature cartoon long in the making. Reissues to follow the current "Fantasia" include "Cinderella" and "Bambi."

TIVOLI GARDENS GUARDS APPEAR IN 'ANASTASIA'

Copenhagen, Aug. 7.

"Anastasia," which is currently being photographed in England for 20th Century-Fox, has imported the Tivoli Boys Guards' Band from Copenhagen to appear in scenes which originally were expected to be shot here.

Danish footage will now be in the form of back projection scenes provided by Mogens Skot Hansen, former Hollywood resident who manages Laterna Film Co. here.

BUYS UNRELEASED NOVEL

20th-Fox Acquires 'Enemy Below' By D. A. Rayner

"The Enemy Below," unpublished novel by D. A. Rayner, has been acquired by 20th-Fox for $25,000.

Story will be published by Henry Holt & Co. in the fall. It involves a battle of wits between a German U boat captain and the commander of a British destroyer.

Film Data Cheerful—If Execs Not

Film theatre business was never so good as during the two weeks ended last Saturday (4). This is on the basis of intimate checks he has with certain circuits plus a national survey conducted by market analyst Albert Sindlinger of Ridley Park, Pa.

For the two week period, the average weekly attendance figure arrived at by Sindlinger was 83,400,000, the average ticket price (net, i.e., excluding tax) 61.8c and the gross $43,860,000. Paid admissions averaged 70,970,000, the large number of for-free attendees being children under 12 who are admitted gratis at most drive-ins.

In view of tales of business woe being told by many theatremen, Sindlinger's findings appear startling. It is interesting to note, though, that the Treasury Department this week released its official attendance figures for 1953. The average total was 41,600,000, said the Government, whose published reports are invariably a couple of years late. Two years ago Sindlinger analyzed the same period and came up with the conclusion that 42,300,000 was the average in 1953. The difference between his and Treasury's figures amount to 1.7%.

Previously the biggest seven-day period in the history of the industry was Thanksgiving Week of 1946 when the net gross was $37,553,200 on 89,200,000 admissions. The average price then was 42.1c, and the unpaid for admissions was virtually nil, there having been less than 200 ozoners operating at the time.

Of the new period says Sindlinger: "More different people went to theatres, and spent more money, and more got in for free, then during any week since the industry began." Among his conclusions are these: Appealing product can lure the public greater than ever before; the business (despite tears shed by some exhibitors) is sound; devotees of films are limited as to number of tickets they buy a week, the frequency rate being cut by the lesser number of pictures available (and appealing) to them.

Smaller Houses Tilting Scales; New Law a $60,000,000 Tonic

Elimination of the Federal admission tax on film theatre tickets costing up to 90c means a $60,000,000-plus annual hypo for the industry. The latter figure refers to the amount theatres will no longer pay the Government; the "plus" is in the expected country-wide upping of admission scales which heretofore were held in check because a raise would have put many exhibs in a tax-paying bracket.

The 10% bite had been on admissions costing up to 50c. Theatremen charging 50c and wanting to go to 60c would have had the entire amount subject to the 10% levy. Thus, of the extra gross price, exhibs would collect only 4c and the Government 6c. This simply would have been unsound economics.

Exhibitors who intend to pass the new tax saving on to the public are rare. Under the aegis of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, their plea was based on hardship and no suggestion was made to any lawmaker that the public would benefit. The extra coin is to stay with exhibition where it is needed and this has been COMPO's declared policy right along.

As for credit lines, obviously COMPO as headed by special counsel Robert W. Coyne and the special tax committee topped by Robert J. O'Donnell rate the boldface type. Ditto Sam Pinanski who projected the idea of the tax fight early in the year when prospects of success appeared remote.

There was some behind-the-scenes intrigue in official Washington. These were the bids for favors put to strategically-placed Congressmen on a more or less personal basis. Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, was among the top-level "lobbyists" but no one has come out and said so.

Allied States is a red-faced heavy. This theatre organization refused to support the tax campaign at the start because it looked "futile" and, further, the move to invite Governmental curbs on film rentals should be given precedence. So said Allied.

But when Coyne, et al., appeared to be making progress, Allied pulled a switch, allowing as how, well, maybe, the tax programs might be worth its support. This was designed to save face.

The industry's problem for the future: How to keep local governments on the state level and down from moving into the tax-grab territory now vacated by the Feds.

FBI's No-Baby Rule

The victim in a feature film to be made independently by Richard Widmark will have to grow up to suit the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Property is "Seven File," in which a baby is kidnapped. But fictionalized abduction of an infant is taboo with the FBI, so Widmark will have his scripters write in a few years' growth.

SALT LAKE CITY SNEAK OF '10 COMMANDMENTS'

"Ten Commandments" was given its first public unveiling late last week via a sneak preview at the Center Theatre, Salt Lake City. Cecil B. DeMille, producer of the Paramount release, chose this town for the reason, simply, that he wanted to get away from "professional" audiences on the Coast.

Par's announcement of the showing was limited to one 100-line ad in the local Salt Lake press. The film was not identified beyond comment that it was of unusual length. But doubtless the word got around and a mob scene resulted. Tickets were priced at $1, which is roadshow scale for Salt Lake, and the turnout reportedly was so great that Par was forced to buy radio spots advising local citizens not to come to the theatre, there being no room.

Meanwhile, Par homeoffice execs returned to New York Monday (6) after a week of huddles on the Coast concerning release of the Decalogue epic. Group included president Barney Balaban, Russell Holman, Paul Raibourn, George Weltner, Jerry Pickman and Charles Boasberg.

U. S. TAX CLAIM OUT

With Interest $359,518 Would Have Hit $600,000

Boston, Aug. 7.

Court action, which was initiated more than 11 years ago, was climaxed here Wednesday (1) when the U. S. Court of Appeals ruled that a $359,518 back tax claim against the Western Massachusetts Theatres Inc. is invalid.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue had claimed the theatre chain owed the money in income and excess profits taxes for the years 1942 through 1945. Atty. Joseph E. Cowett, counsel for the chain, estimated that the claim, with interest and penalties, amounted to more than $600,000.

Scandal Incorporated

A dull "expose" of current scandal periodicals. A film star falsely accused of murdering scandalmonger. Exploitation angles but little else.

Hollywood, Aug. 4.

Milton Mann production (no release). Stars Robert Hutton; features Paul Richards, Claire Kelly, Patricia Wright, Robert Knapp, Ilavis Davenport, Reid Hammond, Nestor Paiva, Gordon Wynn. Directed and edited by Edward Mann; screenplay, Milton Mann; camera, Brydon Baker; music, Paul Sawtell, Bert Shefter. Previewed Aug. 3, '56. Running time, 92 MINS.

| Jess Blancher | Robert Knapp |
| Billie Wayne | Havis Davenport |

| Leland Miller | Nestor Paiva |
| Herman Todd | Gordon Wynn |
| Mr. James | Guy Prescott |
| Sidney Woods | Donald Kirke |

| Lewis Adams | Mauriz Hugo |
| Champ Winter | Joe Breen |
| Bob Hamilton | Allen O'Locklin |
| Willie Anderson | George Cisar |
| Gracie | Tracey Morgan |
| Marie Ryan | Mimi Simpson |

Designed to cash in on the current controversy over scandal mags and resultant million-dollar law suits, "Scandal Incorporated" is first of a series of such films planned by both majors and indies to hit the screen. This one is for over-length, ineptly turned out an lacks interest, but has some exploitation potential.

Milton Mann's production of his own screenplay is burdened with superfluous characters and tedious dialog, action seldom quickens beyond a slow walk. Plottage purporting to be an expose of the mud-slinging scandal sheets. A film star is the victim and his name linked with an ambitious starlet.

Robert Hutton has star role, but whatever acting honors are garnered go to Paul Richards, who plays his attorney when the actor is accused of murdering the writer of the scurrilous article which causes studio to drop his contract. Claire Kelly, Patricia Wright and Havis Davenport supply distaff interest, Robert Knapp portrays the mag writer, Nestor Paiva the mag publisher, all as good as parts permit—and under Edward Mann's loose direction. Whit.

The Burning Hills

(C'Scope-Color)

Tab Hunter, Natalie Wood team in standard western for accent on youthful appeal.

Hollywood, July 27.

Warner Bros. release of Richard Whorf production. Stars Tab Hunter, Natalie Wood; features Skip Homeier, Natalie Franz, Earl Holliman, Claude Akins. Directed by Stuart Heisler. Screenplay, Irving Wallace; from novel by Louis L'Amour; camera (WarnerColor), Ted McCord; editor, Clarence Kolster; music, David Buttolph. Previewed July 23, '56. Running time, 93 MINS.

| Trace Jordan | Tab Hunter |
| Maria Colton | Natalie Wood |
| Jack Sutton | Skip Homeier |
| Jacob Lantz | Edward Franz |
| Mort Bayliss | Earl Holliman |
| Ben Hindeman | Claude Akins |
| Joe Sutton | Ray Teal |
| Tio Pedro | Frank Puglia |
| Braun | Hal Baylor |
| Wes Parker | Tyler MacDuff |
| Veach | Rayford Barnes |
| Vicente Colton | Tony Terry |

With the youthful filmgoer in mind, the combo of Tab Hunter and Natalie Wood in "The Burning Hills" could prove to be a profitable one. They form a team of somewhat younger stars than is customarily found in sagebrush sagas and do an okay job of the outdoor assignment. The accent on youth in a western plot at least has its novelty value and the tcenage fans should like their favorites in this prairie drama.

Richard Whorf's production uses CinemaScope and Warner-Color to enhance the scenic settings of the Louis L'Amour novel. Latter, and the screenplay by Irving Wallace, pretty much follows a familiar pattern in basic ingredients and dialog, so western followers are not likely to get off the story trail as director Stuart Heisler unwinds the plot at an actionful pace.

Story has to do with Hunter's efforts to avenge the death of his brother, murdered by henchmen of a big cattle baron who doesn't want small operators on his range. From avenger he becomes the chased, taking off through the hills in the company of Miss Wood. Anglo-Mexican girl, with the baron's gunslingers in hot pursuit. The young stars run the gamut of fanciful adventure in dodging the chasers, but it all makes for good action stuff, even that climax on the rocks high above a raging river during which the hero does in the last pursuing gunman.

As previously noted, Hunter and Miss Wood came off satisfactorily in the western derring-do, although there was no necessity for the actress being required to affect that Latin accent. Skip Homeier gets in his deadly licks as the son of cattle baron Ray Teal. He's just as blood-thirsty as his old man. Eduard Franz, Indian tracker reluctantly leading the gunslingers on the trail, is good, as are Earl Holliman, Claude Akins, latter good as the foreman; Hal Baylor, Tyler MacDuff and Rayford Barnes. Other acceptable support comes from Frank Puglia; as Miss Wood's drunken uncle, and Tony Terry, as her timid young brother.

Ted McCord contributes good lensing to the outdoor action. David Buttolph's music is appropriate and other production assists okay. Brog.

Huk

(COLOR)

Action programmer lensed in Philippines with George Montgomery, Mona Freeman.

Hollywood, July 24.

United Artists release of Collier Young production. Stars George Montgomery, Mona Freeman; features John Baer. Novel and screenplay, Stirling Silliphant; camera (Eastman Color), William Snyder; editor, Heleue Turner; music, Albert Glasser. Previewed July 23, '56. Running time, 84 MINS.

|---|---|
| Greg Dickson | George Montgomery |
| Cindy Rogers | Mona Freeman |
| Bart Rogers | John Baer |
| Steven Rogers | James Bell |
| Major Balatbat | Teddy Benivedes |
| Kalak | Mario Barri |
| Pinote | Ben Perez |

A Philippine Island setting backstops this action-adventure feature. It's programmer entertainment, with the names of George Montgomery and Mona Freeman to see it through that market to suitable returns.

Most striking part of the Collier Young production for United Artists release is the pictorial impact the location backgrounds gain from William Snyder's Eastman Color lensing. Script by Stirling Silliphant from his novel is a formula affair despite the difference in settings and villains, and John Barnwell gives it stock direction. Within the script and directorial limitations, the laying by Montgomery, Miss Freeman, John Baer, James Bell, Teddy Benivedes and others comes off satisfactorily, with a scene or two given some depth by the performers.

Huks, onetime guerilla fighters now given over to a not-clearly-expressed fanaticism, are the heavies of the plot and Montgomery is the hero who puts them down on the island where he has inherited a plantation. There are some nuances that don't come off very well about cynicism and the Philippine struggle to establish itself after World War II, but the makers keep tossing plenty of action at the customers as compensation for general viewers. Brog.

Magnificent Roughnecks

Jack Carson, Mickey Rooney as comedic rough-n-ready oil workers in South America; for programmer bookings.

|---|---|
| Bix Decker | Jack Carson |
| Frank Sommers | Mickey Rooney |
| Jane Rivers | Nancy Gates |
| Julie | Jeff Donnell |
| Werner Jackson | Myron Healey |
| Ernie Biggers | Willis Bouchey |
| Senor Ramon Serrano | Eric Feldary |
| Danny | Alan Wells |
| Chuck Evans | Frank Gerstle |
| Guard | Larry Carr |
| Pepi | Matty Fain |
| Driver | Joe Locke |

Jack Carson and Mickey Rooney enact a couple of roughneck oilmen in South America in this programmer offering. Emphasis is on chuckles with the action, and delivers enough to take care of the light demands of companion bookings in the general dual situations.

Femme interest is divided between Nancy Gates, oil expert who comes to South America to take over Carson's job, but winds up with him, instead, and Jeff Donnell, hash-slinger who has a half-developed yen for the big braggard but gets Rooney for the finale clinch.

Story and physical values are pretty much formula throughout the Herman Cohen production, with Stephen Kandel's script using stereotype characters and situations to carry the plot load which Sherman A. Rose's direction brings off in stock fashion. When Carson feuds with his big boss, Willis Bouchey, the latter sends Miss Gates to take over. His masculine pride hurt, Carson stays on to help bring in the first gusher after some handicapping skullduggery by Myron Healey, wildcatter who is after the government lease that goes to the driller of the first producing well.

Charles Van Enger handles the photography satisfactorily in view of budget restrictions and other technical contributions fall in the same class. Brog.

Good cavalry - versus - Indians feature.

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Universal release of Robert Arthur production. Stars Jeff Chandler, Dorothy Malone, Ward Bond, Keith Andes, Lee Marvin; features Sydney Chaplin, Willis Bouchey, Michael Ansara, Olive Carey, Charles Horvath, Orlando Rodriguez, Glen Kramer, Floyd Simmons. Directed by George Marshall. Screenplay, Sam Rolfe; from the novel "Frontier Fury" by Will Henry; camera (Technicolor), Harold Lipstein; editor, Milton Carruth; music supervision, Joseph Gershenson. Previewed July 30, '56. Running time, 95 MINS.

| Col. Edson Stedlow | Willis Bouchey |
| Kamiakin | Michael Ansara |

| Sgt. Major Desmonde | Alberto Morin |
| Isaiah | Richard Hale |
| Jeremiah | Frank de Kova |
| Capt. Fanning | Terry Wilson |
| Major Randall | Philip Kieffer |
| Elijah | Gilbert Conner |

Plenty of action makes this cavalry-versus-Indians thriller sturdy fare for the general outdoor market. Name of Jeff Chandler and other familiar cast faces and the CinemaScope - Technicolor treatment of the East Oregon outdoor locations are assets for release intentions.

Plot is based on the uprising of Christianized Indians led by Chief Kamiakin when the cavalry starts to open a road and build a fort on lands given the redskins by treaty. George Marshall's direction is wise in outdoor action lure and he maintains the development at a fast pace. Script by Sam Rolfe, from Will Henry's novel, "Frontier Fury," is cut to order for handling the main theme and also does a good job of injecting some side plot issues having to do with the characters involved in the Robert Arthur production.

Chandler plays a rugged cavalry scout who warns the colonel, Willis Bouchey, the uprising will come if the road plans are carried out. It's the type of outdoor character he is thoroughly familiar with so he delivers with expected ease. Dorothy Malone is the vacillating wife of Keith Andes, cavalry officer, who thinks she loves Chandler but switches back to her husband at the finale. She adds a nice femme touch to the action doings, and Andes is acceptable. Ward Bond does well as the medical missionary whose Indians uprise, and it's his death at the end that brings the redskins back into line. Lee Marvin, a tough sergeant; Sydney Chaplin, Indian scout; Michael Ansara, the rebelling chief; Olive Carey, Charles Norvath and others are able in carrying out plot requirements.

Arthur's production supervision is an all-around able job and the technical assists fall in that classification, too. Harold Lipstein did the good lensing. Brog.

Hot Cars

Melodrama of stolen car racket. Fast hour's fare for duals.

Hollywood, Aug. 3.

United Artists release of Howard W. Koch (Bel-Air) production. Stars John Bromfield, Joi Lansing, Mark Dana; features Carol Shannon, Ralph Clanton, Robert Osterloh, Dabbs Greer, Charles Keane. Directed by Donald McDougall. Screenplay, Don Martin, Richard Landau; story, H. Haile Chace; camera, William Margulies; editor, George Gittens; music, Les Baxter. Previewed Aug. 1, '56. Running time, 60 MINS.

|---|---|
| Nick Dunn | John Bromfield |
| Karen Winter | Joi Lansing |
| Smiley Ward | Mark Dana |
| Jane Dunn | Carol Shannon |
| Arthur Markel | Ralph Clanton |
| George Hayman | Robert Osterloh |
| Detective Davenport | Dabbs Greer |
| Lieutenant Jefferson | Charles Keane |
| Otto Krantz | Kurt Katch |
| Lieutenant Holmes | George Sawaya |
| Hutton | John Merrick |
| Miss Rogers | Joan Sinclair |
| Paul (the bartender) | Maurice Marks |
| Earl | Marlee Earle |
| Bret Carson | Vic Cutrier |
| Mrs. Davenport | Paula Hill |

"Hot Cars" is a good title for this little programmer aimed at the supporting slot on regular dual bills. A crisp 60-minute running time and a fair amount of melodramatics in the plot make it acceptable for that release designation.

John Bromfield, Joi Lansing and Mark Dana make up the star trio in the Bel-Air presentation, produced by Howard W. Koch under executive producer Aubrey Schenck. They, along with featured players Carol Shannon, Ralph Clanton, Robert Osterloh, Dabbs Greer and Charles Keane, handle the characters with the desired impact under Donald McDougall's direction.

Script by Don Martin and Richard Landau, from a novel by H. Haile Chace, is no shattering expose of the stolen car racket, but there's enough indication of how hot autos are merchandised to the unsuspecting public to carry off the title. Bromfield appears as a salesman who starts selling stolen cars because he needs cash to take care of medical and surgical demands for his ailing baby son. He gets out of the racket just about as abruptly as he went into it. A police investigator gets too close to the truth and is bumped off, with Bromfield framed for the job. Windup gets him off the hook, and rather melodramatically, when he fights the killer on a rocketing roller-coaster at Ocean Park.

Les Baxter contributes the jazzy background score that lends emphasis to the plot, and William Margulies' camera work is good. Other technical credits are well-handled. Brog.

Dimanche

(Sunday's Killers)

(FRENCH-FRANSCOPE)

Paris, July 31.

Filmonde release of EDIC production. Directed by Alex Joffe. Screenplay, Gabriel Arout, Joffe; camera, Jean Bourgoin; editor, Jean Feyte. With Jean-Marc Thibault, Barbara Laage, Georges Poujouly, Dominique Wilims, Paul Frankeur, Rosy Varte, At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 110 MINS.

|---|---|
| Robert | Jean-Marc Thibault |
| Simone | Barbara Laage |
| Marie | Rosy Varte |
| Uncle | Paul Frankeur |
| Mechanic | Georges Poujouly |
| Janine | Dominique Wilims |

This one won the all-nation prize, CIDALC, at Cannes and the top kudos at the recent Cork Film Festival. Unlike the title it is not a whodunit, but a moral-suspense tale of the complications in a series of lives on a Sunday afternoon when a garage mechanic lets a car unwittingly go out on which he has not yet tightened the steering mechanism. Film hinges on the conscience state of the mechanic, and involves a group of people as he finally alerts the police, and the dragnet to stop the car and save the occupants.

Neatly made and acted by comparatively little known players, this has a fresh aspect, but plot is too fabricated to make this really outstanding. It also has the aura of a film made to warn against road excesses. However its clever notations make this entertaining and offbeat enough for possibilities in Stateside special spots. Not profound enough in treatment for the artics, it will have to be handled as an exploitation gambit to pay off accordingly on its engaging qualities.

A simple, goodhearted mechanic becomes an agonized man on discovering the car has left without the needed repairs. A frightened brother and wife talk him out of acting, but his conscience and his son galvanize him, and film builds as roadblocks and citizens try to stop a speeding car with some hitchikers and a honeymooning German couple.

Director Alex Joffe has used an anamorphoscope process in black and white, called Franscope, and it neither heightens or perceptibly lessens the impact of the film. Acting is subdued and real with technical aspects fine and location small town shooting also giving it a good natural flavor. Mosk.

H. Cohn's 183,860 Shares; Rhoden's Charitable Trust; Other 'Insider' Facts

Washington, Aug. 7.

Harry Cohn has built up his holdings in Columbia Pictures to 183,860 shares of common stock. In three transactions, he added a net total of 4,633 shares last month, according to the last monthly report of "insider transactions" issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

E. C. Rhoden transferred 1,000 shares of National Theatres common to the Rhoden Charitable Trust. He retains 35,800 in his own name and 48,525 in holding companies. Charles F. McKhann bought 200 shares of Stanley-Warner common, giving him a total of 900.

John Balaban disposed of 200 shares of AB-PT in May but retains 7,300 shares of the circuit's common stock. James L. Brown dropped 400 shares, reducing his bundle to 1,100. James M. Weinberg purchased 1,000 shares of Allied Artists. Tonrud Inc. reported several transactions ranging back to 1953 in Associated Motion Picture Industries, formerly Republic. Tonrud now holds 72,585 shares of capital stock of Associated. Elsa Titus reported herself as joint tenant and indirect owner of 325 shares, via Tonrud.

Bette Davis Revises Views on Personals; Legion Hurt 'Storm'

Washington, Aug. 7.

Screen star Bette Davis reaped a bonanza of press kudos and radio-tv attention during her two day tub thumping stint for "Storm Center." Vet player though she is, this is the first time in her long film career that she's actually hit the hustings to promote one of her starrers.

Miss Davis did one "personal appearance" at the old Earle Theatre, teamed with the late Warren Williams. She always thought such stints were "nonsense." In view of her most recent experience, however, she seemed inclined to feel that the change in the very nature of pix biz, plus the more serious approach to personal appearances, might well warrant the time and effort.

In Philadelphia Miss Davis addressed 600 femmes of the American Jewish Congress. In Washington she and producer Julius Blaustein met individual press reps in small groups of two or three reporters, and an MPAA screening for an invited audience of about 50 carefully selected newsmen, editors, and radio-tv reps. Miss Davis included radio interviews on her agenda, but nixed tv as a matter of policy, though Blaustein bicycled around the tv studios. Schedule was made up by Columbia's Sid Zinns with goal of making every minute count.

Both star and producer called the Legion of Decency special rating "unfortunate," admitting it would undoubtedly hurt b.o. prospects. Film makes its local debut here at Lopert's Playhouse Thursday (9), so b.o. score is not yet in.

Miss Davis trained from here for her home near Portland, Maine. She said she has no immediate plans for tv, but would not rule out the medium for an "exciting" subject. Her present goal is one picture per year, and plenty of time with husband Gary Merrill and her three children.

(Blaustein left to lay groundwork for mid-September shooting of "Guard of Honor" in Orlando, Florida, for which he has already received Dept. of Defense green light.)

DE BRA'S BROCHURE TOUTS 'STORM' FILM

Taking an unequivocal stand for "the right to read," the Motion Picture Assn. of America this week touted Columbia Pictures' "Storm Center" via a brochure sent out by Arthur H. DeBra's community relations department.

Taking a very different pitch from the Catholic Legion of Decency, DeBra's letter intro said of the film: "You may not agree with its conclusions, but you can't afford to miss this intriguing and entertaining photoplay which has something important to say."

Pic, produced by Julian Blaustein, tells what happens when a librarian in a small town refuses to remove from the shelves a book called "The Communist Dream." The Legion put the film into a special category, calling it "propagandistic" and stating that "its specious arguments tend seriously to be misleading and misrepresentative by reason of an inept and distorted presentation."

The MPAA brochure, mailed only in the instance of unusual pictures which the org considers of some value, contains a center spread keynoted by President Eisenhower's "Don't Join the Book Burners" exhortation during his famed Dartmouth address in the days when Sen. Joseph McCarthy was still riding high. There follow extensive quotations from one of the President's press conferences.

Discussing free speech and press guarantees in the Constitution, DeBra said: "One might have hoped that these (guarantees) would have precluded the repetition here of the tragedies to freedom of expression which took place in Europe. But previous restraint of the 'right to read' is still an issue here, and now."

BRITISH APATHY RE U.S. COIN

Replacement of Eady Plan Due

Thorneycroft Explains To Parliament—John Davis Delighted—London Times: U.S. Films Pay Off

London, Aug. 7.

The Government is to institute a statutory film levy to replace the present voluntary Eady arrangement which lapses next year, and has promised that steps will be taken to extend the exhibitors' quota beyond its termination in October, 1958.

This vital news, which has been holding up future production planning, was made in the House of Commons last Thursday (2) by Peter Thorneycroft, Board of Trade prexy, replying to a direct invitation by Lord Balniel to disclose future Government policy regarding the British picture industry. His answer was given on the last day before Parliament went into recess till October.

Thorneycroft said the powers of the National Film Finance Corp. to make loans would be renewed after its present term expires in March of next year.

Although the BoT prexy's brief statement has eased the minds of most producers, current feeling in industry circles denotes that he hasn't enlarged sufficiently on these points. Yet it seems clear that in making his statement he has taken into account the views expressed by the major trade associations in their replies to the NFFC questionnaire. Until Thorneycroft receives the summarized report of their replies two months hence, it's not considered likely that any move will be taken to classify the type of film eligible for the levy. On this latter point revolves greatest speculation. The present scheme, originally designed to rake in $9,100,000 to close the gap in production costs, etc. now barely scrapes $7,000,000 and producer and exhibitor factions are wondering how much the new scheme is likely to bring in annually.

John Davis, prez of British Film Producefs' Assn. and Rank topper, expressing "delight" at the BoT announcement, has said: "It will do much to allay the doubt which

'Lady Chatterley' Morals Continue in Dispute As Kingsley Defies Censor

An appeal from the New York censor's refusal to license the French "Lady Chatterley's Lover" was heard yesterday (Tues.) by the Board of Regents under which the censor office operates.

Picture, based on the D. H. Lawrence novel, is distributed in the U.S. by Kingsley International. Censor tagged it "immoral within the intent of our law" and demanded extensive cuts to which Edward L. Kingsley and his attorney, Ephraim S. London wouldn't agree.

Kingsley has made it plain that, unless the Board reverses the censor, the case will be taken to court in another constitutional challenge of the law under which films are censored in the state.

Appearing before the board, London called the picture "moral in its theme and presentation" and pointed out that, in its 1953 decision, the U.S. Supreme Court had ruled that the censor couldn't ban pictures on the grounds of "immorality" because "that word is too vague and indefinite."

Recounting how the N.Y. censorship law was then amended, "purporting to define the term 'immoral' so that its meaning would be clear, definite and precise," London called the amendment "pure legislative humbug. It defines the word 'immoral' in terms that are just as ambiguous." And he added:

"The amendment was enacted to enable the censors to continue to function under color of law until the statute is contested again in the courts."

JR. RHODEN'S 'DELINQUENTS'

Makes Indie Features With Kansas City Locales

Kansas City, Aug. 7.

Shooting on location on "The Delinquents," indie film being produced by local interests, finished here last week. Elmer Rhoden Jr., prexy of Imperial Productions which is making the film, left Monday for the Coast to supervise editing.

Picture is based on story by Rhoden and a screenplay by Robert Altman, director. Principals in the picture are Peter Miller, Tom Laughlin and Rosemary Howard. Entire picture has been shot on location, with 22 different locals included in the script.

With Rhoden in this production are W. B. Brewster, vice president, and R. L. Wolf, treasurer. It's the second venture in motion picture production by Rhoden, an exec of Commonwealth Theatres, and son of the head of National Theatres. A releasing arrangement is yet to be worked out on "The Delinquents."

New York's Two Doubts on New British Scheme

American film company executives, while generally satisfied with the pattern spelled out in London last week for the British industry by the Board of Trade, nevertheless are concerned on two points.

(1.) The plan to replace the present voluntary Eady Fund with a statutory scheme starting next year.

(2.) The failure of Peter Thorneycroft, BOT president, to make reference to the future definition of just what constitute a British film in quota terms.

The decision to make the Eady Fund statutory would deprive the American companies of freedom of action. They are, at the moment, a party to the Fund via their membership in the Kinematograph Renters Society. However,

FILM-GLUTTED TV ENDS ONE HOPE

From the point-of-view of the independent distributor, the business of selling purely British films in the American market "is at an end," says Richard Gordon.

Long a rep of British companies here, and specifically of George Minter's Renown Pictures, Gordon said this was the reason why he had recently formed Amalgamated Productions to produce small-budget pictures in London.

"The American exhibitors need small pictures in the double-billing territories. And such films, if turned out with the proper budget, can make a lot of money," he said. Amalgamated has six on its current sked and hopes to deliver them before the end of the year. Each film has some American names.

"The small, purely British pictures don't do any business around this country," Gordon noted. "The possibility for selling them to television is now gone, too. Even on the important British product, the tv people now offer 50% of what they paid only six months ago. That market is glutted with product." As for the top British product, it has established distribution outlets.

The Amalgamated product is being turned out on budgets of from $150,000 to $200,000. Gordon said he wasn't making any distribution deals pending delivery of the product. As for coproduction in Britain, Gordon said he found the British "apathetic" towards the idea. "I got the impression they've more or less written off the U.S.," he said. "Between what John Davis (Rank) tells them about the American refusal to play British pictures, and the experiences they've had with American partners, the people in London just don't seem to be too interested."

'Studying' USSR

Motion Picture Export Assn. has decided to reexamine its policy vs. the sale of pictures to Russia and the satellites. (See story, this page.)

MPEA board yesterday (Tues.) decided to study the question via a subcommittee under prexy Eric Johnston. Group will report to the board prior to Aug. 31 when the MPEA franchise for the Iron Curtain countries comes up for renewal.

British War Themes Disappoint At American Boxoffice Though U.S. Military Pix Okay in Britain

Failure of the Warwick "Cockleshell Heroes" to make a good showing in the U. S. has some in the trade wondering what makes British warfilms apparently taboo with broad American audiences.

Lack of acceptance is of interest since, from the American side, a considerable number of war pix are in the offing. They have no trouble in Britain, unless—as did the Errol Flynn "Burma Victory"—there's a distortion of fact.

There was a time, before and during the war, when Americans liked the British war stories. Noel Coward's "In Which We Serve," for instance, was a success.

While they understand that a degree of chauvinism enters into the non-acceptance of imported war pix, observers are still struck by the consistency of the U. S. reaction. "Dam Busters," for instance, a highly successful war film in Britain, just didn't do any business in the U. S. Nor did "The Coldlitz Story" on its release in Canada. "The Sea Shall Not Have Them" and "Glory at Sea" also flopped in the U. S.

"Cockleshell Heroes" didn't ignite despite the fact that it had an American name, Jose Ferrer, who directed himself in this one. British war films, on the other hand, have apparently been quite popular on television, where a great many of them have been shown over and over again, notably "Fire Over London."

The one British war film that did quite well at the American b.o. in recent years was "The Cruel Sea," released by Universal.

Quite a few of the British war films are coming up, too. Biggest of them is "The Battle of the River Plata," describing the sinking of the Graf Spee. Then there is "Reach for the Sky," "A Town Called Alice" and "The Ship That Died of Shame." Latter has been acquired by Continental Distributing.

A big British war film, now in the planning stages, is the story of Dunkirk, which the Ealing group (Sir Michael Balcon and Reginald Baker) plan to turn out for Metro release.

SHIFTS AT LOEW'S THEATRES

Friedman New Treasurer—Weltman, O'Donnell Upped

Leopold Friedman has relinquished the job of corporate secretary at Loew's Theatres to become treasurer of the circuit in addition to continuing as financial v.p. He replaces the late Harold J. Cleary as treasurer.

Archie Weltman has been moved up from assistant secretary- treasurer to secretary. Leonard O'Donnell, who recently joined the company after being v.p.-treasurer of Arthur Guinness Son & Co., has been appointed comptroller.

Par Dropping Double-Frame V'Vision Prints

Paramount is giving the bounce to its system of "super" VistaVision in which double frames of print were projected on the screen at the one time and fed through the camera horizontally. The V'Vision dual-frame photographic process will be continued, of course, but now all release prints are to be developed in the standard 35m gauge and projector-fed in conventional vertical fashion.

Company contends that all the pictorial quality is captured in the camera work alone, and there's no need to go to the trouble and expense of the double-frame projection. This elaborate presentation of product on the exhibition end was widely touted when first introduced but was used only limitedly. Par provided some exhibitors with the necessary equipment on a lease basis for the engagement of perhaps only a single picture, such as "Strategic Air Command."

But with the transfer of the negative to 35m no loss of quality, as claimed, why bother? Par now reasons.

NOW'S TIME FOR EAST-WEST DEALS, PICKER TELLS MPEA; UA MAY SOLO

Film company presidents and foreign department heads at a New York meeting of the Motion Picture Export Assn. yesterday (Tues.) were point-blank told that now's the time to send American pictures to the Iron Curtain countries. Arnold Picker, part owner and foreign operations v.p. of United Artists, told the execs he feels assured that reasonable trading deals can be made. But to give the Yank product for free is out, for this would simply be a propaganda pitch and this is not his intent.

In a private conversation with a reporter, Picker made it clear that in the event the companies, collectively under the MPEA banner, refuse to go along with his ideas, he'll strongly urge his company and the independent producers aligned with it to sell pictures to the Soviet and the satellites on their own.

Never before has any highly-placed industry exec gone so far toward an actual deal with the East and that definite action will result, in one form or another, seems likely. He also includes Red China as a potential customer.

Picker, who attended Czechoslovakia's recent International Film Festival in Karlovy Vary, also filed a report with the U. S. State Department on his position regarding the film trading.

Some time ago State recommended such sales to the East and this was followed by meetings between Eric A. Johnston, MPEA president, and Soviet reps in Washington. Latter said in broad terms they wanted American productions but never came up with any specific proposal such as had been asked for by Johnston.

On the basis of his call on the Czechs, where he also engaged in talks with officials of other satellites, Picker said he's extremely high on the idea of establishing "visual contact" between East and West. And only motion pictures can provide such contact, he added.

Exec related he feels assured there will be no distortion of the Yank product in the East, such assurance having been given him by U. S. Government officials as well as the Iron Curtain lads. Some U. S. film company officers have expressed fear in past that America could be depicted in an unfriendly light by changes made in pic product after it reaches the Communist countries.

Picker saw first hand the virtually total lack of knowledge the people of Czechoslavakia have about the West. This was perhaps best revealed to him (and he has a snapshot to prove it) of the natives mobbing his wife, Ruth, for autographs only because she was from uncurtained terrain. And the reception given "Marty" at the film fest was nothing short of ecstatic, he added, in pointing up the eagerness of the Czechs to come into that visual contact with the West.

He was impressed, too, with the new "freedom" now in evidence—the freedom given the natives to mail uncensored letters outside the country and to speak up in criticism of their government.

Picker said he received overtures from several satellites anent acquisition of American films but he talked no specific deals.

UA is now contractually bound not to act independently of the other MPEA companies so far as film sales to the East are concerned. But this pact terminates next month, at which point UA could act on its own.

Seattle Cinerama No. 18; Cuts Evergreen's 3,000 Seats Down to 1,396

Seattle, Aug. 7.

The Paramount theatre has been leased by Evergreen Theatres to Stanley Warner Cinerama Corp. and will open to the public Aug. 23 as the 18th Cinerama theatre in the United States. Prices will be $2.65 top nights, $1.75 matinees. Two performances daily with three Saturdays and Sundays are scheduled.

More Skull Practice on Imports

How Can Foreign Films Crash U.S. in a Time of Product 'Shortage'?

Foreign producers, who continue as anxious as ever to crash the U.S. market, also continue to get a good deal of conflicting advice on just where the payoff is hidden in their films when it comes to the American audience.

This advice is being listened to more avidly today in some countries since the impression still prevails—and is borne out by actual experience—that there now exists an unprecedented chance for imports in the U.S. theatres.

It is true that it is perhaps as difficult as ever to break into the circuits with a foreign lingualer, but a great many indie situations which never before would have considered playing an import are willing to give it a run for it's money. And in some instances this spirit has paid off.

A large number of exhibitors, when they give thought to the question, tend to feel that the future success of the foreign pix is tied up closely with the degree to which producers abroad are willing to make concessions to the specific tastes of the American patrons.

This line of reasoning holds that, if these producers can hit on a formula that combines what they do with what Americans expect from the screen, this deliberate slanting of treatment and subject matter would automatically result not only in better grosses but in wider bookings.

E. D. Martin, board chairman of Theatre Owners of America, said on returning from Europe recently that he had seen many fine, artistic pictures, but that, unless the Europeans learned to adapt themselves to the U. S. taste pattern, "these films are of little use to us."

A year ago, TOA issued a survey concerning British films, in which the exhib org made it plain that what was wrong with the British pictures was primarily that they weren't American enough. TOA put emphasis on "technique."

There are those, including a substantial number of indie importers, who feel that any European leaning towards "Americanization" of the Continental product would be fatal. And, occasionally, an exhibitor will feel that way too. Harry Brandt, returning from Europe last week, opined it was a big mistake to counsel Europeans to worry about the American angle. It's the "typical" native productions that will succeed in the U.S., he said.

In this opinion he is joined by French director Jean Renoir who feels strongly that it's a mistake for European producers to take American tastes into account.

Observers feel that there's probably a way to resolve that double image. One solution—and it's being attempted more and more—is to dub films that have been successful in the art houses, provided

Air Conditioner Blows; Firemen Overcome; St. Loo House Shut for Fixing

St. Louis, Aug. 7.

Ten firemen and two employees of the 5,000-seater midtown Fox Theatre were overcome by refrigerant gas fumes following an explosion of a compressor pump in the theatre engine room last night (Monday). Some 900 customers were uninjured and made an exodus from the house in an orderly fashion when ushers and theatre attaches explained what had happened.

About 20 firemen were given emergency treatment at the scene. One of the most seriously injured is Haber L. Rowman, theatre engineer who suffered a broken left arm and a head laceration in addition to gas inhalation.

The house will be closed for several days until repairs are made according to James Arthur, manager. Current film was "Away All Boats."

Foresee Profit on Roxy Deal With Rockefeller

Los Angeles, Aug. 7.

National Theatres' nine-month net was $1,3787,974, or 51c a share on 2,699,486 shares of common outstanding, prexy Elmer C. Rhoden disclosed in a report to the stockholders. Gross income for the period was $42,656,463. In the same period a year ago, gross was $45,-043,063 and net $1,768,490, or 64c a share on 2,769,486 shares outstanding.

Net for the quarter ended June 23, was $455,168, or 17c a share, compared with $487,941, or 18c a share, for the same 13-week period in 1955.

Circuit sold unproductive properties during the nine months for a profit of $418,000. In the similar period last year such sales contributed $180,000 to earnings. In the last three months, sale of such properties added $216,000 to net incomes, compared with $163,000 for the third quarter last year.

Rhoden's report pointed up the fact that figures for the nine months do not reflect the boxoffice potential for several recently released films, which include "The King and I," "Trapeze," "Moby Dick" and "The Eddy Duchin Story."

An option agreement for the sale under a lease-back arrangement of the Roxy theatre in New York, reportedly to the Rockefeller interests, will give the circuit a sizeable capital gain if sale is completed, Rhoden stated.

Plans for NT's Cinemiracle, three-strip process, are progressing, Rhoden told stockholders.

Japs Loyally Support Old, Want No New Stars, Reports Arthur Lubin

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Arthur Lubin, just returned from four weeks in Japan to scout locations and complete shooting arrangements on RKO's "Escapade in Japan," which he'll produce and direct, reports Nip film audiences are interested only in the old established stars and insist upon being loyal to them.

No new faces are wanted in American pictures, according to Japanese exhibitors.

Theatres in cities open at 9 a.m., and immediately long lines are waiting to get into the house, mostly 3,000 and 4,000-seaters. Demand for American films is growing, Lubin says, and this applies to small towns as well as with met oudiences.

Lubin returns to Japan Aug. 26 and will be followed by a Hollywood troupe, including 75 crewmen, four weeks later. Picture, which rolls Oct. 2 and will be completed in Japan, tees off RKO's new foreign binge, in which studio will make at least six pictures abroad during the next six months.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Liberalized remittance policy of the German Government under a directive taking effect Aug. 15 aims to eliminate an anomaly within existing currency regulations. Here is how the Motion Picture Export Assn. explained the move to the member companies.

"The primary reason for this new, drastic revision in the conduct of the business of our member companies by the Bank Deutscher Laender is accounted for by the fact that our earnings on this market during the last two years have really been an anomaly within existing currency regulations. Theoretically, the only source for liberalized capital D-Marks is the sale of German assets held by foreigners.

"Since the liberalized D-Mark holdings of our member companies were derived from income and not from the sale of assets the position of the local member companies distorted the monetary controls of the Bank by providing an entirely unplanned and large source of liberalized capital D-Marks in money trading circles. It was to eliminate this situation that prompted the Bank Deutscher Laender to take the new steps."

New operating licenses are being issued, granting the Americans privileges similar to those of the German distribution companies. After Aug. 15, local member cos. of the MPEA either deposit their liberalized capital D-Mark holdings in a new special liberalized D-Mark account, or else they can leave the holdings on the old accounts, with the marks automatically converted into "Inland" marks.

Although it's endorsed by the ad-pub committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, the plan calling for a junket of some 300 newspapermen to the Coast as a press relations gimmick already appears headed for scuttling. Even some promotion execs are against it and it's regarded as a cinch that the company presidents, whose okay is required, will not uniformly approve.

One big reason is this: The smaller companies fear the visiting fourth estators would give the play to the larger and more active and attractive lots such as Metro, 20th-Fox, Warners and Paramount. Yet, Columbia, Allied Artists, Republic and other members of the MPAA would have to share the costs.

The projected program, as outlined, envisioned realms of copy flowing out of Hollywood during the junket to papers in all key cities throughout the country. But what good would this do us, reason the less elaborate outfits, if the majors get all the attention?

Another stumbling block now being talked about centers on how to hold the 300 scribes to any kind of schedule. Chances are many of those who would be selected would be newcomers to the Coast and want to onceover much more territory than the picture business. Some execs simply don't want to pick up the check if the reporters report on non-film matters.

Daily Bulletins Tease-Pepped Crew

George Justin at Fox Studio Chants: 'Keep 'Em In The East by Keeping the Budget Down'

"Twelve Angry Men" wound up shooting at Fox Movietone in New York last week and all members of the company doubtless will hold fond memories of the daily bulletins posted by George Justin, production supervisor, who signed himself, "The coach." Herewith, some of the communiques—

1. ALLEGAROO.

2. Remember, men, we are not doing "Gone With the Wind." We are doing a very fine, sensitive, beautiful, highly dramatic, VERY LOW BUDGET picture. Let's get in there and knock off lots of scenes today.

3. Although it is true that there are 322 days left to Christmas, it is most assuredly not true that there are that many days left to make this picture (just in case any of youse are under the illusion that this is a life-time job). KEEP 'EM IN THE EAST.

4. A nice loud ALLEGAROO for Eddie Knott who has just joined the first team. We now have the highest priced grip department on both coasts. The management wishes to take this opportunity to thank both the cast and the crew members (some of whom are very fine actors in their own right) for a brilliant performance this past week. Congratulations and keep up the good work, men. It's just possible that some of you may be getting your varsity letters before too long.

5. Yesterday was a bad day at Black Gulch, men . . . not very many scenes tick-tocked off. Therefore, we've got to work on the Day of Independence to try to make up some time. We know that you all detest the idea of overtime pay, but please force yourself to accept it. Now, get out and give your all today. Damn the torpedoes . . . Full Speed Ahead.

6. Let us all consider this day Inspiration Day. Let us stand behind our leader, Mr. Lumet. Let us help him carry the ball onward to a brilliant, artistic, LOW BUDGET victory.

7. Yesterday certainly was not Inspiration Day. On the contrary, it turned out to be Drag Your A— Day. The coach is mad.

8. Gentlemen: This marks the half way point in our glorious adventure together . . . Push dem dollies. Tote dem lights. Actors, dolly-men, cinematographers, we are all as one. God save the King. Keep 'em in the East.

9. Yesterday was another Blue Ribbon, a Number One, Grand Prix, Vive La France Day. What heavenly music to hear those scenes tick-tocking off.

10. Gentlemen: We are about to begin our rain sequence . . . Let's all put on our galoshes and heavy duty stormgear and into our dogsleds and away we go. Neither wind nor rain nor icy skies shall keep our 12 Angry Postmen from their Low Budget goal. Mush! Mush!

11. Today shall be known as Let Us Be Careful Day. Now that we have worked all of you noble warriors into a screaming frenzy and you are driving relentlessly onward toward an On Schedule, Low Budget, Keep 'em in the East, Tick Tock, God Save the King, Vive La France goal . . . we ask you, nay, we command you to pause in your frenzied, frenetic fervor . . . Today is Friday the 13th, men. Let us be careful. But, for God's love, not too careful. Onward!

12. Big brother hopes you enjoyed your well deserved weekend . . . Incidentally, since our schedule officially ends on Friday, we know, in your heart of hearts, you will VOLUNTEER your services should we not finish on time. We are sincerely grateful . . . we accept this very touching gesture.

13. Attention cinematographers and special effects prop men. Please, fellas, we are not making a documentary on "How Rain Heats Down Windows with Electric Fans." It's just supposed to be a little old New York thunderstorm . . . not "Way Down Upon the Swanee River." . . . Man the windshield wipers, men, full speed ahead.

14. Special note to our artist-thespians: Please, gentlemen, there is too much frivolity on the set. The coach insists upon the proper discipline. You're setting a bad example for our serious, hard-working, trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful thrifty, brave, clean and reverent Keep 'em in the East crew.

15. Hickory Dickory Dock . . . how those scenes went tickety-tock! Congratulations ye conquering heroes, ye men of steel, ye knights of the low budget lullaby to American jurisprudence.

16. Note to Mr. Lumet and the creative department: C r e a t e! Spare no horses! We don't care what it costs as long as it costs less. Onward.

"Angry Men," courtroom drama being directed by Sidney Lumet, is a joint Henry Fonda-Reginald Rose production.

FRANCE JOGS MEXICO ON 'RIFIFI' BANNING

Mexico City, Aug. 7.

France has asked Mexico to explain the banning of "Rififi" following a hugely successful run of 31 weeks at a single theatre here. The French expressed amazement, particularly following the recent Franco-Mexican film pact covering exhibition and coproduction.

"Rififi" not only ran for 31 weeks at Cinex Prado but also have successful runs at Guadalajara and at Vera Cruz. The Mexican Interior Ministry pointed to a rare crime in Mexico—bank robbery—recently committed here and noted that "Rififi" wasn't conducive to curbing crime.

"Rififi" has a long sequence detailing a bank robbery.

Congressman Jorge Ferretis, chairman of Mexico's National Cinematographic Board, said that, in answering Paris, he would contend that the film pact didn't cover film censorship by either Republic and that Mexico holds that it's up to each individual country to decide whether a picture is to be shown or not.

Cameramen's Union's Double Wages

'End as a Man' Shooting in Florida (Under Chi Jurisdiction) Must Pay Idle Standbys

Labor practice of standby personnel on the production payroll has independent producer Sam Spiegel doing a burn. In New York over the past week, he blasted cameramen's locals of the I.A.T.S.E. for what he terms injustices against film-makers which also have the effect of hurting members of the union itself.

Now shooting "End As A Man" in Florida, Spiegel said he wanted Hollywood-hep lensmen and took four with him from the film capital. Under the union regulations, however, he had to pay equal salaries to the cameramen's unit in Chicago, which has jurisdiction over Florida.

Meaning a double payoff for high-priced craftsmen. But in addition to this, said Spiegel, the Hollywood men who do the full day's work have the beef that others are being paid as well for their labors.

NEW YORK'S INDUSTRIAL PIC BOOM

Medicine, Religion, Welfare, Education, Sports Dominate Along With Straight Sell at Dynamic

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Industrial films is a business of uncertain dimensions and of vague-to-disappearing elements. There may be 6,000 such companies in the U.S. It is commonly said that New York City has about 300 industrial film companies but a recent Young & Rubicam census enumerated 414. How many of the companies (whatever their number) have their own studios and permanent staffs and how many are more than 10 years, or even more than three years old, remain unresearched questions.

Nonetheless, there is no doubt that, overall, the industrial film industry is booming in New York. An example of growth enterprise in the area is Dynamic Films Inc., which operates in a former telephone building on the upper west side of Manhattan. Its studio space is being tripled in the near future but meanwhile all facilities are contracted into mid-December.

What strikes the trade observer in a visit to the Dynamic quarters is the staggering work-load carried by a permanent staff of about 35 plus daily augmentation of actors and others as needed. In 1955, the company produced the equivalent of 150 Hollywood reels and this year will double or better that total. As of this week, chief film editor Irving Oshman (there are six editors, four assistants, two apprentices) has a backlog of 15 completed negatives waiting to be cut and the sound engineer, Jim Townsend, is also doing the one-armed paperhanger bit.

New York's industrial film "boom" by and large is a reflection of television's influence, and Dynamic has been active in that field for some years. Following the death of Henry Morley, a motion picture equipment (J. A. Maurer Co.) executive who co-founded the studios, the teleplx and advertising sales chief is Cy Pitts who was a client of Dynamic prior to becoming an employe.

Runs the Gamut

Dynamic is one of the few industrial companies to run the gamut, producing some series (per the Monty Wooley show) on its own initiative and peddling the finished film, although mainly engaged in contract work. A run down of the type of clients for, which Dynamic (and, of course, other New York industrial companies) make film nowadays is the best way to present a panoramic concept of current utilization of the medium. During 1956 Dynamic has rolled productions for:

Anahist (the common cold)
Episcopal Church (its chaplaincy, its seminary)
Purolator Products (filtration)
Executive Furniture Guild
Champion Spark Plug
Ford Foundation
Equitable Life (old age problems)
Presbyterian Church (missions)
Methodist Church (missions)
National Coffee Assn. (office coffee breaks)
Upholstering Leather Group
Bulova Watch
Ford Motors

Since the great success of "Martin Luther," there has been an upsurge in church-sponsored films. Much of this work has been done in Hollywood but Manhattan has reaped its share. Social welfare bodies and associations dedicated to given diseases are also well represented on the industrial film shooting schedules of the present day. Recent contracts at Dynamic included Muscular Dystrophy Assn., Heart Assn., Cincinnati Children's Hospital and American Leprosy Commission.

Co-founder and driving force at Dynamic is Nathan Zucker, a brother of the one-time 20th-Fox executive who now practices law on the coast. Zucker came out of Yale about the time Thurman Arnold's activities were in the headlines. Applying for a job at the Theatre Guild, he was rejected by the interviewing official (from Harvard) on the grounds that Yale was a nest of radicals. Drifting to an employment agency where, unable to describe himself satisfactorily, he was told "you sound like a writer." And that was how he indirectly got to be an audio-visual writer for Bendix Aircraft. He set up Dynamic Films in 1946.

Three Staff Directors

Dynamic has three staff directors and believes that an industrial studio does best to rely upon people all attuned to the same production practices and attitudes. The three are Zucker, Lee Bobker and Lester Becker. Bobker's credits: 35 script jobs, 20 editing jobs, 50 directorial credits. Becker returned to New York only last week from a four-month visit to Japan, Hong Kong and Korea where he shot footage for the Protestant Council.

School-aimed films continue on the upbeat. Dynamic has sometimes operated under contract to foundations, sometimes has produced freelance. Typical of series in this category were political party lectures, "Hats in the Ring," and a literary series emceed by drama critic Walter Kerr of the N. Y. Herald Tribune, "Writers of Today." Operlogues for youngsters is another in the educational output.

Track of Gold

Dynamic has specialized for the past five years in "making something" of the Decoration Day 500-mile races at Indianapolis and has always succeeded in disposing of its final cut print to some manufacturer of auto parts. This year, Dynamic had seven cameramen in Indianapolis, some for four weeks, to shoot over 50,000 feet of film. Chief editor Oshman is at the moment culling two entirely separate subjects of 1,000 feet each. One version will have a novelty sound track in the form of a special hillbilly-like folk cantata by Ed McCurdy.

That Dynamic is able to dig gold out of the Indianapolis event is the more significant in the light of the fact that this is easily the most-photographed sports event of any year. Counting still cameramen there were fully 1,000 photographers on the premises this year.

Because some sponsors of special motion pictures don't know what to do with them after they're finished, Dynamic also has its own booker, Helen Kristt, and derives a profit from distribution.

Ethical Medical Films

A newcomer to Dynamic may be the "dean" of medical film producers. He is Sol S. Feuerman. Forced out of medical school by ill health, he later worked in Hollywood. Then he combined his knowledge of medical matters and film and has about 25 years experience in the highly specialized work of producing ethical subjects for medical school, hospital and county and state medical societies. Nearly all the principal M.D. groups starting with the American Medical Assn. itself have extensive catalogs of motion pictures. Such films typically range from $20,000 to $50,000 although examples of costs going way beyond the latter figure are not uncommon.

Nearly all the leading ethical pharmaceutical manufacturers (Lilly, Parke Davis, Lederle, et al,) make from one to four medical films annually. Descriptive and instructional by nature, such film averages 40% cartoon animation. Films are wholly free of direct trademark or commercial sell, credit being confined to a single attribution on the main title. A straight scientific approach is essential.

Feuerman has also produced medical films for the layman, notably the "Arteriosclerosis" study which "Omnibus" televized.

Medical films are booked well in advance. No fee other than return postage is required. A print generally gets about three showings a month. Some subject matter may be in particular demand, necessitating up to 300 prints, as with Feuerman's still-circulating-after-15-years film on gynecology. Doctors usually prefer films not to run over half an hour but new surgical techniques (invariably photographed, though not always sponsored) may take more running time than a "War and Peace" or a "Ten Commandments."

Strictly 'Straight'

Studio boss Nat Zucker is zealous that any and all purposeful films be first of all entertaining but he confesses that as yet he had never discovered a client who was daring enough to use humor. "And yet some commercial and professional messages fairly cry out for the humorous treatment."

He sighed and added, "We're still hopeful. After 11 years in this business, hopefulness is a perpetual state of mind."

Japanese Permits Tabulated

Motion Picture Export Assn.'s global formula for the division of licenses got its first practical application last week when the division of the Japanese permits for 1956-57 was disclosed. Divvying up was done based on the formula.

While three companies actually gave up one permit each, the final tally showed that only two lost permits. They are Warner Bros. and RKO. Under the formula, no distributor can drop more than one license in any given year.

Formula division saw Paramount also give up a license. However, Par regained one via a bonus permit for "Rose Tattoo." And Columbia came out on top of everyone since it gained one permit under the formula and another via a bonus issue for "Picnic."

The Japanese issue bonus licenses for films considered of cultural and educational value.

Following is the 1956-57 standing of the companies in Japan. Comparable figures for 1955-56 are in brackets: Allied Artists—4 (3); Columbia—10 (9); Loew's—16 (16); Paramount—15 (16); RKO—9 (10); Republic—6 (6); 20th-Fox—13 (13); United Artists—6 (5); Universal—10 (10), and Warner Bros.—13 (14).

3d Vote in 5 Years, Sunday Films Win In Jackson, Tenn.

Jackson, Tenn., Aug. 7.

Sunday films won finally on the third referendum vote in five years. Some 3,604 voted for Sabbath flickers, and 3,333 against—a favorable margin of 271. Vote was last Thursday.

Resultantly the two local cinemas will begin operating Sundays Aug. 12. Matinee will be 1-6, then a break until 9 p.m. The staggered hours are to protect churches against film competition.

Sunday films lost by 18 votes in 1951 and by 515 votes in 1952. This year a number of clergymen sided with the showmen against the vigorous opposition of other divines. Pro-film forces included Jackson Chamber of Commerce, plus the Junior Chamber and the presidents of three banks. Commercial interests considered operation of downtown film parlors as healthy for the business community.

ROY HAINES' EPAULETS

Also New WB Status for Bernard R. Goodman

Roy Haines, Warner Bros. general sales manager, has been elected president of Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp.

Warner board at the same time elected Bernard R. Goodman vice-president of the distributing corporation in charge of domestic operations. Goodman is WB coordinator of field sales activities. He was also elected a v.p. of Ace Film Labs and Film Cellulose Inc., two WB subsids.

Goodman joined Warners in 1929 in the homeoffice ad-pub department. In 1946 he was named supervisor of the company's branch operations, and in 1954 he became field sales coordinator.

General Sales Manager Alex Harrison held a two-day sales meeting for some 50 20th-Fox reps here last week, gave them a hopeful picture on future product.

In attendance were salesmen from Portland, Seattle, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles and Frisco.

DAVIS-LOPERT SEEK 'EXPANSION' PLAN; OTHER ANGLES RE FRENCH IN U.S.

By FRED HIFT

New attempt to tackle an old problem, i.e., the more adequate distribution in the U. S. of French films, is in its embryonic stages in New York via talks between Richard Davis and Ilya Lopert.

Duo has been huddling extensively with a view to exploring the possibilities of an exchange setup that would cover the country and might serve as a major release channel primarily for the French product.

If the discussions bear fruit, it's likely that such a setup would be guaranteed product in one form or another, being backed—but not necessarily with money—via the French producers and the government.

Lopert said this week he had worked out a rough plan for something of a United Artists of indie distribs, but stressed it would have to be open to all comers; in fact, would have to take in all important indies to assure a steady supply of product. He expects to discuss the idea in Paris with Jean Goldwurm of Times Films. Lopert stressed the importance of Davis in the field.

It is almost certain, however, that a Davis-Lopert solo would not get the support of the other independents in the field, all of whom claim to have adequate releasing arrangements for their product. There is nothing, on the other hand, to prevent the French government from giving certain support to a group which it considers to have the potential to bring French pix into wider circulation.

Jacques Flaud of the Centre National du Cinematografie is on record as desiring improvements. Flaud is behind a plan under which the French would have given a financial assist to a select group of regional distributors who would have handled French pictures. American indies buying French product would have to agree to release via the "approved" exchanges.

Impression in N. Y. is that such a project has no chance whatever. Nor is it planned to give any fixed product guarantee to the Davis-Lopert group if it goes into business. At the same time, the French have apparently set aside coin for the purpose of encouraging better distribution in the U. S. and the possibility remains that they may put it to some use.

Davis and Lopert huddled in N. Y. last week with two French producers, George Loureau and Henry Deutschmeister. They've also had extensive discussions with Josef Maternati who heads up the French Film Office in the U. S. Maternati, in turn, continues sounding out the other indies for their views and, in the near future, may convene a meeting in an attempt to hash out the issue.

Asked to comment on French film distribution in the U. S. and the wisdom of a combined move, Loureau said to had "no opinion."

Off to Europe

Davis owns the Fine Arts Theatre in New York and the Ziegfeld in Chicago and is on the prowl for more. He's also in distribution via United Motion Picture Organization and within the past year has handled some of the top French product, including the very successful "Diabolique." Lopert also is a producer and exhibitor and has indicated plans to return to distribution. He made "Summertime" and was associated with Sir Laurence Olivier, Korda and City Investing in "Richard III." He's a vet in the foreign film distribution biz.

Confirming his talks with Lopert, Davis last week stressed that nothing had jelled. "It's all still in the talking stages," he said. Davis leaves for Europe Aug. 15 and is expected to continue discussions at Venice and in Paris. Flaud, on the other hand, is expected in New York in September for the Theatre Owners of America convention and at that time will huddle with the indies on the question of distribution.

Maternati stated last week that he was continuing to explore the question of distribution. "We know what we want, but we haven't hit on the right formula yet," he declared. He had no comment on the question of the extent to which the French Government could throw its support to a single group in the U. S., even if this group were trying to achieve the aims outlined by Flaud.

Fewer Exchanges Trend Developing In Britain, Too

London, Aug. 7.

As part of a general economy campaign, major distributors in Britain are mulling a proposition to streamline their operation.

Already under consideration is a project to shutter exchanges in secondary areas. Liverpool is being tipped as the first city which may be affected, and, presumably, the territory would be covered from the nearby Manchester exchanges.

It is known that several of the majors already favor the idea, but others are uncertain. The saving, they argue, would probably be very small as it would be essential to retain some salesmen to cover the territory.

The matter has been discussed secretly in the council chamber of the Kinematograph Renters Society.

Int'l Federation Pix Prods. Cracks Down on Fly-by-Night Film Fests

London, Aug. 7.

Future applications for recognition of international film festivals will be considered by the International Federation of Film Producers Assn. according to the treatment meted out to foreign films within the country concerned. So it was decided at a recent meeting which wound IFFPA's annual assembly here.

Frowning on past instances where a few fests hd been organized without prior reference to the international body, the Federation agreed a resolution that future festivals which are organized without permission will not be given support from producer associations within Federation membership and no individual members shall enter any pictures.

The meeting also opposed the efforts of the International Labor Office to draw up a convention regading copyright and neighbor rights on the grounds that it was not the competent body to do so. The IFFPA decided not to participate in any conferences on this subject other than those convened by the Berne Copyright Union and Unesco.

To give greater effect to the 1954 Locarno affirmation aimed at complete freedom in the international barter of films, a resolution was passed empowering the IFFPA to take "useful measures in so far as they are compatible with the interests of the member associations and with their national laws."

Mex Producers, Studio Workers, Govt. in Drive To Boost Film Prod.

Mexico City, July 31.

In a special meeting last week, attended by Eduardo Garduno, director of local semi-government controlled Banco Cinematografica, Jcrge Ferretis, government film supervisor as well as officers and members of all film technicians, actors and allied film craft groups here the problem of the decreasing number of films produced annually here was discussed at length. Ferretis told the workers the government and the film industry would welcome any additional financing either from within or from outside banking sources. This also would hold true, he explaincd, for any group wishing to distribute locally-made product. Garduno, in a followup statement, made it clear that the bank was in complete agreement with Ferretis and also saw the need for increasing production. He pointed out, however, that the quality must also improve along with quantity.

Felipe Palomino, general secretary of the workers organization (STPCM) then countered by claiming that 50% of Mex film workers were idle at this time and that the technicians organization would have to produce its own films if these members were to exist. It was agreed by everybody that a minimum of 90 pix per year was necessary to keep the local industry on its feet but as to where the financing was to come from was not explainced.

Following the confab, a group of 10 top producers met with the unions' upper echelon in further huddles during which each member of the producers group agreed to put up $16,000 and also to produce no less than one extra film per year for the new outfit. It was pointed out that with this aid and with assistance from the Banco Cinematografica, there would be no further need for the unions' own production outfit, Alianza Cinematografica.

Britain's Queen Plans To See 'Invitation'

London, Aug. 7.

The Queen has chosen to see Metro's "Invitation to Dance" at the Edinburgh Film Festival on Aug. 20. This Technicolor production of Metro's Elstree Studios took a top place at the Berlin Film Festival this year.

She also has asked to see "Festival in Edinburgh," a color short of a previous fest and "The Magic Lamp," (M-G), lensed in Hollywood.

Toss Out Archive Filing

London, Aug. 7.

A proposed move which would make obligatory by law the depositing of every film shown in Britain in the National Archive was thrown out in the committee stage of the Copyright Bill in Parliament on Tuesday (31).

Had the clause gone through, it would have meant individual distribs footing the cost of the filed copy, and, in cases of default, the meeting of the fine. Opposing the idea, Derek Walker-Smith, Parliamentary Secretary of the Board of Trade, said there was strong objection to it from the film industry, and presidents of both British Film Producers Assn. and Kinematograph Renters Society had made a joint protest. Their note had pointed otu that at the present time suitable copies of films for deposit were selected by the distribs for presentation to the Archive when the number of copies became greater than the demand.

Yank Films Still Tops in Berlin

Berlin, Aug. 1.

Despite strong German competition, U. S. films continue playing first fiddle in this city's Kurfuerstendamm (preem house) area. Currently, six out of 14 preem houses are showing Hollywood pix as against five cinemas with domestic pix. Two French films and one British feature complete current film schedule.

Of the new American crop, the most crix praise went to "My Sister Eileen" (Col) at Filmbuehne Wien. "23 Paces to Baker St." (20th), one of U. S. entries at the recent Berlin film fete, was preemed at Delphi and Titania Palast, and received quite good reviews. "The Kentuckian" (UA) played day-date at Filmtheatre Berlin and Metropol with slightly better than fair results. Capitol is currently showing a number of 'Scope reissues, including "Seven Year Itch," "River Of No Return" and "How to Marry a Millionaire" (all 20th-Fox), with okay results.

A number of award-winning German pix are now on release. "Before Sundown," winner of recent film festival, as voted by the public, is a big hit at Gloria Palast. The Studio is still playing "Devil In Silk," an oldie with which Lilli Palmer won the Federal award for best acting.

GREECE READIES ITS 2D ANNUAL FESTIVAL

Athens, July 31.

Greece has joined other countries in the festival business, with the main object to attract tourists and project local talent and cultural achievements abroad. The minister responsible for the organization of this year's fest has announced it will run Aug. 6-Sept. 29, being the second to be held.

Prospects this year are not great because of reports spread abroad that things are not normal in this country as a result of the Cyprus situation. But despite this bad propaganda, the number of toursists showed a small increase in recent months which brought in $1,200,000 more than the corresponding period last year.

The main organizations to participate in this year's fest are the Greek National Theatre, the State Symphony Orchestra and the Lyric Scene (the Greek Opera)

Warns Brit. Lion May Go on Hand-to-Mouth

London, Aug. 7.

A warning that starting in November British Lion Studios might have to live on a "hand-to-mouth" basis, was given by Harold C. Drayton, chairman, at the annual meeting.

Factors giving rise to his pessimism, he explained, involved the trend towards smaller pictures which in turn produced smaller rentals, a slowing of new production, and increasing wage demands. With a falling off in tv film productions, there would be space available at the studios. Profit for the year ended last March totalled $439,000.

Aussie Sponsors Prefer U.S. Faves In Advent of TV

Sydney, July 31.

More excitement here presently over the advent of television than the arrival of the first Yankee khaki-clad in those World War II days.

Station TCN, operated by the powerful Frank Packer newspaper group, sprung a surprise on competitors by telecasting a series of slides July 13 on a tryout. Next week TCN will try documentary pix prior to regular program setup timed for the second week in September.

Top programs under the TCN banner include "I Love Lucy," "Disneyland," "Hopalong Cassidy," "Robin Hood," "Keith Miller Show," "Rin Tin Tin," "San Francisco Beat," "All Star Playhouse," "Count of Monte Cristo," "Father Knows Best."

TCN reports heavy sponsor selling for the major U. S. shows, plus British and homebrew stanzas. Check shows that tv sets are finding a ready sale Down Under despite the $500 price tag. Three other commercial stations are figuring on an October-November start, with the two non-commercials operated by the Australian Broadcasting Commission bidding around this time span.

TCN executives are presently—as are other top tvers—scouring the U. S. for additional programs. Those U. S. agencies should cop a wad of coin out of this territory before year's end.

Jap Cinema Centres In N.Y. and Paris Keyed To Foreign Pix Take

Tokyo, July 31.

The Japanese government, enthused by last year's addition to the national treasury of some $2,000,000 in foreign currency earned through export of native films, plans two strong moves to increase the take in the future.

The Ministry of International Trade & Industry has announced it will establish Japanese Cinema Centres in New York and Paris next year at a cost of $160,000. MITI has already allocated a fund of $3,000 for small-scale Japanese film exhibitions in both cities during the current year.

Cohen-Twitchell's Entry

London, July 31.

Alexander H. Cohen, with his associate Arthur C. Twitchell, is due here next week to cast an American production of Norman Ginsbury's "The First Gentleman." Tyrone Guthrie has been inked as stager.

While in London they also aim to arrange a West End production for Alfred Drake in Pirandello's "The Pleasure of Honesty."

Austria Big Film 'Consumer'

Vienna, Aug. 7.

Just how the population of little Austria—7,000,000 population—is able to "consume" 270 pictures in a half year is a mystery, but nevertheless, it happened.

June alone saw 52 pictures, as against 38 last year. America led with 27 in June, a bit more than 50% of total and a slight increase.

France is second, beating West Germany ten to seven. Rank of Britain dropped to two releases.

With Bars Down, Flood of Imported Pix Hits Argentine; Over 566 This Yr.

Buenos Aires, July 31.

The number of releases which now are playing here is unprecedented. After the niggardly import and release permit system of the 12-year Peron regime, the current freedom of importation adds up to an abundance which is almost embarrassing. All the backlog of the past five years has to be released, as well as the latest material.

It seems probable that 1956 will beat the 1947 high record of releases, which was 566, provided things go on as up to the present. Under Peron the figure went as low as 188.

In the first six months of the year no less than 50 dimensional films were released, 39 in CinemaScope, eight in VistaVision and three in Superscope. U. S. material has been released in the greatest number, of course, with 164 releases for the first semester, against 20 native, 26 Italian, 12 Mexican, 11 French, nine Russian, seven each Spanish and English, four German, two each Swedish and Austrian, and one each Czech, Japanese, Franco - Norwegian, Israeli and Swiss.

For comparative purposes: last year there were only 196 American releases and 17 Italian. The French had only a total of 11 releases in 1955 and already passed this in the first half of this year; the Russians with eight last year, have also gone ahead.

Native releases continue doing weak business and while exhibitors often comply with the Protection Law, they comfort their patrons by advance notices on the imported product they expect to show "next week."

The authorities are said to be contemplating stern measures to repress rampant speculation with film-theatre stubs. Cases have been reported of the SRO sign going up a few minutes after some boxoffices open. Sometimes this is because the ticketsellers themselves hold back until patrons ante up a private bonus for them, or because brokers are doing a record business.

Yugo's Pix Biz Boom

Belgrade, July 30.

Postwar Yugoslavia increased the number of film theatres three times compared with the pre-war time, while attendance has increased approximately by five times, an official statistic of the Yugoslav Film Producers Assn. states. During 1955, 96,362,000 Yugoslavs saw mostly foreign features, while that number is 1939 was only 20.000000.

During the passed five years Yugoslavia had shown 604 foreign and 42 domestic feature films beside those imported on exchange basis and those produced in coproduction with various foreign film producers. CinemaScope, VistaVision and other new film techniques are known here.

The Yugoslav-produced films, in the course of the last two years, have been shown on all continents, except Australia, according to Jovan Ruzic, secretary of Yugo film producing society.

UFA's Wiesbaden Studios Sold

Wiesbaden, July 31.

Last of the UFA monopoly of film production, distribution and exhibition has gone under the auctioneer's block, with the sale here of the UFA film production studios "Unter den Eichen" (Under the Oaks) to a group comprised of Taunus Films and Mosaic Films. (Mosaic was one of the unsuccessful bidders for the recently-sold UFA production center at Berlin and UFA theatre chain headquartered at Dusseldorf).

One of the stumbling blocks to other buyers in the Welsbaden enterprise was that Taunus had earlier purchased from the City of Wiesbaden the ground on which the studio is located, leaving only the physical properties of the studios for sale. The fact that Taunus owned the ground prevented heavy bidding from competitors, uninterested in the buildings alone.

The City of Wiesbaden and the UFA Liquidation Board has announced that terms for both the ground and buildings have now been worked out with Taunus and Mosaic.

While the Wiesbaden property is smaller than that of either UFA Bavaria or UFA Berlin studios, it is considered significant in film circles here that the government of the state of Hesse, in which Wiesbaden is located, has been offering financial aid and loans to producers using the Wiesbaden studios, thus giving the spot a competitive angle vis-a-vis the larger studios.

The studios in Wiesbaden are well known to Americans, N. Peter Rathvon having filmed the Joseph Cotten-Eva Bartok starrer, "Special Delivery," there for Columbia release last year. Zsa Zsa Gabor also worked there last year in the German film, "Ball of Nations," and American director Johannes Brahm having used the site in filming "The Golden Pest" for Allianz release last year.

UFA Berlin's First Program

Frankfurt, July 31.

The strong new group which has recently purchased the UFA studios in Tempelhof-Berlin has just announced its first production schedule and given a definite answer as to who will head the various branches of the organization.

Herbert Tischendorf is overall manager, with Karl Emil Schulte as director of the UFA theatre chain and Kurt Hahne as director of production at the UFA studios. Helmut Meyer and Heinz Zimmermann are on the board of directors.

The first production program, for the 1957-58 season, will include 18 German films to be made at the Berlin studios. The group is also actively seeking foreign interests who will produce films there.

Tempest Over Italian Nat'l Dance Academy; Seek to Save Ballet

Rome, July 31.

A violent controversy has upset the usually quiet Italian ballet world by hitting the front pages. A strongly worded letter signed by over 80 personalities in the fields of ballet, theatre, films and the arts in general has been addressed to Italian Minister of Education Rossi, denouncing the Italian National Dance Academy and its directress, Jia Ruskaja, for its monopolistic methods and many other claimed faults.

Principal objection voiced in the collective "plea to save Italian Ballet" is that by a fluke of law, Miss Ruskaja has the right to approve or not every dance teacher in the country, thus controlling the sector, since her dance academy is the only one of its kind in existence in this country. Letter further criticizes her methods of teaching, noting that since its creation (in 1940) no member of the Academy has ever entered the professional ranks in any form whatsoever. Nor are males admitted to the Academy's dance classes.

According to the petition, Miss Ruskaja's methods are also unconstitutional, in that by presiding over a committee charged with handing out permits for private dance instructions, she virtually controls that sector as well. Thus she deprives citizens of their rights to freedom of instruction under the Italian constitution.

Beatty Again at Venice Fest

ome, Aug. 1.

Official U. S. rep at the upcoming Venice Documentary and Children's Film Fetes (Aug. 16-25) is Joseph Beatty, who held the same post last year during the fall event.

List of Yank documentaries participating has not yet been announced. Known that, among many others, Soviet Russia is entered in both the doc fete and the moppet event, with 17 pix in the former and two entries in the latter event.

Taplinger, Aide of Banker Semenenko, Heads Warner Bros. Ad-Publicity

Robert S. Taplinger, who since the war has been primarily active in the public relations field, last week was elected vicepresident in charge of advertising and public relations for Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.

The Warner board handed him a six-year contract with a mutual option to cancel at the end of three years. He starts on the job Oct. 1, but the contract runs as of Sept. 1. Taplinger takes over the position held for years by the late Mort Blumenstock.

For the past seven years, Taplinger has been running his own press agency, and the contract allows him to continue to share in the agency's profits. Plan is to merge it with another outfit and to continue operating. Taplinger said he had been assured that many of his current clients would continue with the merged setup.

In his veepcy, Taplinger also will be eligible for the stock option "incentive" plan which WB is working out for its execs. Price at which they'll be able to pick up the shares hasn't been determined as yet.

At Warners, Gil Golden will continue as advertising manager and also will function as exec assistant to Taplinger. Larry Golob becomes national publicity director and Charles S. Steinberg is upped from assistant eastern publicity director to take the full title. William Hendricks heads the publicity dept. at the studio.

Taplinger said it was his plan to coordinate foreign publicity much closer with the domestic setup. He left Saturday (4) for a threeweek trip to Europe on behalf of his agency.

Golden is to maintain closer relations in the future with Ben Kalmenson exec. v.p., on company policy.

Taplinger, whose appointment was rumored for some time, is a friend and longtime associate of Serge Semenenko, the WB board chairman, whose group bought control of Warners from the Warner brothers. Harry and Albert Warner now are no longer active in the company but continue on the board.

No newcomer to the Warner setup, Taplinger served as studio publicity chief for four years, from 1937 through 1940. In his current position, he will devote fulltime to the job, operating from New York headquarters.

Taplinger was in radio very early, joining Columbia when, in 1928, William S. Paley assumed the web's presidency. In 1935, he opened his own publicity office which was absorbed by WB two years later when Taplinger went with the studio. Subsequently, Taplinger became exec assistant to Harry Cohn at Columbia Pictures and a v.p. for Walter Wanger and Enterprise Productions.

During World War II he served as an officer in the U. S. Navy for the Industrial Incentive Division and later for the motion picture services, which he helped organize.

N. Y. Doubts

as long as the scheme is voluntary, they can withdraw from it, as can any of the other trade groups. Making the Eady Fund statutory would leave the Americans no choice but to participate, come what may, and is seen depriving them of a good "talking point" in the future.

The other aspect of the Thorneycroft plan that has U. S. reps puzzled is his failure to refer to the controversy whipped by in part by John Davis of the Rank Organization, i.e., when is a British picture really a British picture, and can a film with American money in it qualify as a quota entry, enjoying export benefits and Eady contributions.

It's noted with interest in N. Y. that Thorneycroft spoke before having on hand the report from the National Film Finance Corp. In the light of this, it's thought unlikely that there will be any drastic changes in the definition of the pictures eligible under the Quota Act.

HAAS RETIREMENT CUES CIRCUIT SHIFTS

Kansas City, Aug. 7.

Edd Haas, veteran Fox Midwest Theatres executive, is retiring after 25 years with the circuit, and a revamping of the circuit's theatres from five districts into four is resulting.

Haas will be guested at a luncheon by the home office gang here Aug. 20, and is going to make his home in Chipita Park, Colo., where he has built a new residence. He began with the circuit as city manager at Hutchinson, Kans., and then went to Wichita as city manager.

New alignment will have Leon Robertson heading District One, as he does now, but gaining some of Haas' former charges. District One heretofore has been the Kansas City metropolitan area houses.

District Two will be headed by Jim Long, who will have part of his old District Five (which is eliminated as such) and part of the Haas district. Fred Soutter continues to head District Three, the Wichita area houses, and John Mainardi the St. Louis area, District Four.

Allied Extends New Bid To Toppers

Allied invite for a toplevel conference on industry problems has been received by the film companies. Letter was signed by Rube Shor, Allied president. It cited the Senate Small Business Committee's call for more cooperation as the basis for the move.

The committee's report, issued recently, sympathized with the plight of the exhibitors but on the whole did not sustain their charges vs. distribution. Specifically, the Senate unit refused to go along with the Allied contention that arbitration should include film rentals.

Italo Gov't Hosting Frisco Film Festival

San Francisco, Aug. 7.

An Italian film festival will be held here Sept. 4. Showing of six, or possibly seven, pictures will be an integral part of Festival which the Italian Government is "sponsoring" in Frisco.

In charge of the motion picture segment of the celebration is Irving M. Levin, divisional director of San Francisco Theatres.

Levin will lead off the festival with "La Strada," a Venice prize winner, and then plans to bring in "Scandal in Sorrento," "Neapolitan Carousel," "Lost Continent" and "Sixth Continent" on successive nights. He hopes to exhibit "Gold of Naples" and "Il Ferrovier" ("The Railroad Man,") too.

All films will be shown in the chain's 1,500-seat Alexandria, a neighborhood house. Plan is to charge $5 a person opening night, $1.50 all other nights except the last night, which will be $2.50.

Commonweal Deplores Legion of Decency Act' Of Political Opinion

The Commonweal, opinion weekly edited by Catholic laymen, has taken a stand against the National Legion of Decency over the latter's stated objections to "Storm Center," Columbia release. While at times critical of the Legion's decision in past, the mag has defended its right to exist effectively, just as any organization, religious or otherwise, might index films on the basis of moral content.

Commonweal now sees the Legion "moved into new territory"—that is, judging a picture on the basis of the political angles. "Center" concerns a librarian's refusal to remove a Communist book.

"It is regrettable," Commonweal stated, "that the Legion of Decency has seen fit to take an action that exceeds the function it had previously assigned to itself. In order to be effective it must act responsibly within the limitations it has set itself. In making a political judgment of 'Storm Center,' the Legion has grievously failed to do this."

Jap Producer Nagata Very Frank

In States to Wrap Up VistaVision Deal—'I Make 10 Good Ones and 42 Quickies Annually'

Masaichi Nagata, leading figure in the Japanese film industry, feels his pictures have done "very well" at the American boxoffice and have had the important side effect of building better international understanding and goodwill. Relatively few Yanks knew much about the Nippon state prior to the exhibition in the United States of his "Rochomon," "Gate of Hell" and "Ugetsu," according to the producer, who's also head of Daiei Studios, Tokyo, which is the country's top production-distribution-exhibition outfit.

In New York this week, Nagata, speaking through an interpreter, said his visit has the dual purpose of ascertaining reaction to his product and to set up a deal for use of the Paramount-fostered VistaVision. While the first three of his features have had gratifying results, it's too early to tell about his next two, "Phantom Horse" and "Golden Demon." Edward Harrison is his distributor.

The arrangements for V'-Vision is about wrapped up—Nagata has three technicians in Hollywood studying the technique—and he plans to shoot one film in the process this year. Film-maker stated he prefers the Par system because Japanese exhibitors using it need not modify their theatres beyond using a wide angle projection lens.

Speaking with a frankness that would make most Hollywoodites squirm, Nagata reported he plans an output of 52 productions within the next year, comprising "10 good ones and the rest quickies."

One of the biggest American films to play Japan has been "Living Desert" with a gross of $750,000, said the visitor. The Daiei outfit handles distribution for Walt Disney as well as other U.S. producers.

As for Japan's imports, Nagata said he's hopeful his country's economic conditions will permit the removal of all quota restrictions by 1959. At present, Yanks send 122 major and 20 independent features into the country annually.

Imports

they're the type that lends itself to lip sync.

Another takes in the group of pictures, sometimes made with American coin, which contains a conscious pitch for the U.S., i.e. one or more American stars, a Hollywood director, etc.

"The one thing that must be avoided is the attempt to sit on two chairs at the same time," was one comment. "There really can be two kinds of imports, one made with U.S. consumption in mind and the other made primarily for the native audience. This latter type of film could be very appealing, particularly for the art houses, but it isn't likely to get wide distribution. The fatal mistake comes in the attempt to compromise by introducing the American element in a conscious attempt to 'pep up' a picture for the U.S. by simply using an American director or scripter. This works superficially, but the result usually pleases nobody."

Originals: 51.8% Of Total Features

Purchase of originals, to be used as the basis of major productions, has dropped to a record low in recent months, story department heads in New York declare.

At the same time, they maintain, the companies are as eager as ever for good originals and would gladly buy them if the quality merited the purchase.

Hitch, of course, is the producers' desire for "pre-sold" properties, i.e. books, plays, etc. in which an advance interest has already been created. It also seems to be true that many of the writers who once aimed at the studios now are busy turning out tv scripts.

Figures put out by the Motion Picture Assn. of America show the steady decline of the original. In 1955, 158 films were released that were based on original scripts. By comparison, in 1950, the number was 315. Whereas, in 1955, the percentage of originals to the total was 51.8% (a record low), in 1950 it stood at 73.4%. It's dropped further in 1956.

Scripters who come up with a usable original stand a good chance of earning additional coin via the paperback editions, with several publishing houses specializing in this method. "Johnny Concho" got that treatment, and so is "Anastasia."

Senate Report To Hurt, Sez Berger

Minneapolis, Aug. 7.

Bennie Berger, chairman of Allied's emergency defense committee which waged the unsuccessful fight to get the U. S. Senate Small Business subcommittee to recommend federal regulation of film rentals legislation, predicts that the "very discouraging" report "will accelerate the closing of theatres."

He said "many exhibitors have been hanging on in hopes that the committee would come through with a definite recommendation that would immediately help them and its failure to do so will result in tossing in of sponges."

Berger pointed out that the only good thing that has come out of the hearing, as far as exhibitors are concerned, is that the committee urges distributors call an industry conference to the end "where all product will be made available to all theatres on an ability to pay basis."

In a letter to U. S. Senator H. H. Humphrey of Minnesota, the committee chairman whom Berger induced to hold the hearing, Berger expressed his appreciation, but pointed out that "while I am positive you meant well in your effort to help theatreowners in their present plight, the report was not too encouraging for the theatres."

Theatres Argue Staff Mostly Part-Timers and Wage Boost Unjustified

Minneapolis, Aug. 7.

After hearing a number of exhibitor witnesses testify that their cashiers and ushers are part-time workers supplementing their incomes or earning pin money while residing at home and that the proposed $1 per hour minimum pay would work a financial hardship on them, the Minnesota state industrial commission has taken the matter under advisement.

The commission gave S. D. Kane and Mandt Torrison, counsel representing North Central Allied and United Paramount Theatres here, respectively, 30 days to submit briefs. It will study these briefs before making a decision.

Witnesses included Charles Winchell, U.P. president-general manager here, and five independent theatreowners from various parts of Minnesota.

The Minnesota wage advisory board has recommended the $1 minimum wage. NCA has conducted a vigorous fight against the proposal. Most theatres pay their employees from 50 to 65c an hour and NCA contends that the majority of these cannot shoulder any additional financial burdens now.

"The wage advisory board has drawn up a 'straw' woman as a standard criterion," Kane pointed out to the commission. "She's a single woman living alone in a rented room and eating three meals a day and entirely dependent on her income from her services.

"But no such woman is employed in theatres. Employees, instead, are usually high school students living at home and supplementing their allowances or obtaining pin money from this employment."

Shakespeare Town's No-Prize Film Fest

By GERALD PRATLEY

Stratford, Aug. 7.

This year's Stratford (Ontario) Shakespearean Festival has an afternoon companion in a modest non-competitive film "festival." Opening with Welles' "Citizen Kane," it runs four days a week for a month, until Aug. 16. The films are shown in the afternoons only at the Avon Theatre in downtown Stratford. Admission is 50c.

"Kane" (its first reissue showing in Canada) was followed by the Canadian premiere of the Spanish picture, "Marcelino Pan Y Vino." Other new pictures include Metro's "Invitation to the Dance," "Romeo and Juliet" and "The Life of Private Brovkin" (USSR), and "Living" from Japan. "Umberto D" was scheduled but withdrawn later with the excuse that it was unavailable.

Other films slated that have not been seen commercially here include "On the Twelfth Day," "Paris 1900," "Berliner Ballade," "Il Est Minuit, Dr. Schwitzer" and "Leonardo Da Vinci."

The remainder of the program is made up of film society material including Dreyer's "Passion of Jean D'Arc," Flaherty's "Louisiana Story," Pabst's "Kameradschaft," and Sucksdorff's "A Divided World" and "Rhythm of a City."

Short subjects include Norman McLaren's "Rhythmatic" (first showing) and the NFB's "Jolifou Inn" and "The Shepherd."

The program of August 6 will be devoted to excerpts from films given awards in this year's Canadian Film Awards competition, and Maurice Evans is expected to announce the winning films and present certificates to their producers.

In the program covering the entire Festival there is note about the film festival saying "The aims of this, the first Film Festival to be held in Stratford, are briefly to show fine films old and new which have not had general distribution in Canada . . . it is our hope that the film shown this summer will enlarge the audiences which film societies and specialized cinemas have created." It concludes with "the earnest wish that a Canadian Film Festival of international repute may develop in Canada."

More Fan Gripes on Poor Theatre Projection and Sloppy Management

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Paul Caster's letter in VARIETY has spoken wisely, not only for himself and for me, but for the millions of former regular moviegoers who have, in recent years, forsaken in disgust the neighborhood houses. His reasons require few additions; they are thorough and precise and honest.

I remember the afternoon I subwayed to the 72d Street Trans-Lux to see the Champions in "Jupiter's Darling." Banners suspended from the marquee of the theatre proclaimed CinemaScope! I arrived, by habit, a few minutes before the feature began. When it began most of the film titles and credits were illegible: the first and last few words of each line were either off-screen or not projected within the narrow limitations of the screen. Obviously the film was not an honest CinemaScope exhibition. I tolerated the mutilation until the Champions' first dance routine, until Marge and Gower, alternately and together, disappeared beyond the side edges with a rapidity that was ridiculous. Then I walked out. En route to the street I reminded the manager (or an antagonizing appointed representative) that the theatre was advertising a film process that was not being exhibited. I was indifferently advised that "you tourists better stick to Broadway."

Half an hour later I called Metro's New York office and reported the incident. I was informed that Metro has no control over the exhibition of their films. I called the office of VARIETY and discussed the incident with a reporter.

I remember another afternoon at the neighborhood Loew's. I arrived, as usual, some minutes before the advertised CinemaScope feature was to be shown. I was pleased with the dimensions of the new wide-screen used for the secondary B feature. Then the feature for which I had been waiting appeared on an absurdly modified screen: the height was reduced, the width unchanged. I haven't been to my neighborhood Loew's since that afternoon.

I remember many other instances in neighborhood and out-of-the-neighborhood theatres when similar presentations were offered. Excepting the Waverly Theatre in the Village, there has not been a single theatre that has exhibited CinemaScope films in proper perspective. In every instance, except the aforementioned Waverly, much of the action is lost upon the narrow screens. In all cases, however, films are prominently advertised in newspaper and marquee as CinemaScope productions.

There are five theatres on Broadway (to my knowledge and experience), five theatres of national reputation and unquestionable merit, that are forced, by building limitations and other imperfections as dated as the horse-and-buggy, to display shortened CinemaScope presentations. I remember "East of Eden"; that one, I viewed a second time at the Waverly in order to see the complete film as Mr. Kazan must have intended. And I vividly recall others; "odigal S" and "len of Tro" and "e Conquer," not to forget that magnificent "nd of the Phara" with ck Hawkin and lovely on Colli.

Perhaps I expect too much. Perhaps I should best forget about misleading advertising being a criminal offense. Perhaps I should learn forgiveness. Perhaps I should stick to tv as Mr. Caster has advised. I'm quite a glutton for punishment; I still go to the movies. But I have become more selective in choosing the theatres I attend; I have become happily resigned to attending foreign films of pre-CinemaScopic proportions in the numerous art theatres scattered about Manhattan. The price may not always be right but the films always are. I suppose I'm old-fashioned in expecting shirts advertised as non-shrinkable to not shrink, in wanting to wear in the shower a wristwatch advertised as waterproof, in hoping to see CinemaScope when it has been touted as such.

And, like Mr. Caster, I early await the Columbia and RKO and Warner backlog of films on TV. I am more eager, however, than Mr. Caster; I also await the redesign of our tv screens to permit the showing of those CinemaScope features I have, for quite obvious reasons, never seen. W. R. Sweigart.

Can't Fool the Public

Bronx, N. Y.

Editor VARIETY:

Paul Caster's letter in your Aug. 1 issue really hit the nail on the noggin re shoddy theatre management these days. And he is so right when he says that 3-D was scuttled by lazy projectionists. I remember going to Loew's Spooner to see "House of Wax." The projectors were completely out of synchronization. At one point, one projector broke down, and the other continued to show its print on the screen. The 3-D illusion was not only shattered, but everybody got a headache, thinking it was "the glasses" that did it. When I complained to the manager, I was shrugged off as some kind of "nut." 3-D was a wonderful process, properly projected, for my money the only real illusion of depth seen on the screen.

Having killed off 3-D, the exhibitors settled for second best: CinemaScope . . . The average person cannot tell whether a picture is or isn't in VistaVision.

Even CinemaScope is not properly presented in some theatres. Somehow the image never stays in focus. And not all screens are wide enough to accept the 2:55-1 ratio and material is cut off at the sides. And of course, stereophonic sound is a thing of the past. 'Smatter, showmen, was this too much work, too?

Years ago, managers really had to work when vaudeville was in its heyday. Then, they had 5 to 8 acts to get on, actors and musicians to deal with, curtails, lights, etc. Now they can't seem able to frame the screen properly when CinemaScope come on, leaving an annoying strip of dark gray on the sides or at the top.

Bet you exhibitors didn't think the average moviegoer notices these things, eh?

Maurice Fischer.

Jack L. Warner: 'Good Pictures Still Cure-All'

Jack L. Warner, in his first "policy" statement since taking over the presidency of Warners, this week revived the old axiom that there's nothing wrong with the picture business—and specifically with Warners—that good pictures wouldn't cure.

"No blueprint, no industry-wide plan, no committee report can take the place of the basic axiom that nothing succeeds like a successful motion picture," Warner said in a statement.

Future of Warner Bros., he pronounced, was "keynoted by the two most essential factors for success in this or any other business—strength and courage." Enlarging on that point, Warner said "If all the man-hours spent in fear and trembling over the fate of the industry by too many motion picture people were devoted to a strong and courageous effort in the cause of good picture making, this industry would far exceed any peak it has ever achieved."

Warners, he stated, with its foundation "more solid than ever before," intended to "go forward and live up to our responsibility and our obligations as a motion picture producing and distributing company and as a public-spirited institution." Company was entering on a new phase in its career, he declared.

While the statement was coupled with a rundown of upcoming Warner pix, Warner never mentioned his company's recent $21,000,000 sale of 750 feature pictures to television, which are being shown on the air now in competition with the theatres.

Among the upcoming WB films listed were "Giant," "The Bad Seed," "Spirit of St. Louis," "Toward the Unknown" and "The Old Man and the Sea," along with "The Sleeping Prince," the Marilyn Monroe picture, and Elia Kazan's "Baby Doll" and "A Face in the Crowd."

Australian Exhibs' Stiff Upper Lip As Television Preems in November

Advent of television in Australia in November has exhibitors there worried, but determined to take the new medium in their stride are two prize-winning managers of Norman B. Rydge's Greater Union Theatres. They are Thomas R. King, manager of the Capitol Theatre, a 3,000-seater in Sydney; and Robert Watts, manager of the Odeon, an 1,198-seater in Penshurst, a Sydney suburb.

Both King and Watts, who left New York Monday (23) after a five-day stay, are on an all expense paid- round-the-world plane tour which they captured for topping a six-months' GUT business building competition. Of GUT's some 160 theatres, 62 houses participated in the contest that's been an annual event since Rydge joined GUT about 18 years ago.

Way the contest is set up, incidentally, has a manager "competing against himself" and not against his counterparts in other houses. "The general idea," the visiting duo explained, "is to beat last year's figure. Among other things the contest is based on total admissions, exploitation, publicity, theatre management, projection, cleanliness and service rendered to patrons. Points are allocated by the GUT head office during frequent inspections."

Match, which covered the 26-week period from Oct., 1955 through March, 1956, was held in two divisions. One embraced GUT's 40 city theatres while the other 22 comprised suburban and rural houses. This year, for the first time in the history of the event, a world tour went to the winners. King and Watts left Sydney July 2 and returned there Saturday (4). Their itinerary gave them Rome and Paris stopovers plus 12 days in London, where they saw tv the first time.

"Television," admitted Watts, "makes me a little nervous." His observation came during a press luncheon hosted for the visitors in New York recently by Capt. Harold Auten, Rydge's U. S. rep. Both Watts and King feel that video's initial impact in Aussie may be heavy due to the novelty, but when that wears off the strength of the medium will depend upon what's on its screen—much as it is in the U. S. and Britain.

Meantime, Australian business is fine. The champ managers attributed this not only to good product but also to "aggressive salesmanship" on the part of theatre staffers. What may be an important factor in the healthy Aussie b.o. is GUT's policy of giving its managers a free hand in operation of their respective sites. "I look upon the Capitol as my theatre," King emphasized.

Constant showmanship and a live wire attitude were the primary reasons, it was intimated, why they nabbed top honors in the 26-week competition. At New York—the halfway mark in their global junket—the pair said on the basis of other theatres they'd seen on the trip so far Australia appears to have the lowest admission scale. Tariff at Sydney's Capitol, for example, ranges from as low as 11c in the morning to upwards of 42c in the evening.

King and Watts covered Washington and Chicago, then followed with six days in Los Angeles. They planed back to Sydney via a brief stopover in Honolulu.

'Encore Night' Idea

San Antonio, Aug. 7.

The Josephine Theatre operated here by Tom Sumners Theatres, has instituted an "Encore Night" policy. On the closing day of each week's attraction, a popular pic of past years will be added to the bill for a single showing only. This will be around 8 p.m., enabling patrons to see the regular attraction either before or after the added attraction.

How to Catch A Theatre Burglar

Detroit, Aug. 7.

An epidemic of theatre burglaries in the Detroit area has caused Allied Theatres of Michigan to issue a warning and some advice to members. Most of the recent burglaries follow a set pattern—there is no evidence of break-in, but the safes, offices, concessions and vending machines are wrecked and looted.

Allied officials believe that entry to the theatres is made in the following manner: The burglar purchases a ticket to the late show. While the last feature is showing and the auditorium is unattended, he attaches a thin, flexible wire to the panic bar on one of the exit doors. He then slips the other end of the wire between or underneath the exit door to the outside. He leaves the theatre through the front door. After the theatre is closed for the night, he returns to the "fixed" door, pulls the protruding wire which operates the panic bar and opens the door.

Allied suggests that any member finding the wired panic door leave it alone, call police and trap the burglar as he enters.

Assoc. British Shows Halt in Biz Decline

London, Aug. 7.

Since the financial report was published a few weeks ago, the up-to-date situation of the Associated British Pictures Corp. shows a check in the sharp downward trend in attendances, receipts and profits. Announcing this at the 29th ABPC annual meeting on Aug. 1, Sir Philip Warter, chairman, said: "This should help to stabilize the position until the long-awaited reduction of admission duty becomes a reality."

Sir Philip revealed that ABPC's commercial tv subsidiary, ABC-TV, was making solid progress and advance ad bookings indicated the tremendous confidence in the medium.

Mack Sennett Settles

Washington, Aug. 7.

A tax deficiency claim, based mainly on income from the sale of his life story, is being settled by Mack Sennett for $500, according to Federal tax records. The Internal Revenue Service claimed $6,817 in back taxes for 1949 and 1950.

The producer of old time comedy shorts fought the Government's claim in the U. S. Court and won.

Actors' Egoes Too Often Obstruct Success—Carey

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

It may come as a great shock to some proponents of the "art is all" school, but Columbia contract player Phil Carey takes a dim view of thesps who feel they know more than the studio about proper casting. Not, he emphasizes, that it hasn't happened that an actor ankled a contract because he felt he was getting the wrong roles—and had benefited as a result of his departure from the studio.

"On the other hand," he insists, "the streets to Hollywood casting offices are paved with the bones of former contract players who have become forgotten men because of the transition."

The trouble with most of these actors, he opines, is that eventually, "the yeast in his ego begins rising. He becomes an expert on every phase of picture making."

For himself, Carey is delighted that he's under contract. "A long time ago," he points out, "I got into the habit of eating three square meals a day. To me it's not so much the type of roles that count—it's the weekly paycheck."

Oddities of The Drive-In Biz

Detroit, Aug. 7.

In discussing ozoners, the Goldberg twins, Irving and Adolph, who operate four drive-ins, and several walk-ins, as well, in the Detroit area, told of these experiences in an interview:

"We've had extra customers smuggled in by way of the trunk of the car, but the most interesting customer is one who is not actually a customer himself. He hates movies, but almost every week he drives his family to one of our drive-ins. He pedals away on a bicycle he carries in his station wagon. Then he returns at closing time to drive his family home."

The twins say ozonites are especially sensitive about the order of showing twin bills. They insist that the main film come second. Sometimes the projectionists forget and start the main event first. When that happens horns blow and lights flash on—and keep right on until a correction is made.

About product, the Goldberg twins say: "A good Western movie goes a long way and color is a star in itself, receiving top billing along with some of Hollywood's biggest names. Color also makes for better outdoor viewing. The drawing room type of conversational drama is least favored."

The twins added: "The drive-in theatre is one of the motion picture industry's best answers to television. In addition to making it possible for a family to have a night out, drive-ins don't cut into regular theatre business because movie going wasn't a habit, usually, with the out-door fan until the ozoners came along."

Britain's Com'l TV Gets a Govt. Slapdown on Coin For Culture

London, Aug. 7.

Dismay has been expressed by Independent Television Authority, controlling body of commercial tv program contractors in Britain, at the government's refusal to make available a $2,100,000-a-year grant set aside under the terms of the 1954 Television Act to pay for cultural programs.

When the Act came into force, it provided for this maximum sum to be laid aside from deductions made by the Treasury from license revenue. Under this arrangement, the Treasury had received $2,800,000 over 16 months. The government's decision, made for economic reasons last Wed. (1), now means that there'll be no money—at least for another year—to meet the costs of serious programs such as operas, concerts, drama, discussions and documentaries: commercial programmers will continue to network popular shows which are predominantly of a light nature.

During the passage of the 1954 Television Bill, the grant was defined as being necessary to keep a proper balance of programs and to secure that ITA should have this money at its disposal so that it could arrange to network programs that were not associated with advertising.

Shortly after the government gave the thumbs-down on Wednesday, ITA pointed out: "This is not a situation which the Authority can accept without feeling that it is failing in one of its main duties, whatever degree of success it may have achieved in the discharge of others . . . independent television, if it is to grow to its proper stature, should not be dependent on advertising revenue alone."

ABC's $1,000,000 Radio Windfall

Daytime network radio is rolling along merrily for fall. Last week it was CBS and $1,500,000 in sunlight biz from Standard Brands. Now ABC Radio has accumulated 10 ayem sponsorships for a $1,000,000 in gross billings (net billings being about $700,000).

Together, the 10 ABC sponsors bought a total of 525 five-minute segments during the 1956-57 season. Four of the bankrollers are new to network radio: Atlantis Sales (French's birdseed) Haysma Co. (hayfever cure); McIlhenny Co. (Tobasco sauce) and Mishawaka Rubber and Woolen Mfg.

Pactees for Don McNeill's "Breakfast Club" on Mondays through Fridays were: Bristol Myers, with regular buys five days a week and with special one-shotters running throughout August and early Sept.; Drackett Co., four segs weekly for Dazy as of Oct. 1, and segs on Wed.-Thurs.-Fri. as of Oct. 1 for Drano and Windex; General Foods, Wednesdays and Fridays as of Aug. 8; Haysma, a segment a day, various times from Aug. 15 through Aug. 31; Mishawaka, two segs weekly, as of April 1, 1957; State Pharmacal, Mondays on Sept. 10.

Renewal in McNeill's 9 to 10 ayemer was Dixie Cup for segs on Monday and Thursday.

New sponsors for "My True Story" 10 to 10:30 a.m. were: Ex-Lax, three segs a week as of Aug. 15; Atlantis, three a week on Sept. 10. McIlhenny becomes first Jack Paar (11:15 to 11:30 a.m.) bankroller with a five-minute seg on Wednesdays and Thursdays as of today (Wed.).

John W. McPherrin, ex-publisher of American mag and veep at Crowell-Collier Publishing, joins NBC-TV as a general program executive. He'll "specialize in long-range editorial planning" for the network's "Today"-"Home"-"Tonight" parlay.

Lux Goes Legit

"Lux Video Theatre," which has stuck to its original premise of Hollywood - adaptations - only with few major departures, is "going legit" for the first time. The NBC-TV program will do "Wayward Saint," a short-lived Broadway play of the 1954-55 season, as its Aug. 30 presentation.

Liam Redmond is coming over from Ireland to recreate his original Broadway role on the tv show. Play was written by Paul Vincent Carroll.

It's Three Down Seven To Go On Ford's 'Jubilee'

Although NBC-TV's major spec entry "Producers' Showcase," has been finalized for next season, with all 10 one-a-month attractions accounted for, CBS-TV counterpart, "Ford Star Jubilee" has hit a snail's pace in progress. Thus far only three shows are definite, with remaining seven-entries only a gleam in the programmers' eyes.

Set thus far are the opening show, based on Cole Porter's career as a tunesmith (Gordon MacRae and Shirley Jones will play leads); the "Wizard of Oz" filmusical which CBS lend-leased from Metro, and Sidney Kingsley's "Men In White." (Kingsley is under exclusive contract to the network with a writer-producer status.)

Arthur Schwartz is committed to three specs but nothin's been formalized as yet, although there's been talk of his doing an updated "Bandwagon" musical and a musical version of "Green Pastures." There have also been discussions with Ed Murrow on the possibility of doing a year-end "Jubilee" spec based on highlights of 1956.

'Amateur Hour' Int'l Status In Live Mex Stanza

Reemack Corp, which packages the "Original Amateur Hour," is going international with a full hour weekly live Mexican version. Deal has been negotiated between Reemack and Emilio Azcarraga, Mexican radio-tv kingpin and owner of five video operations throughout Mexico, whereby a Latino version will originate out of Azcarraga's XEW in Mexico City and be carried on his Mex network of stations.

In place of Ted Mack, who does the weekly show on ABC-TV, there will be a Mex counterpart on the below-the-border show. However, there will be an interchange of talent between the two stanza, with the three-time winners of the ABC stanza to participate in the Mexican edition and vice versa.

Mex show preems on Oct. 1, probably in the 7:30 to 8:30 Sunday evening time (which, incidentally will be the same period on which "Amateur Hour" holds forth on ABC next season, when it is moved up from the current 9 to 10 p.m. Sabbath slot.)

Meanwhile plans are in the works now for kine editions of the Latino show to be used on Goar Mestre's Cuban network and in Venezuela. A Mex sponsor is now being lined up.

Negotiations between Azcarraga and Reemack were consummated by Tyro Productions, the exploitation arm of Reemack.

Fedderson Nixed On Alleged Embezzler; Who Pays the 35G?

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

CBS top level execs in N. Y. have ordered Don Fedderson, producer-owner of the Edgar Bergen quizzer, "Do You Trust Your Wife?" to substitute another episode tonight (7) for the one in which an alleged bank embezzler appeared as a contestant with his wife, Jacqueline Beer, onetime "Miss France." Jim Morgan, director, toiled through most of last night to dub a new program so as not to disturb the show's continuity.

Last Tuesday Fedderson was instructed by CBS in N. Y. to mail a print of the disputed program. Decision to expunge the controversial program, it is said, "came from the top." There had been no objections from the show's two sponsors.

It now remains to be decided who takes the loss of the $35,000 production cost for the half-hour film that can never be shown in this series. Fedderson met his contractual obligation by delivering the print to CBS and the sponsors never benefitted from the show being on the network. This puts it squarely up to CBS, which ordered the show thrown out.

Test Case in Steamboat Springs

Gov. Ed Johnson Defies FCC Cease & Desist Order On Booster Station

Denver, Aug. 7.

Gov. Ed Johnson defied the Federal Communications Commission in ordering a Steamboat Springs (Colo.) station to ignore an FCC order to discontinue use of a booster station so that Steamboat Springs people can enjoy television.

W. R. Webber, who sells television sets in Steamboat Springs, put up the booster power at his own expense, and allowed anyone to use the output without charge. Along came an FCC agent, who ordered the tower use discontinued.

Gov. Johnson, a former U. S. Senator, who once served as chairman of the U. S. Senate Commerce Commission, has created a new "personal communications staff" and has named Webber as its first member. He authorized and directed Webber "to continue to serve the people of Steamboat Springs without charge by boosting 'on channel' the tv signal of KOA-TV, Denver." Johnson said he took this action without consulting with legal authorities or the state public utilities commission. He feels that in this manner Colorado may become the testing ground of "the arbitrary and incomprehensible action of the FCC to deny entertainment and education to people in isolated areas."

Steamboat Springs is unable to get tv signals in the ordinary manner, being ringed with mountains. So Webber put up the booster tower in order to be able to have a market for tv sets. Johnson said the operation "does not interfere electronically or otherwise in any degree with any tv broadcast interstate or intrastate." Johnson also said an agent of the FCC "without regard for the public interest and the cultural and educational needs and rights of the people of Steamboat Springs, ordered

WOR's Huckster Show

Madison Avenue activities will be spotlighted in a new five-minute strip show over WOR, N. Y., headlining Joseph Kaselow, advertising editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and sponsored by Edward Petry & Co., station reps.

The advertising column of the air starts Monday (13) at 7:45 and is expected to feature remote pickups from various agencies once a week. It is believed the first show of its kind in New York and the only one to garner a station rep as a sponsor.

Plymouth Mulls A Midnite Spec As 200G 1-Shot

Plymouth Dealers are mulling the first latenight (11:15 p.m. to 12:45 a.m.) video spectacular in network history for sometime next fall. It's nip and tuck on whether deal will be finalized between N.W. Ayer, agency for the sponsor, and CBS-TV, but if it is, the dealers are expected to spend well over $200,000 for the one-shot.

Blueprint is an outgrowth of a local program, called "New Year In N.Y." done by WCBS-TV (flag of the network) on Jan. 1 of this year. The N.Y. Plymouth dealers conceived of a local one-shot of similar smalltime spec dimensions for themselves in the fall, but during the Ayer-WCBS negotiations other dealer assns. wanted in, so it became a network matter, with the local station figuring heavily in the talks.

The station reported Friday (3) that the deal may be dead, but an Ayer spokesman said that as far as he knew it was still on. Sponsor is said to want more participation by network personnel in carrying the show off.

Stars or date have not been discussed. When show was slated for WCBS-only it was estimated that it would cost N. Y. Plymouth dealers $42,500.

Meantime, the manufacturing arm of Plymouth, according to Ayer, has made a decision to reenter network sponsorship. Agency spokesman indicated that Plymouth is o.o.ing all network availabilities it can find for a "show of major stature." Last year, Plymouth division of Chrysler Corp. spent $4,000,000 in time and talent for twice-weekly sponsorship of "News Caravan" on NBC-TV.

National Spot Radio In 20% Hike for '56

National spot radio, in a six-month overall tabulation, was found to have made a 20% jump over the Jan.-June period of 1955. Data was compiled after the monthly spot report by Price-Waterhouse.

In June, radio spot hit $11,389,000, slightly below May, but 30% over June of 1955. (There was a dropoff in tv spot, too, this spring.) Six month total in radio was $65,647,000, vs. $54,824,000 for the similar period in 1955.

Charles Ayres In NBC Radio Exit

In a move not unexpected, Charles Ayres exited this week as veepee in charge of NBC Radio. While the Ayres departure was known to be on tap (as disclosed in last week's VARIETY), the suddenness with which it came, however, took many an NBCer by surprise.

Ayres joined the network last Nov. 1, moving over from ABC. A successor is expected to be named shortly and for the time being the duties will be divided between Billy Goodheart and Jack Cleary, the former riding herd on the web's new "Bandstand" morning show with Cleary handling the afternoon and nighttime programming rosters. Fred Horton continues in charge of sales. All report to NBC prexy Robert W. Sarnoff.

Shirley Booth Dickers TV 'Torch Bearers'

Shirley Booth has expressed interest in doing a 90-minute tv version of George Kelly's "The Torch Bearers" for CBS.

If it goes on it will be done either on the network's "Ford Star Jubilee" Saturday night series or on "Playhouse 90."

HOW TO LIVE WITHOUT A CAR

TV's 103 Sunday Supplements

There are now 103 Sunday newspapers throughout the country carrying separate tv supplements. That's a situation without parallel in show biz-newspaper relations, unheard of, for example, even in the days when the film industry grabbed the lion's share of entertainment copy.

The newspapers are finding the supplements a revenue bonanza for advertisers who are not only anxious to identify themselves with the tv logs and their readership appeal but are paying premium rates for the privilege.

For the press departments at the networks and ad agencies, it's a headachy turn of events. Color supplements, as a rule, require four to six weeks' advance servicing. But most shows aren't cast that far ahead, with result that the webs all too often lose out on tinted displays. And even if the shows are cast, sets aren't constructed until close to show time. Which often entails an added expense on the part of the press departments in "faking" facsimilies of the sets to be used in order to bring in an appropriate layout.

Last year at this time there were less than 60 Sunday papers carrying separate tv supplements. Since May there have been close to a score of new ones. Last week the Baltimore American joined the ranks as the latest to go "tv supplement." It was jam-packed with business.

Pat Weaver's 'Who, Me?'

Denies Knowledge of Impending NBC Shakeup, Spikes Resignation Rumor

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Those rumors floating around the trade since the efficiency engineering firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton has been "going through" NBC and RCA were ridiculed by Sylvester "Pat" Weaver, NBC board chairman, as "perennial gossip to be expected at this time with no foundation in fact." He said he knew nothing of an impending shakeup of NBC personnel and also spiked the widely circulated report that he was leaving the network.

As for an offer from Crowell-Collier's to head up its tv-radio operation, "it doesn't merit consideration," he said, and added he knows of no other offers assertedly proposed to him. "This week marks my seventh year with NBC and despite the recurring rumors, I am tied to NBC by contract and will continue with the network," he said."

Admittedly here on a selling mission for the tv network, Weaver said he made two presentations to clients in Frisco and two here. He is extremely bullish about color specs and believes that next season will show an increase over last. Only half of three Monday night specs remain unsold.

"The type of programming which I inaugurated when I joined NBC is working out very satisfactorily and will be maintained next season," said Weaver. "When programs are scheduled the same hour the same night every week in the year the medium loses its vitality. You lose audience and publicity value when the viewer know's

Sullivan 19.9; Allen 15.5

Steve Allen, utilizing Judy Holliday, Carmen Cavallero and Louis Jordan on his Sunday (5) NBC-TV'er, came closer to Ed Sullivan on CBS-TV than he ever has before, barring his Elvis Presley victory over the columnist last month.

Allen registered a 15.5 rating and a 34.9 share against Sullivan's 19.9 and 43.2.

'Break the Bank' Breaks Out With $250,000 Format

"Break the Bank" gets a new lease on life, with the Bert Parks-emceed quizzer resurrected from threatened oblivion by the NBC-TV sales forces. (Show has been a Dodge-sponsored ABC-TV entry the past season, but with the auto company deciding to call it quits.) However, in keeping with the give-away craze the ante is being upped and it will now be possible under the new format for three persons to compete for a grand prize of $250,000, giving it the same payoff status as Revlon's "Most Beautiful Girl in the World." "Bank" tees off Oct. 9.

NBC has succeeded in bringing Benrus and Lanolin Plus into the sponsorship picture and they'll jointly sponsor the show in the Tuesday night 10:30 period next season. That's the slot originally reserved for "People Are Funny," but latter has been shifted to Saturday night 7:30.

It now gives Parks a major stake in the NBC radio & tv programming picture since he also emcees the two-hour cross-the-board "Bandstand" show (with an hour of it as a video simulcast).

Camel Returning To NBC-TV Fold

When R. J. Reynolds pulled out of the John Cameron Swayze news show a few weeks back, the prospect of the whole network becoming a dry and arid spot insofar as Camel ciggies was concerned loomed prominently on the NBC-TV horizon.

However, the sales boys mustered their forces over the past week to remedy the conspicuous lack (particularly since Camel is so well entrenched on CBS) and rectified the situation. As result, R. J. Reynolds will now become a co-sponsor with Toni of Art Linkletter's "People Are Funny" stanza when the show shifts to the Saturday 7:30 p.m. period in the fall.

Originally "People" was slated for Tuesday night 10:30, but lacking a sponsor, NBC maneuvered the shift to Saturday, persuaded Toni to pull out of the Perry Como show (with RCA going into the latter) and staked a claim in "People."

AL LEWIS TO HELM GOBEL'S TV SHOW

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Al Lewis, creator of "Our Miss Brooks," has been named producer-director of George Gobel's NBC-TV show succeeding Hal Kanter, who's exiting to "carry out his plans for expanded activities, including other Gobel assignments in tv and feature films." He currently is directing Gobel in "I Married A Woman" at RKO and will also direct him in another film property under negotiation.

Kanter will also help out on specs and one-shots on which Gobel appears. Lewis collabed with Kanter on the Danny Kaye radio show years ago and also worked with him in Armed Forces Radio Service during war.

NETWORKS SRO DESPITE DETOUR

By GEORGE ROSEN

The television networks, notably NBC and CBS, have pulled off the neatest trick of the year—attaining a virtual SRO status for the new season without benefit of approximately $25,000,000 in uncommitted automotive sponsorship coin.

Particularly for NBC, the upcoming season threatened disastrous consequences in terms of Detroit client pullouts, especially since NBC had put such reliance on the auto companies to perpetuate the spec concept of programming. Yet despite such conspicuous defections as the parent General Motors, along with Ford, Pontiac, Plymouth and Chrysler (and in the case of CBS the Buick pullout), the two networks are in as healthy a nighttime position as they can recall.

True, the automotive retreat has taken its toll on the 90-minute spec formula (with Ford cancelling out of the Monday night "Producers' Showcase" and NBC abandoning its Friday night spec programming), yet with the exception of a mere handful of availabilities, NBC and CBS are practically closed up tight. If the auto companies went in, it's a case of moving in on the fringe leftovers.

CBS' major auto coin will come from Ford ("Ford Star Jubilee"), Lincoln-Mercury ("Ed Sullivan Show") and Chrysler ("Climax"), while NBC will still be riding with Oldsmobile (Saturday night specs), Chevrolet (the Dinah Shore and Bob Hope 60-minute spreads) and DeSoto (Groucho Marx). But this is a far cry from the '55-'56 sponsorship picture which saw Detroit & Co. moving into the No. 1 slot among all client categories.

For CBS the situation wasn't too acute, for the network put somewhat less reliance on the automotives than NBC. Today Columbia needs only an alternate-week one-hour sponsor on its forthcoming "Playhouse 90" dramatic series to post the SRO nighttime sign.

NBC, avowedly disturbed over the GM, Pontiac, Plymouth, Chrysler and Ford exodus, nonetheless went to work over the past four weeks and, in a major reshuffling of its programming schedule (and in the face of a Friday night spec retreat), corralled $15,000,000 in new sponsorship coin to counteract the auto breakdown. With the exception of Monday 7:30 to 7:45 and fragments of Sid Caesar and Steve Allen and two "Producers' Showcase" installments, NBC has gone clean, with every indication that pre-September commitments will fall in line.

When "People Are Funny" faced a sponsorless season, NBC persuaded Toni to shift from Perry Como to the Art Linkletter showcase, subsequently installing RCA into the Como segment. On top of that it maneuvered Toni into the Buddy Hackett "Stanley" Monday night show as co-sponsor with Pall Mall, after Helene Curtis checked off because the ciggie outfit objected to

WENDELL CAMPBELL AS GT SALES CHIEF

Appointment of Wendell R. Campbell as national sales manager of General Teleradio's o&o radio and tv stations highlights a number of GT appointments this week.

Oscar Nittel, chief accountant for the WOR division, has been named assistant treasurer of GT, while Clifford A. Frohnhoefer, assistant comptroller of Mutual the past three years, has been shifted to the comptroller's spot at WOR. Both appointments are effective Sept. 1.

Campbell, long associated with CBS and a former v.p. of CBS radio in charge of spot sales, will supervise and coordinate the sales activities of GT's station reps, H-R and Adam Young.

Trade Ponders Tom O'Neil's Future Stake in Mutual in Light of Events; New Affiliation Pact May Be Key

This Crazy Business

Here's an instance of how cumbersome the operation of a rapidly expanding tv network can become:

Bob Wilbor, a commercial film director for N. W. Ayer agency in N. Y., was roused out of a sleep at 3 ayem on July 26, the day the Andrea Doria sank, by an urgent message from the NBC-TV news department. He was told to meet a Coast Guard cutter at an eastside Manhattan dock to head up a network crew covering the disaster.

Wilbor, thinking he was being asked to take on a free-lance job, said "That's fine, how much will I be paid?" "Be paid?" was the querulous reply to Wilbor who quit the "Today" - "Home" - "Tonight" operation some eight months ago for the Ayer post, "Aren't you with NBC?"

Colgate Mad About Those Soaps; Inks $1,500,000 More

Colgate-Palmolive came through yesterday (Tues.) with another $1,500,000 in gross billings for CBS Radio, thereby doubling its original order on the web's daytime radio. C-P has inked for an additional five seven-and-a-half minute units a week in CBS soaps, "Backstage Wife," "Our Gal Sunday" and "Second Mrs. Burton." Sponsor has also taken another five daylight units in the CBS scheme, but the programs in which they will be inserted have not been determined.

Initial C-P order, to start Sept. 3, was for 10 seven-and-a-half minute weekly buys in the three aforementioned soap strips. Hence, the total daytime network buy becomes 20 units. CBS reports that it deducts approximately 25% from gross billings in radio to get at the net billings figure; that would put the C-P buy at a return

CHESEBROUGH-POND'S BUYS 'WB PRESENTS'

Chesebrough-Pond's has taken the alternate-week hour of "Warner Bros. Presents." With that fall vacancy filled, ABC-TV becomes SRO on Tuesday nights.

Sponsor has bought "Conflict," which changes in the 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. spot with General-Electric's "Cheyenne" offerings. Chesebrough, in its first ABC buy in history, recently pacted for alternate sponsorship of "Adventures of Jim Bowie," Fridays at 8 p.m. Other sponsor there is American Chicle.

Overall show title, "WBP" is being eliminated, it seems. "Cheyenne" and "Conflict" will bear those respective titles on alternate weeks, with the Coast major dropping its title identification.

Gleason's Script Stable

Jackie Gleason has pacted his stable of writers, bulk of them being bought from the William Morris Agency. Gleason is under the wing of Music Corp. of America.

On the script staff are Arnold Auerbach, Hal Collins, Terry Ryan, Arnie Sutan and Marvin Worth.

An accumulation of events has the trade trying to figure out whether Mutual will be the first of the radio networks to go out of business.

First of all there's the swiping by NBC of Mutual affils in Cleveland and Fort Wayne to compensate for its Westinghouse defections. Then there was the big Chi blow when WGN decided to go independent. Losses in revenue add further to chairman Thomas O'Neil's problems at MBS.

Then there is the question of how O'Neil himself feels about continuing in network radio. Not too long ago, many industryites had the idea that O'Neil's interest in Mutual was waning, but the network dismissed all reports as erroneous. Yet new light may have been shed on O'Neil's feelings when the network partially lost its affiliation at WAFB, Baton Rouge, La., to ABC—an event that went almost unnoticed when NBC Radio lost its Westinghouse affils.

One of the reasons WAFB is believed to have made a joint ABC-Mutual affiliation is because ABC is in a position to offer some relatively strong network material. But circumstances surrounding the two-ply affiliation, which went into effect last Wednesday (1), suggest something far deeper to onlookers.

The Dwight Martin Story

WAFB is headed by Dwight Martin, who until only a few months ago was a veep at General Teleradio under O'Neil. Considered in the know by most everyone at Mutual and GenTel, Martin was in a position to know the innermost workings of the O'Neil operation. Hence, there is a feeling that in bringing ABC into the WAFB picture Martin was reacting to what may be O'Neil's privately expressed feelings as to the future of radio networking. The ABC tie would serve as a "buffer" against the day that MBS goes out of biz or is sold to new management. (The possibility of O'Neil selling out instead of dropping out is slight, since the most saleable part of the network are the o&o's, which he wants.)

The lowest of the four radio networks in billings, Mutual has been a substantial loss for O'Neil, who also owns RKO Pictures and several lucrative owned-operated stations in both radio and tv.

In 1955, Mutual's gross billings were under $16,000,000. They were nearly $20,500,000 in 1954 and over $23,150,000 in 1953. The $16,000,000, apart from being a heavy loss over previous years, is not considered an indication of the true profit picture, since the gross is in-

Swayze To Exit NBC-TV News Slot

After helming the show for eight years, John Cameron Swayze will exit the NBC-TV News Caravan. It's understood that Chet Huntley will get the nod as Swayze's successor with expectations that he'll go in soon after the political conventions.

For years one of the big coin earners for NBC, particularly during the period when Camel was underwriting the stanza cross-the-board, News Caravan has since fallen on leaner periods. Camel is no longer identified with the program. Plymouth, which co-sponsored last season, is also out. Show is now being sold to a variety of sponsors, including Time, Miles Labs, Sperry Rand and National Carbon.

Also, ratings are harder to come by these days, with the ABC and CBS lineups getting much the better of it.

Birmingham College's On-the-Air TV Stock Company Gets Sponsor

Birmingham, Aug. 7.

Actors, playwrights and technicians with a yen to get into tv have found an outlet here in the second season of a tv summer stock company under the direction of Arnold Powell and Birmingham-Southern College Sunday afternoons for 30 minutes weekly on WBRC-TV. The show is sponsored, too.

This tv summer stock company, called the Birmingham Southern Summer Studio, offers opportunities for civic theatre actors and local playwrights as well as student actors, playwrights and technicians.

The nine-week series which began July 1 and ends Aug. 28 is again under the direction of Dr. Arnold Powell, head of the drama department at Birmingham College. (He studied tv writing under Edward Barry Roberts at Yale several years ago.)

Sponsor for the series is Alabama Blue Cross-Blue Shield, which uses the 1:30 p.m. spot Sundays in the other seasons for a panel show, "What's Your Problem?" The sponsor pays the college for the dramatic show.

Powell, who directs every show, has two scripts in rehearsal at all times with the student class—for college credit—working daytimes on one show and a civic group—recruited incidentally, via tv on the show with a spot announcement about tryouts—rehearsing at night. These two groups present plays on alternate weeks.

The season opened with a student production of a Powell adaptation of the Stephen Crane story, "The Bride Comes to Yellow Sky." First civic production was an adaptation of the Henry James story, "The Tone of Time," written by student William Mobley.

The third play was "Ten Tenor," one-act play in the public domain by Frank Wedekind. The fourth civic show "By Proxy" was an original by Birmingham playwright Ruby Lloyd Apsey. Sunday (29) the student group did "Uncle Billy and the Kids," an original by student James Gillespy.

Future production include "Darlin' Corey," an original based on a folk ballad and written by Powell; "A Day the Weeds Grew," a Civil War story based on a real event concerning a Confederate heroine by Fred Woodress, a public relations consultant; "My Last Duchess," an original play based on the Robert Browning poem by former student Mary Jean Parson, now promotion director for WSGN, Radio; and an untitled original by Stuart Mims, Birmingham-Southern faculty member with one Broadway play to his credit.

Powell does all his rehearsing at the college, then puts up the sets in the WBRC-TV studios the Saturday night before the show. Sound rehearsals are held Sunday mornings with only three hours of camera rehearsal time in the studio before the actual production. Powell has two students on assistantships for technical help.

RANK'S 'MAGIC BOX' AS KRAFT SHOWCASE

For the first time, "Kraft Theatre" will showcase a feature film. Next Wednesday (15), Kraft will presen. "The Magic Box," a J. Arthur Rank production which had been sold to the net by National Telefilm Associates. Telecast will be in color.

The "live" format was scrapped for two reasons. Firstly, NBC feels that with the Democratic Na ional convention underway, the film edited down to an hour is a perfect standby if the show must be yanked because of convention developments Another is that under NTA's deal with NBC, inked about a year ago, the net has until Sept. 15 to telecast the Rank production, before the film accrues back to NTA. Next Wednesday's telecast will get NBC off the hook.

The film, a joint effort by the British film industry, pays tribute to British cinema pioneer William Friese-Greene. Stars featured include Robert Donat, Laurence Olivier and Michael Redgrave.

WBIR-TV Hits the Air

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 7.

Plans for lining up programming for WBIR-TV, new CBS affiliate which goes on the air for the first time Sunday (12), are being firmed up. WBIR-TV's bow will give this East Tennessee city its second VHF station, the other VHFer being WATE-TV, an ABC-NBC affiliatc. WTSK-TV is the UHF outlet here.

Initial showing will highlight a preview of the Democratic national convention in Chicago. More than 50 CBS shows have already been scheduled and at least a dozen local "live" shows are scheduled for the beginning lincup.

Construction has begun on a new 25,000 square foot studio building which is expected to be completed by early 1957. Pres and general manager John Hart estimated that the cost of technical equipment, transmitter, and the projected studio building will run more than $750,000.

Newshawks' Extra Loot Via 'Press Conference,' Look Good With Bosses

The Martha Rountree-Oliver Presbrey NBC-TV package, "Press Conference," with its 125-station hookup, is the largest loop for this sort of program. "Meet The Press" has about 70 stations, of which 20 are sponsored. Corn Products underwrites "Press Conference" nationally. In addition, the show is going on the entire Mutual web with 200 stations committed and others to be added.

Some 16 Washington correspondents comprise the "conference," of which Ruth Montgomery (INS), John O'Donnell (N.Y. News) and Dave Sentner (Hearst) are the permanents. The guest newshawks get $150 a crack and, with 16 the usual quota, the tab there alone is $2,500. The co-packager and femcee, Miss Rountree, tries to call on each at least one time; sometimes there's an encore or footnote question permitted but o herwise it is held down. The D.C. correspondents corps frankly admits it's great "personal ham stuff" and they like it; besides, like with the solons themselves and their impact on their political constitutents, this also makes the newsmen and women "look good with the bosses" back home at their publishers' looking-listening posts. Inciden'ally, it's an open secret that the newsmen's mike-camera deportment governs their encores back for another $150 weekly check.

Incidentally, the Rountree-Presbrey news mag, "Fact," published in Washington, has been permit ed to lapse of late because of the new video venture.

NO COM'L RIDE FOR PITT'S EDUC'L TV'ER

Washington, Aug. 7.

The FCC yesterday (Mon.) turned down a request by educational station WQED in Pittsburgh to telecast the NBC coverage of the political conventions on a commercial basis.

Agency said it "cannot find" that the public interest would be served by allowing a noncommercial station to accept compensation from a network.

Gen. Tire Buys TV 'Salute To Football'

NBC-TV got a sponsor but lost a spec. General Tire & Rubber will do a "Kickoff 1956 Salute to Football" on the network, with Sunday, Sept. 16, set as the date for the live half-hour.

Network originally hoped to launch the new grid season (as a lead-in to its broad NCAA, etc., coverage) with a 90-minute telecast patterned after the spec it did this spring, called "Salute to Baseball." Half-hour sponsorship was arranged by D'Arcy agency.

Orson Welles Seg For 'On Trial' With Jos. Cotten Directing

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

In deals set last week by producer Collier Young of the new NBC-TV "On Trial" series, Orson Welles will star in Joseph Cotten's directorial debut in one stanza, and Ida Lupino will direct another.

Welles-Cotten episode, "The Tichborne Claimant," marks the first professional reunion of the pair since "Citizen Kane" and "The Magnificent Ambersons," pix lensed almost 15 years ago, were made. In addition to his directorial duties, Cotten is the steady host-narrator of the series, in which he, producer Young, and scripters Larry Marcus and Don Mankiewicz are partners under the Fordyce Enterprises banner.

Miss Lupino will direct "The Trial of Mary Surratt," in which Cotten will also star.

Justice Dept. Suit Vs. Philly Stations

Washington, Aug. 7.

Dept. of Justice last week followed up its criminal anti-trust action against Philadelphia radio stations with a similar civil suit to break an alleged conspiracy to fix radio advertising rates.

Suit was filed in the U. S. District Court in Philly against the Philadelphia Radio and Television Broadcasters Assn. and nine member radio stations (WCAU, WIP, WFIL, WHAT, WDAS, WIBG, WJMJ, WPEN and WFLN-FM). Named as a co-conspirator but not as a defendant was Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., which operated KYW until its acquisition by NBC.

The government is seeking to terminate restrictive agreements to maintain published advertising rates, to cancel any "by-law, policy or code" adopted by the Association, and to require the organization to conform with the Sherman Act.

Assistant Attorney General in charge of Anti-Trust Victor R. Hansen said the purpose of the suit is "to restore freedom of action to each of the radio broadcasting concerns involved and insure to purchasers of radio broadcasting time the benefits of free and open competition."

Hubbard's Variations On a 'Monitor' Theme As Twin Cities Hypo

Minneapolis, Aug. 7.

Believing that audio can still cut a considerable swath "if it keeps on its toes" and that tuners-in want something different from time to time, Stan Hubbard, KSTP president-general manager, is launching a new programming concept that comprises a number of novelties for the Twin Cities.

In essence, it's a local variation of NBC's ne'work "Monitor" show which his NBC outlet station also carries.

Featured are tapes, a la "Monitor," made throughout the Twin Cities and surrounding area. These, for example, bring to the air a robbery witnesses' first-hand accounts of the crime, a young man being sworn into the Army and interviews with various performers where the latter are holding forth.

These human interest tapes are being made as things happen and intersperse the music, news and weather report programs throughout the day and night in the "Monitor" manner.

Unique here is the part of Jimmy Valentine's five-mornings-a-week "Party Line" show when the listening audience is privileged to participate in a discussion on any subject, controversial or otherwise. A phone serves as the instrument on which the audience participant can be heard as Valentine interviews him or her or permits the expression of opinions publicly over the air.

In this way, Hubbard points out, KSTP is allowing setowners to air their views on politics, highway safety, such household problems as how to ill "quack grass" and whatnot, with Valentine as the moderator.

G. W. (Johnny) Johnstone, NAM's dir. of radio/tv pr, flew to Chicago Monday (6) to attend Demo convention and will spend two weeks following in San Francisco for GOP conclave. Johnstone hasn't missed a national political convention since 1924—the eventful "24 votes for Underwood"-Alabama delegation "stall" which held up the Demo convention (old Madison Sq. Garden, N.Y.) that year for six weeks. but made Graham McNamee—whom Johnstone as flack for WEAF, N.Y., had touted to his management as a guy with a great future—a household word.

$17,000,000 CONVENTION TAB

Boxscore on The Conventions

Following is the boxscore on major network radio and television coverage of the Democratic and Republican national conventions. The Democrats open in Chicago on August 13, and the Republicans in San Francisco on August 20. However, each net will start covering preliminary events several days before. ABC, CBS, and NBC have each sold packages which include both radio and video coverage.

ABC

Philco Corp. will sponsor for the ABC pickup, the package take coming to about $4,300,000. (Four years ago, the sponsor was Admiral and the price ran about $2,000,000.) John Daly, the Web's vice president for news, special events and public affairs, will head the staff of about 30 broadcasts and news analysists. Overall planning will be handled by v.p. Thomas Velotta. Assisting will be Francis Littlejohn, director of news and public affairs and Donald G. Coe, director of special events. Among the name newsmen will be Quincy Howe, Martin Agronsky, George Sokolsky, Bryson Rash and Edward P. Morgan. There'll be an overall crew of about 300.

CBS

Westinghouse will bankroll the CBS package to the tune of an estimated $5,000,000, roughly twice the 1952 figure by the same sponsor. Sig Mickelson, the web's vice president in charge of news and special events, will supervise convention coverage. He'll be aided by Elmer Lower, director of special projects in news and public affairs; John Day, CBS director of News; Paul Levitan, executive producer. Among the top newsmen and commentators will be Walter Cronkite, pivot man for tv; Robert Trout, anchoring CBS radio; also Edward R. Murrow, Eric Severeid, Charles Collingwood, Ted Koop and Griffing Bancroft.

NBC

RCA, Oldsmobile and Sunbeam are pooling to pay the sponsorship bite of about $5,000,000. In 1952, it cost Philco about $2,750,000. Coverage will be under the supervision of Davidson Taylor, vice president in charge of public affairs; William R. McAndrew, news director, and Barry Wood, director of special events. Anchor team for tv operations will be Bill Henry, Chet Huntley and David Brinkley. Pauline Frederick and Ned Brooks will direct radio. Among top commentators and newsmen will be H. V. Kaltenborn, Morgan Beatty, John Cameron Swayze, Joseph F. McCaffrey, Richard Harkness and Ray Henle. Overall, NBC expects to have nearly 400 in its convention staffs.

MUTUAL

News coverage for Mutual Network will be under Milton Burgh, director of news. The radio web will head its list of newsmen and commentators with Fulton Lewis Jr., Gabriel Heatter, Robert F. Hurleigh, Walter Winchell and Cedric Foster. With technicians and clerical aid, there'll be a staff af about 60 for the conventions. Kohler Co., manufacturers of plumbing—fixtures, will sponsor.

Demos' New Timetable Looms As Body Blow to Webs' Exchequer

Chicago, Aug. 7.

If Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler's pre-convention political soundings prove faulty, television networks are in for some real and expensive headaches.

Butler yesterday (Mon.) ordered a last minute change in the program of the Dems national convention which starts here Monday (13), whereby nominations and balloting for the party's presidential standardbearer won't commence until Thursday (16). This is a day later than originally scheduled.

Butler's assumption is that the conclave will stick to advance the timetable during three warmup days and that only a minimum number of ballots will be needed to pick the Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates in time for the windup Friday night (17), but if his strategy backfires it'll

'H'wood Story' Set For 'Wide World'

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Second show of the new season's "Wide Wide World" on NBC-TV will be "The Hollywood Story," with the entire 90-minute program to originate here. Highlight will be the beautification of Hollywood Blvd. with a parade of film stars planned.

Alan Neuman, who is coordinating the diverse facets of the project and will produce under the executive wing of Barry Wood, has been pledged the cooperation of all major picture studios but due to union restrictions, television cameras will not roam the lots. Basic plan of the show is to present the side of Hollywood that tourists want most to see. Dave Garroway, WWW's emcee, and David Broekman, music director, will move here for the first time away from their N. Y. base

Burnett Exits Mutual

Jack Burnett has resigned as sports director for the Mutual net. Veteran sportcaster Art Gleason is expected to take his place.

Burnett, who had been advised by his doctors to lighten his load, will continue to produce all of Harry Wismer's sports shows over MBS following a five-week leave of absence.

'Every Network For Itself' On Chi Side-Shows

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Like in '52, the gavel-to-gavel television coverage of the floor action of the Democratic presidential convention here next week will be a pooled proposition. Nonetheless, plenty of competitive fireworks are in the making between the three tv networks with their individual strategems to get those exclusive shots of the politicians in action.

The web's newsmen and lensers will, of course, be on their own blanketing the sidebar features of the big show that occur outside the main arena at the International Amphitheatre. And despite the "gentlemens' agreement" on the pooled facilities, the "every network for itself" battle this year will be waged to a much greater extent than prevailed four years ago right on the convention floor.

NBC's Bob Doyle will again be calling the shots for the pool feed from the seven camera locations set up in the International Amphitheatre. When the Democrats raise their curtain next Monday (13), the bulk of the networks' fare will emanate from these vantage points, three on each mezzanine

SPONSORS GOING FOR MOST OF IT

Washington, Aug. 7.

At the national and regional networks and at hundreds of radio and television stations across the land, they're readying the most extensive coverage ever for the two great national political conventions.

The show will be put on the road Aug. 13, when the Democrats meet in Chicago. One week later, in San Francisco, it will be the turn of the Republicans.

In each city, the broadcasters gathered to cover will be more numerous than the delegates, and their coverage will cost far more than the conventions themselves.

The tab on the broadcasters' job will run in the neighborhood of $17,000,000, nearly all of which they hope to recoup from commercial sponsors.

As in 1952, the big emphasis will be on television. TV, they are saying, has just killed the circus. But tv is welcomed as an honored and influential guest at these quadrennial political circuses with their flying banners, their bellowing, ponderous pachyderms on the platform and their political acrobats and peanut vendors.

The national committees bow low in the direction of video, admit they are making every effort to streamline formats for its benefit.

100,000,000 Audience

Here's the reason why:

In 1948, there were 30 stations on the air and fewer than 600,000 sets in operation, mostly along the Atlantic seacoast.

In 1952, there were 108 stations and 17,000,000 receivers in the hands of the public.

For these 1956 conventions, there are 496 commercial television stations in operation, plus 20 more educational tv stations. And there'll be close to 40,000,000 sets in homes and public places. It is believed that over 100,000,000 Americans will watch some part of the shows.

To serve up the political fare to these and the radio audiences, the industry will have an estimated 1,800 men and women working at Chicago. A few less will be in Frisco.

Network crews, aggregating between 1,000 and 1,100 persons, will range from company executives, commentators, reporters and announcers to engineering and traffic personnel, makeup artists, set designers, stenographers and press agents.

About another 750 will be on hand for nearly 300 individual stations and representatives of foreign stations and Governmental networks.

The networks have sold sponsors package deals of full radio and television convention coverage, plus election night coverage for about $14,500,000. If the conventions run their scheduled four days, the webs should break even.

If, on the other hand, either or both should get into a snarl and drag out beyond their allotted times, then the webs will begin to bleed. Since they've sold full coverage packages, the webs will have to dip into their pockets to finance the extended coverage, including costly preemption charges.

The bill for individual station coverage will take care of the remainder of the estimated $17,000,000. Many stations will be able to sell sponsorship for special coverage of their local delegates and other political brass at the conventions.

WINS' Navy Grid Sked

WINS, N. Y., the Elroy McCaw radio indie, will air the 1956 football games of the U. S. Naval Academy. Station will carry eight of the nine-game sked in N. Y., one exception being the Army-Navy game which has been sold via network.

Les Keiter will handle play-by-play from the various stadiums.

Networks One Big Mass Citizens' Caucus, Thanks to Q&A Shows

By FLORENCE LOWE

Washington, Aug. 7.

If it is not best informed, as well as the largest, audience in U. S. history that settles down before its tv receivers next Monday (13) to watch politics in action, it will not be the fault of the networks.

For all three webs have been conducting a well organized, carefully planned program of electronic briefings to keep viewers, and listeners, up to date on the swiftly changing political situation. This mass citizens' caucus will culminate in an 11th hour barrage of tv interviews, panels, news shows, and previews this coming weekend.

Though tv has been building up to next week's climax for months, actual background shows began four weeks ago, with ABC's "Campaign Roundup" and CBS' "Bandwagon '56." Both shows will update viewers on last minute trends around the country next Sunday. In addition, CBS will have a final wrapup in the form of "Convention Preview," devoted to an explanation of the procedures, maneuvers, and agenda to which televiewers will be exposed, plus an outline of the physical arrangements for the weeklong sessions.

CBS must be credited with top honors in the battle for pre-convention "firsts" with the flashy brace of closed circuit telecasts for delegates. These shows bought such a flood of kudos from the select few who saw them that they were partially repeated for the general public in the July 26 installment of "Bandwagon." Success of the closed circuit technique in the CBS stunt, as well as in last Spring's effective "Salute to Eisenhower" closed circuit telecast, undoubtedly presages expanded use in the coming political campaign.

Panel Shows

Greatest single contribution to the concentrated briefing deluging the tv audience has been the growth in number of news panel shows since '52. The three NBC shows which brought politicos to the screen in various forms of give-and-take, are still in existence. To these three—NBC's "American Forum," "Meet the Press," and "Youth Wants to Know," have been added four others, making a total of seven q.&a. shows. Newcomers are ABC's "College Press Conference"; CBS' "Face the Nation"; the syndicated telepix series, "Reporters' Roundup"; and the new Martha Rountree "Press Confer-

NBC Precautions

NBC staffers headed for the Demo convention in Chicago had to be fortified with polio shots on orders of the medical high command. This applied with particular emphasis to parents. CBS Chi staffers are also getting shots.

Chicago is having a big polio breakout.

Lots of Global AM-TV Coverage For Conventions

Washington, Aug. 7.

While the networks are aiming for virtually identical coverage of the two conventions, which will involve the expense of some last-minute flying of equipment from Chicago to San Francisco, there'll be greater flexibility among the independents.

For instance, many southern broadcast stations, like southern newspapers, are more interested in the Democratic convention and will cover that alone. On the other hand, western radio and television stations will take up the slack at the GOP conclave.

No fewer than 50 California radio and tv stations are accredited to San Francisco, as are seven from Oregon and six from Washington State.

Both conventions will be covered by BBC, Canadian Broadcasting Corp., Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, individual stations from Canada, Broadcasting Corp. of Japan, the Northwest German Radio, Radio-Televisione Italiana, and stations in the Virgin Islands and Alaska. A Hawaiian station will cover at Frisco.

Approximately 100 individual television stations will cover one or both shows. Mostly they'll be making 16m films of the local biggies for airmailing back home.

Despite the great number of applicants, the Congressional radio-television galleries, which control the distribution of credentials, had only 368 seats to distribute for the Democratic convention and 350 for the Republicans. The others will be working away from the seating sections.

Similarly, there aren't nearly enough floor passes to go around among those who wish to interview delegations for radio and video. Aside from those assigned to the networks, all the rest will be issued on a rotating basis. Each recipient will have to get his story, get off the convention floor, and return the pass so someone else can use it.

Wisc. Politico Network As An Indie Package

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Special coverage of the Democratic convention for independent midwest stations is being worked out by H. Ellis Saxton, head of his own Milwaukee ad agency, and Chi packager Hal Tate.

Saxton, who supplied a similar package during the '52 conventions, has lined up 30 Wisconsin indies for the state-slanted reports. They'll be piped around Wisconsin via the statewide FM network with the AM'ers taking the off-the-air feeds.

Tate, who'll share Saxton's booth at the International Amphitheatre, has set a deal with WIND to use its Cubs midwest network line during the off hours and is pitching his coverage to the 27 Illinois and the 13 Indiana outlets on the baseball hookup.

600G Engineering Tab for CBS-TV

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Engineering tab alone to CBS-TV for covering the widely seperated GOP and Demo national political conventions this year will reach almost $600,000, over double the 1952 cost. Robert G. "Tommy" Thompson, director of CBS-TV technical operations, disclosed this last week, en route to S.F. for further consultations on GOP coverage problems.

"Originally, we asked the parties for six weeks between conventions, so we could shift the equipment, manpower and telephone facilities from one city to another. Instead, we have to set up a complete duplication, two complete systems. We'll have 80 engineers in each city and CBS will have 325 people, overall, covering the conventions."

That the conventions may overlap is causing headaches among net execs, Thompson admitted. At present, CBS has 30 cameras in Chi, including seven in the networks pool, and plans to move at least some to S.F. for the Republicans, if time permits. However, if overlapping occurs, Columbia will have to scrounge up more cameras from Hollywood, Minne-

Haas Nod on TV Grant Becomes A Red Hot Issue

Washington, Aug. 7.

Attorneys for Queen City Broadcasting Co. (KIRO) are expected to push for an immediate decision by the FCC now that an examiner has upheld his previous recommendation favoring KIRO in the hot contest for channel 7 in Seattle, Wash. It is considered doubtful, however, that final action will be taken before late fall.

Examiner Thomas H. Donahue, in a report last week, cleared Saul Haas, head of Queen City and majority stockholder, of Commie sympathies. A minority interest in the company is held by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The case was remanded to the examiner last March for additional evidence regarding policies of the old Seattle Record of which Haas was editor and co-owner. Among the allegations made were that the newspaper "espoused the cause of Soviet Russia while denouncing American and British imperialism."

The examiner found that while Haas was associated with a newspaper 30 years ago that had "a pro-Russian slant," he has since built a radio station that has made significant contributions to the community and has won awards for public service. When Haas's character is viewed in the whole, Donahue asserted, his newspaper background appears "in a far less ominous light."

The examiner said he was "not unmindful of the serious and far-reaching implications of Communism and the necessity of protecting communication sources from falling into the hands of those who would use them to the detriment of this nation's security." But he asserted he was unable to find "any rational basis" for changing his original recommendation.

The report is subject to arguments before the full Commission before the final decision is issued.

30% of Station Programs Filmed

Washington, Aug. 7.

Member tv stations of the NARTB now devote over 30% of their broadcast schedules to local film originations, according to the 1956 Film Manual distributed last week by the trade organization.

A survey taken by NARTB, the Manual reveals, showed that film programming on an all-station basis increased from an average of nearly 30 hours weekly in 1954 to nearly 33 hours in 1955.

The all-station average of time on the air, according to the Manual, is 104 hours, an increase of five hours and 37 minutes over last year. Time devoted to network programs has increased slightly but local live hours show a decrease.

Survey showed that stations in localities serving the smallest and largest number of tv families have the highest percentage of programming devoted to film. Thus, stations in localities serving up to 100,000 tv families devoted 32½ hours to film and 14½ hours to live shows while those in localities serving 1,000,000 or more tv families devoted 42 hours to film and 23 plus hours to live productions. The lowest use of film was among stations in areas serving 250,000 to 500,000 tv families. These outlets devoted 29 hours to film and 16 hours to live programs.

Heaviest use of film, according to the survey, is on Saturday. Sunday is second.

Manual was compiled and edited by Dan W. Shields, assistant to NARTB veepee for television Thad H. Brown Jr.

Detroit—Robert J. McIntosh, veteran of more than 20 years in broadcasting and since 1954 sales manager of WWJ, has been named manager of the station, it was announced by Edwin K. Wheeler, general manager.

WBBM's Exclusive In Hodge Scandal; 'City Desk' Nixed

Chicago, Aug. 7.

CBS' WBBM and WBBM-TV scored a major coup last week when Illinois Gov. William Stratton accepted veep H. Leslie Atlass' offer to use the stations for a "report to the people" on the million-dollar scandal in the state administration which has ousted state auditor Orville Hodge under a wholesale list of indictments.

The governor's acceptance of the offer to present his side of the case on the Columbia stations last Wednesday night (1) touched off an immediate chain reaction. Herbert C. Paschen, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, quickly requested and received equal time. He'll appear tomorrow night (8) in the same 6 to 6:30 slot.

It also prompted a fast renewal from WNBQ-WMAQ news director Bill Ray of his invite to the chief executive to appear on the NBC station's "City Desk." Latter show is formatted along question and answer lines with a panel of local newsmen grilling the guest.

Ray stressed this point in the telegram he sent to Stratton, repeating the bid he had made three weeks back that the governor sit in on "Desk."

Ray's wire to the governor read: "Inasmuch as you reportedly have accepted an invitation to appear on another Chicago tv station to make a statement without being subject to questions by newspapermen, I wish to renew my invitation to answer the questions of newsmen during our regular 'City Desk' program on Aug. 5. We feel this program performs great public service by giving public officials opportunity to answer unrehearsed questions of newsmen on public issues before the tv cameras."

It's understood this second invite was also turned down because of "conflicting engagements."

Spurt in TV Set Output for 1956

Washington, Aug. 7.

Television receiver production, which got off to a slow start this year, appears to be catching up with the high pace of 1955 output. Turnout for the first six months, according to the Radio-Electronics-Television Manufacturers Assn., exceeded 3,415,000 sets, which is only about 10% less than what the industry produced in the comparable period of last year.

During the first quarter of the year, production each month was substantially below 1955 but the second quarter has shown an increase over the same period of last year. Production during June nearly equalled the record June of 1955. About 14% of current output includes sets with UHF bands.

June retail sales established a record for the month, with 439,362 sets sold over the counter. Sales for the first half of the year totaled 2,868,000 sets compared with 3,203,000 in the same period of 1955.

WPIX's 'Popeye' Snares National Biscuit Coin

"Popeye," SRO weekdays over WPIX, N. Y. indie, has latched on to another sponsor for Saturdays.

Beginning Sept. 4, National Biscuit Co. has bought Saturday participations in "Popeye." The biscuit outfit, as part of the deal, also bought spots in the Tuesday and Thursday segments of "Clubhouse Gang Comedies."

In another sale, Mars, Inc., and Brown Shoe Co. will co-sponsor "Buffalo Bill Jr.," which will be returned to the air at WPIX starting Saturday from 6 to 6:30 p.m.

Albany—Duncan Mounsey, former NBC-TV executive, is new manager of the Schine-owned WPTR. He assumed the post Friday (3), after Leo Rosen resigned. Rosen, veteran radio, television and theatreman, suffered a severe heart attack in June, from which he is recovering but with which he faces a long period of convalescence.

MUSICAL SPECS' SLIPPED DISKS

KIVA No Diva

Washington, Aug. 7.

A protest by a tv station in Yuma, Ariz., against the grant of a second station on grounds that the community (pop. 9,145) cannot support two stations and that both would fold if they tried to compete was turned down in a report yesterday ((Mon.) by an FCC hearing examiner.

The examiner, H. Gifford Irion, held that station KIVA failed to prove that it would be economically injured by the Commission's authorization last January of channel 13 to the Wrather-Alvarez Broadcasting Co., operators of KFMB-TV in San Diego, Calif.

J. D. Wrather Jr., president of the company, is a motion picture produeer. Edward Petry & Co., station reps, hold a 22% interest.

Among the issues on which hearings were held was "whether the advertising potential of the Yuma market is such as may indicate that both stations, the existing and the proposed, will be deleted with the result that the listening public will be left without any tv service at all."

In recommending that the grant be confirmed, examiner Irion held that KIVA failed to disprove a showing made by Wrather-Alvarez that enough sources exist in Yuma for the production of the live programs it proposed. Company has not proposed a specific network affiliation and there was no dispute as to availability of film shows.

Overloading Stations With Pitchmen Quick Way to Oblivion, Sez Bartley

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Stations that overload with commercials will lose their audienee without any need of policing by FCC or any other "traffic cop," in the opinion of FCC Commissioner Robert T. Bartley, who addressed the So. Cal. Broadcasters Assn. at a dinner at Beverly Hills hotel last week. Pitchmen, who misrepresent their wares are made to answer to Federal Trade Commission, he said, although the Commission takes eognizance of these code violations when the offending station comes up for license renewal every three ycars.

"The dialer is the best judge of what is offensive in overemphasis on commercialism," said Bartley. "He can always tune to another station that doesn't stress the hard sell over the entertainment portion of the program." Bartley declined to say what he believes to be a fair radio of advertising and entertainment.

Bartley preferred to "pass" on the subject of toll-tv, saying he would rather not prejudge the controversial issues. He did venture that it would not be "popularity contest" based on public sentiment and that FCC would make its own decision predicated on its own study and the mass of correspondence to be scrutinized. By the end of this year the commissioners will consider all phases of pay-tv, he said, but when asked how long it would take before a decision would be reached, he grinned, "it

Revue Prod. Gets Nod From Schlitz

A new half-hour film drama series goes into the CBS-TV 9:30 to 10 Friday night slot for Schlitz Brewing effective Nov. 1, when the client's contract with Meridian Productions expires. Schlitz is dumping Meridian and is embracing MCA-TV's Revue Productions. (Along with Revue, practically every major production unit in tv was bidding for the Sehlitz nod.)

Move is part of an overall bid by the Milwaukee brewery outfit to strengthen its stake in tv programming. Budget for the show is being hiked considerably and efforts will be made to line up major names a la Revue's "General Electric Theatre" anthology series.

J. Walter Thompson, agency on the Sehlitz account, is expanding its Coast operation and setting up a story department on behalf of the Schlitz entry.

Arriving this week for meetings with Cornwell Jackson, Coast veep of the Thompson agency, will be John Toigo, veepee and director of advertising for Schlitz; Dick Steenberg, formerly with MCA and now ad manager of Schlitz, and Dan Seymour, eastern radio-tv head of Thompson.

Burr Gets 'Mason' Nod

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

CBS-TV's "Perry Mason" will be Raymond Burr, who was inked last week to star in the net's new series. Pilot rolls next month, upon completion of Burr's eurrent feature assignment in Dudley Pictures' "The Fever Tree," presently locationing in Havana.

NBC's $4,000,000 D.C. Plant Geared To TV Tintcasts

Washington, Aug. 7.

Elaborate plans for a $4,000,000 plant here which will include "the nation's first tv station designed and constructed from the ground up specifically for local and network color programming" were announced over the weekend by NBC. Construction of the plant, which will house the network's owned and operated stations WRC and WRC-TV in Washington, is to start in two weks on a seven-acre tract on Nebraska avenue adjacent to the Naval Communication Center.

Robert W. Sarnoff, NBC prexy, said the new facilities are in line with network efforts to spur color development on a national basis. They will make it possible, he said, to bring the Washington scene in color to the whole country and at the same time provide the home audience with local color program-

Tex & Jinx Expansion Cues Herb Sheldon Exit; Features in Morning

Herb Sheldon is being dropped in September from his Monday-thru-Friday 1 to 1:30 p. m. anchorage on WRCA-TV, N. Y., in order to make room for an expansion of the Tex and Jinx McCrary strip. Comedian will also lose his 9 to 10 ayem cross-the-boarder for juves and time will be taken by an hour-long feature film exposure, which Sheldon may host.

Josephine McCarthy, the hausfrau gabber who has been part of the "Sheldon at One" program will be used in other programs, the station has indicated. New Tex & Jinx program, which has been on from 1:30 to 2 p. m., will be seen in the fall from 1 to 2.

The forthcoming feature film strip at 9 a. m. will be an edited rerun of films that are also being shown in the NBC key from 5:30 to 6:45 p. m., it's understood.

RUN AWAY FROM TV SHOW TUNES

Whatever aspirations the tv networks may have had in terms of converting their musical specs into subsequent recording bonanzas for their subsid companies have added up to one of the major flops of the season. A year ago RCA Victor had high hopes of siphoning off a sizable chunk of residual coin from NBC-TV musical specs; ditto for Columbia Records, which had a disk gleam in its eye in its pre-assessment of the CBS-TV "Ford Star Jubilee" musicals.

However, what has subsequently happened—which adds up to practieally nothing—has eaused these two major diskeries to do an about-faee and walk away from them. NBC can't get RCA Victor to touch 'em and the same applies to CBS, with Mitch Miller and the Columbia Records boys, who are usually hot for show albums, preferring them off the musical legiter beltline rather than tv.

Take the case of Arthur Schwartz, for example. He did original scores for both the "High Tor" and "Bell for Adano" specs which appeared on "Ford Star Jubilee." Columbia Records wanted no part of the "Adano" score and in the case of "Tor," in which Bing Crosby starred, only Decca went for an album (with some ill-fated results.)

When NBC-TV presented its "Marco Polo" spec as a Max Liebmann presentation, it got a decisive RCA Victor nix. Col brought out an album but it died. In the case of the NBC-TV "Our Town" spec, which starred Frank Sinatra, RCA Victor either wouldn't or couldn't touch it (since Sinatra is a Capitol reeording artist). Cap ventured forth with an EP but with something less than startling results, although Sinatra's "Love and Marriage" side registered as a elick.

Way back in the days of the first spec — Betty Hutton's ill-fated "Satins and Spurs"—Cap thought it would jump the gun on its rivals by bringing out an album on the show's tunes. It proved to be a bomb. It was the first sour note in the spec-disk alliance.

A number of musical specs are on the '56-'57 roster which, it's figured in advance, could well lend themselves to album exploitation, such as the Kay Starr-Louis Armstrong "The Lord Don't Play Favorites" (which preems the "Produeers' Showcase" roster); the "Jack and the Beanstalk" spec, also slated for "Showcase"; the upcoming Gordon Jenkins "Manhattan Tower" (with Jenkins composing new music for the presentation), etc.

Capitol will do a Jenkins album (he recently switched over from Vik Records) but there are no commitments on the others.

WATV Ups Rate Card

WATV, the Newark-N.Y. video indle, is jacking its ratcs down the line approximately 20%. Increase is to eover the 20th-Fox features to start on the station in 16 times a week showing on Oct. 1.

New card becomes effective on Sept. 1. Class A charge for a single time 60-minute stanza goes from $1,250 to $1,500. Class B goes from $938 to $1,140 and Class C from $625 to $750.

Features will be shown at 7 and 10 p.m. nightly, with added matinee exposures at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. All of these times are encompassed in WATV Class A time. Last card increase at the met station were in July, 1955, at the time its power was inincreased.

The 16 film exposures will be banded under the title "Famous All-Star Movie." Station plans a policy of showing each pic in its entirety, and some of them run in excess of two hours. New feature sked will disrupt the foreign lingo stanzas, which the station has been using with some frequency during the evening hours as well as during the day.

Mid-Continent's 850G Miami Sale Okayed in Face of Doerfer Attack

Washington, Aug. 7.

Sale of radio station WQAM in Miami by the Knight newspaper intcrests (Miami Herald) for $850,000 to Mid-Continent Broadcasting Co. squeczed through the FCC last week by a slim 4-3 margin. Action was taken after the agency received a reply from Mid-Continent to questions raised regarding its "pattern of operation," in which money giveaway shows were involved in its stations in Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis and New Orleans.

Approval of the deal was given with the stipulation that the action "is not to be construed as approving or condemning any particular program or types of programs" carried on Mid-Continent stations. It was further understood that statements made by Mid-Continent in a letter regarding its programs "formed no part of the basis or the consideration upon which a majority of the Commission gave its consent to the transfer."

In a strong dissent to the majority action, Comr. John C. Doerfer charged that the agency, in permitting the transfer, "eschewed any responsibility for requiring well-balanced programming." While expressing "grave doubt" that the Commission has such a responsibility, Doerfer protested that "such responsibility has been sloughed off without a dctermina ion of the extent of our jurisdic ion or lack of it."

The "net effect," he said, is to continue the "confusion" in the minds of the industry, Congress and the public. "It would be much better," he said, "to essay difiniteness, right or wrong, than to continue a state of uneertainty."

In view of the failure of the Commission to indieate what type of programming is not "well bal-

Post Time Buyers

Albany, Aug. 7.

Hudson Valley Broadcasting Co., Inc., operating WCDA-WCDB-TV and WROW, will play host to 125 time buyers from New York at a party arranged for the Saratoga racetrack tomorrow (Wed.).

The time purchasers will arrive at the Albany airport about 11 a.m., in chartered Convair planes; will be taken to the Union Ave. course in busses. They will be flown back to New York in the early evening.

Frank M. Smith, president and Thomas S. Murphy, general manager of the local television and radio stations have made the arrangements. Invitations in the form of a racing program were issued.

'Beautiful Girl's' 250G As Revlon's Entry Vs. 'Lucy'

NBC-TV is embracing the big money quiz formula in two major programming areas in a bid to whittle down the CBS competition. It's not only moving the $100,000-plateaued "Big Surprise" into the Tuesday night at 8 segment as the web's answer to the Phil Silvers show, but has now decided, under Revlon sponsorship auspices, to throw in the "Most Beautiful Girl In the World" package, with its attendant $250,000 prize money, against the still formidable "I Love Lucy" Monday night at 9 competition.

New Revlon show, also out of the ex-Lou Cowan office (now Entertainment Productions, Inc.), gives the cosmetic house a virtual stranglehold on the big loot networks shows, other Revlon entries, of eourse, being the CBS brace of "$64,000 Question" and "$64,000 Challenge."

Installing of "Beautiful Girl" show in the Monday segment eues a Monday programming change for NBC. Originally slated for the period was the half-hour "Impasse" vidfilm series which was acquired by Chesebrough Pond's. Latter, however, has agreed to release its option and instead will shift over to ABC-TV to become a co-sponsor of the Warner Bros.-produeed "Conflict" series on alternate weeks to General-Electric's "Cheyennc," also a WB product.

"Beautiful Girl" tees off Sept. 24. Show offers a potential $250,000 prize for reigning beauty queens based on "intelligence, beauty and talent" and with all sorts of tabulating gimmicks incorporated into the show's format.

WRCA 'Finders Keepers' Creates Traffic Jams, Cops Gotham Headlines

Gotham newspaper coverage has been great—and so seems to be the consternation of the N. Y. Public Library, Grand Central Terminal and Broadway Maintenance Co.—about WRCA radio's giveaway didoe—"Finders Keepers." Deejay Bill Cullen has been giving clues to the whereabouts of a voucher for $1,000 on his ayem N. Y. "Pulse" stanza.

The second $1,000 was found last Thursday (2) by two Brooklyn teenagers in a telephone booth at Grand Central Station. N. Y. Central R. R., which controls the terminal, said that the onslaught of something-for-nothing seekers disrupted traffic there, and the station master had to announce over the loud-speaking system that the

Toni as Alternate Client on 'Stanley'

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Toni has signed to share sponsorship on NBC-TV's Buddy Hackett's "Stanley" situation vehicle with American Tobacco's Pall Mall, thus taking the Helene Curtis cosmetic firm off its contraetual hook on the new series slated for Monday nights at 7:30. Helene Curtis' half interest buy ran into a snag over the insistence on plugging its Stopette deodorant, notwithstanding the eiggie firm's longstanding edict against sharing billings with such products.

Meanwhile, NBC is still at loggerheads with HC over its one-third identity on the current Monday night Ernie Kovac show. Curtis reportedly informed the network it wanted no part of the Kovac display if it couldn't plug Stopette on the upcoming "Stanley" series. While the network agreed to let Curtis out of its contract for "Stanley" if another client could be found, it's standing pat on the contraetual commitments to the Kovac summer show.

WW'S MUTUAL SHOW TO SEABOARD DRUG

Seaboard Drug Co. has taken full sponsorship of the Walter Winchell Sunday news show over the complete Mutual net, beginning Sept. 9. Carlos Franco Associates is the agency.

The contract is for a firm 44 weeks, taking into account Winchell's usual summer eight-week hiatus. Seaboard's Merican, a medicine for arthritis and rheumatism, will be pitched.

Deal represents the first full sponsorship for the Winchell show over the Mutual net. Last season, Trans World Airlines picked up the tab in the top 39 Mutual markets, with the other markets tieing in with local sponsors.

Com'l Competition Forces BBC-TV To Hike Its Budget

London, August 7.

Among adult viewers with tv sets tuned to receive alternative channels, three look in on commercial programs to every two who watch BBC-TV's offerings, admits the British Broadcasting Corp. in its annual report. This is its first sumup since the indie undertaking began networking six months ago.

By the end of March, an estimated 16,000,000 adults were able to view BBC-TV against 3,000,000 who could switch over to indie tv. The report indicates that competition with the commercial web added over $2,800,000 to BBC-TV's operating expenses during the year, partly due to rising costs "but also to the increase in program output to 50 hours a week, and to increased expenditure on programs so as to add to their quality and attractiveness." Fees for artists, performers and sporting events were necessarily increased by this competition. The year's total income of $63,000,000 represented an increase of $4,760,000 on the previous year.

BBC-TV is now available to 95% of the population, adds the report, and by the fall should reach 97%

The need for a second tv program to cater for more selective audiences is unaffected by the advent of indie tv. "Alongside the easier and more popular forms of entertainment, there is the need to cultivate those which have only a minority appeal. A second service is essential if the BBC is to have elbow room to carry on the long-term policy on which its value to the nation depends."

Douglas' 415G Suit Vs. 'Disneyland'

Los Angeles, Aug. 7.

How much privacy does a film star have?

That's the $415,000 question asked by Kirk Douglas in a Superior Court suit filed against Walt Disney and others associated with ABC-TV's "Disneyland" program, on two occasions, showed footage of Douglas and his children riding on a miniature train at Disney's home.

Coincident with filing the action, Douglas asked Screen Actors Guild for its support in his battle. SAG, branding the Disney action "reprehensible," promptly gave its blessings to the lawsuit which seeks to establish the principle that footage of performers cannot be used without their permission and without compensation.

Douglas said he was "enticed" to Disney's home on the pretext that it was a social visit since Disney well knew "plaintiff would never have accepted if it were for the purpose of picture making or other commercial purposes." Footage was lensed during the visit but Douglas had no idea Disney was doing anything more than some amateur photography until the scene showed up on a "Disneyland" program. He protested and the producers agreed to stop using the footage but despite this promise, the scene was telecast once more. He asks $200,000 compensatory damages, $200,000 punitive damages and $15,000 for value of services.

Disney issued a complete denial of Douglas' charges, contending that when the films were taken, Douglas was on hand voluntarily and cooperated cheerfully in staging the sequence and lining up the cameras.

Zenith Profits Down

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Zenith Radio logged a six-month profit of $2,530,824, or $5.14 a share, on sales of $65,370,935. Net for the same period last year was $3,126,061, or $6.35 a share, from sales totaling $71,455,702.

Net for the quarter ended June 30 was $699,659, equal to $1.42 a share, compared with a profit of $1,051,101, equal to $2.14 a share a year ago. Sales were down to $27,455,617 from $31,083,890.

Local 'Blackouts' Snagging ABC's Ballcast Plans

ABC Radio is discovering problems in surveying the prospect of a baseball "Game of the Day" to compete against Mutual's similar format.

Getting rights to broadcast games is no problem. Any of the networks can carry major league play if they pay the fee. But ABC, while it hasn't given up the idea for lost yet, is coming to the opinion that Mutual's very structure makes it a natural to carry "Game." ABC is no natural.

Mutual currently has in excess of 540 stations, most of them in smaller markets where blackouts on radio coverage of either major or minor league play are not in force. ABC, on the other hand, has only 330 stations and, consequently, fewer small non-blackout markets to draw upon.

The size of the Mutual network, though admittedly superfluous in some other respects, permits it to make "Game" a fairly lucrative co-op offering because of the cumulative billings of so many smaller stations (as well as some of the larger ones, when they are not blocked out). ABC has too few non-blackout cities to make a go of "Game" through co-opping. As a result, it is now o.o.ing the prospects of selling "Game" nationally in 1957, and if that doesn't look good ABC will go baseball-less.

The one proviso in all of this is that ABC may find, in weighing the dearth of available baseball markets against the demands of affiliates, that "Game," whether a losing proposition or not, is important in keeping affiliates happy.

Storer Gifts N.H. With TV Station

Concord, N. H., Aug. 7.

The Storer Broadcasting Co., which recently purchased WMUR-TV in Manchester from former Gov. Francis P. Murphy of Nashua, has offered the state of New Hampshire the gift of a television station to be used for educational purposes.

Gov. Lane Dwinell said the offer was made following a recent conference at the State House here, which was attended by George B. Storer, president of the broadcasting firm; Norman A. Gittleson, exec v.p. of WMUR-TV, and the state's chief executive.

According to Gov. Dwinell, Storer offered to donate to the U. of New Hampshire, or the state, a television station including transmitter, antenna, camera and film projection equipment valued at approximately $250,000 for educational purposes, subject to FCC approval of Storer's purchase of WMUR-TV. In addition, the Storer company would furnish the engineering supervision and labor necessary to complete the installation.

Gov. Dwinell said it was a "most generous offer" which "will be deeply appreciated by the university and the people of New Hampshire.

Miles Labs Reverses Self, Buys TV 'Mickey'

In a turnabout, Miles Labs has reportedly inked for 26 weeks on the upcoming season of "Mickey Mouse Club" on ABC-TV. Sponsor who has segment this semester, cancelled for next season, but in the change of mind, is taking a quarter-hour a week on alternate weeks.

Miles inking, through Geoffrey Wade agency, brings the afternoon hour-long strip to 11½ weekly segs sold, out of a possible 20.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Steve Allen Show

Steve Allen should soon attain a degree of consistency—one way or the other. There are many moments during his sessions that would be better off if left undone, and others that indicate the boy is getting there. Sunday's (5) edition over NBC-TV was a prime example with the sketches on the weak side. The prime letdown was the misuse of Judy Holliday in a rib of situation comedies—or was it drama? Whatever, it was, wasn't entirely clear.

Allen continues to call attention to the opposition. Even with his rib of "Wide Wide World" and its conferencier Dave Garroway which included some hilarious bits, Allen exhibited the CBS trademarked eye on the screen as his finale. Maybe such things are too tradey to be appreciated by the lay public. However, his takeoff on his competition's almost trademarked use of military drill teams was a funny bit of business.

The surrounding talent had its moments with Carmen Cavallaro doing a pleasant bit of ivorying, effect of which was heightened by some trick camera angles. Cavallaro provided his usually delicate touch for a pleasing interlude. Tony Bennett also came off well with a trio of tunes that he uses consistently in his nitery turn which included "Sing You Sinners" with a heavy production background.

Louis Jordan, coming live from San Francisco, did okay with his jazz and comedy offerings. However, Jordan, who has a fairly busy act himself, had to fight even a busier background of a street corner roped off to prevent the citizenry from gathering around him.

One of the memorable briefies on this show was the interview with a flier who travelled three times the speed of sound. The words came a long time after his lip movements. Jose.

Alcoa Hour

Save for a bit of over preciousness—basic in the script to begin with—F. Hugh Herbert's "Kiss and Tell" gave a good account of itself on Sunday's (5) "Alcoa Hour" over NBC-TV. The old legiter-plus-film was a lark and a lulu of a vehicle for the now-grown-up Robin Morgan, who it seems only the other day was the mischievous little Dagmar of the "Mama" teleseries. She really hit her mccoy adolescent stride on this Corliss Archer opus-pocus, along with Warren Berlinger as her boyfriend—an expert mugger with a boffo sense of timing and the double-take. Established players from the B'way-H'wood-tele axis pitched in with real pro support, including Jerome Cowan, Polly Rowles, Howard St. John, Lois Bolton, plus contributions from a younger crowd consisting of Marion Randall and John Connell. Herbert Herschman's direction was alert.

William McCleery's adaptation was faithful to the crisp Herbert work although some customers along the cable may have something to spout about the handling of several of the hotter "immorality" aspects of the comedy farce. Philip Barry brought in an okay production. Plenty of laughs in this one. Trau.

Hy Gardner Calling

N. Y. Herald Tribune columnist Hy Gardner has been given a slightly more advantageous Sunday pre-midnight spot, directly following the 11 o'clock news (heretofore "The Continental" broke the sequence) and his "Hy Gardner Calling"—a sort of intra-N. Y. City person-to-person idea—latched onto a topical discussion of rock 'n' roll without any great conclusion. The 14-year-old adolescent, Marion Weisbard, accompanied by her father who is prominent in Nassau County (L. I.) civic matters, who Greyhounded to Memphis to meet her idol, Elvis Presley, was a sane exponent for the r&r cause. She is probably more representative of the decent kids who like "the beat."

Gardner showmanly revived a kinnie of a very recent Presley interview and preceded that with some logrolling to Col. Tom Parker, the Memphis kid's personal manager, and also to Ed Sullivan, including a plug for the September dating on Sullivan's CBSer. Lowell Thomas was a savvy guest, as befits an old pro, and the payoff by Miss Universe for her sixmonth UI pic pact—plugging the opening of "Away All Boats" at Loew's State Aug. 16—was obvious. She made it too obvious also as "the mystery guest" on "What's My Line?," the half-hour just preceding on CBS. Miss Carol Morris must have done some hotfooting from one studio to the other. On "Line?" she almost got shut out on the plug but the determined and obviously grateful Miss Morris wasn't one for shirking her allotted chore—she plainly asked John Daly "can I say something?" and, instead of the usual thankyous or other gallantries, she raced into the cuffo commercial. Bennett Cerf couldn't resist, "Plug over!," but Daly was more gallant. Back to Gardner—he races through that mouthful of Latin Quarter word-age like he wishes it was over; so do the customers. Ad copy is much overboard. Abel.

Open Mind

Probably for the first time in the annals of commercial tv, the topic of homosexuality was explored by a group of experts for the benefit of home viewers. The day Saturday (4) and the time 7 to 7:30 p.m., via WRCA-TV, offered a chance for prime viewing. To those who had any qualms about the occasion, they can rest assured. The Republic will stand.

The title of the topic rather than what was said proved to be most provoking. The panelists, representing psychiatry, the law, and education, spoke mainly in abstract generalities and really offered little that most informed people do not know in this post-Kinsey world.

Yet, the show, as previous half-hours on this programmer, was a pace-setter, bringing out a problem from a dark, hidden corner and intelligently exposing it to the public for examination. It skirted around troubling facts, such as 4% of the male U.S. population is considered homosexual and, the disparity between the law's criminal outlook on what in essence is a medical problem. But if producer-moderator Richard D. Heffner does a sequel on the same subject—as he indicated he might—he would be wise to pinpoint some aspect of the problems, get down to exemplifying case histories, and he really might have a real, good program. It could be done in good taste, without alienating viewers interested in the subject.

Regarding Saturday's show, another weakness was the lack of interplay among the participants and what appeared to be a lack of sufficient spontaneity. Perhaps everyone was overly conscious of the subject and the taboos. The panelists were Dr. Robert Laidlaw, a New York psychiatrist; Arthur Swift, dean of the School of Politics at the New School for Social Research and Florence Kelley, attorney in charge of the criminal branch of the Legal Aid Society. Horo.

Press Conference

Martha Rountree's NBC-TVer of "Press Conference" last Wednesday (1), with the controversial Harold Stassen as the interviewee, was solid looker-innering. It was hot stuff, perfectly timed in light of President Eisenhower's middle-ground attitude on his White House executive aide that very morning, at his own press conference, and unlike the uncertainty that obtained the preceding Sunday on CBS' "Face The Nation," when Stassen also was the guest, this time he was more authoritative. Obviously Ike's neutral position on Nixon versus Herter gave Stassen greater authority. He was an assertive interviewee, parrying the Washington correspondents' queries with candor and unflinching singleness of thought. He never permitted distortion or misinterpretation from the equally savvy corps of D.C. newshawks. TV-wise the program has become a smoother operation. The most peripetatic was the news photographer; the mike pickups of the correspondents, now seated in a more orderly classroom fashion, were good; and Stassen and interviewer both got good camera coverage, with accent of course on the guest. The same disconcerting commercial tag is still omnipotent however. Abel.

'Frontier' for WABD

WABD, N. Y., inked for California National's "Frontier" telepix. Playing time has not been chosen.

Series appeared first run on NBC-TV last season. Half-hours were produced by Tony Miner.

WHO'S THE GUEST?
With Bernard Cowan, Frank Tumpane, Sammy Sales, Colleen Delaney; guests
Producer: Bob Jarvis
Writer: Don Baker
Musical Director: Rudy Toth
30 Mins., Mon., 9:30 p.m.
LEVER BROS.
CBC-TV, from Toronto
(Young & Rubicam)

New sponsored summer panel show, going across this country to all outlets of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., is "Who's the Guest?" which presents celebrities in Canada's entertainment field for identification and then they're on for a song or instrumental number. Quiz switch has the panel attempting to guess names of guests by means of cartoon clues relating to the celebrity's earlier, and often irrelevant, activities.

Panel consists of Frank Tumpane, erudite columnist of The Toronto Telegram; gnome-like Sammy Sales, astute comedian; and Colleen Delaney, a baby-voiced, gypsy-type gal, who is in for visual decoration and obviously doesn't know the Canadian entertainment scene but is nice to look at. Tumpane and Sales are hep to show biz background and the monitor is urbane Bernard Cowan, who displays a sense of sincerity and humor.

Only drawback to the series, from the standpoint of the tv viewer, is that the identity of the guest is mainly regional and trans-Canada unknown. This also complicates matters for the panel quizzers. However, "Who's the Guest?" is a pleasant 30-minute stanza and a definite publicity buildup for the artists introduced, though these expatriates may be better known by reputation in the U. S. or Britain.

Program rings in Doreen Hume, a Toronto Civic Opera lead, who has made a bigger rep in Britain and the BBC, she singing here a Puccini aria; Cal Jackson, pianist-composer known to restricted circles, he later on for his own piano arrangement of "The Thrill Is Gone"; Klondike Kate (Mrs. Matson) in for her show biz reminiscences of the Yukon gold rush; Denny Vaughan for his hit recording of "Walk Hand in Hand" and a neat self-accompaniment at the piano to his singing arrangement of "When Your Lover Has Gone."

Whole is a neat, relaxing series sparked by the quiz interpolations of the panel members and the adroit guidance of Bernard Cowan, plus the individual contributions of the topper guests, even if their identity isn't guessed. Rudy Toth and his orch lend neat backgrounding and the Lifebuoy soap of Blue Surf detergent plugs are unobtrusive. McStay.

LONG BEFORE SHAKESPEARE
With Dr. Lionel Casson, Joe Silver, Carol Gustafson
Associate producer: Nazaret Cherkezian
Director: Clay Yurdin
30 Mins.; Sat., 2 p.m.
WCBS-TV, New York

A steady level of interest was not maintained in this half-hour show, devoted to an exposition of the Greek drama. Although there was much to commend it, and although the series widens the horizons of television, the lecture hall format and other factors detract from the overall enjoyment and the intellectual stimulation.

The format of the show, presented by New York U. in association with the station's public affairs department, is virtually straight exposition, with Dr. Lionel Casson, associate professor of classics at the university, doing the narration. Frescoes, busts, tapestries and other art objects are utilized to give a feel of the period and the enactment of a brief scene from a Greek play is offered to vivify the experience.

Dr. Casson is a commanding figure with an intense, yet measured delivery. However, his narration was a bit too studied and he miscued a number of times. Breaking in with a news bulletin on the sentencing of Marine Sergeant McKeon during his discourse, didn't help the continuity.

Director Clay Yurdin, who also directs "Camera Three" over the same station, tried to get a sense of movement and change through adept staging and other devices, yet pictorially, the show remained static. If the viewer would just listen, he would not miss too much.

The short scene from an Aeschylus play, enacted by Joe Silver and Carol Gustafson, was more of a recitation of lines than anything else.

What was spoken, though, was interesting. Dr. Casson seemed to speak from a fund of knowledge in the field. He also has a flare for drama, as indicated in the latter portion of the program by his narration. The initialer dealt mainly with the works of Aeschylus, the father of the Greek tragedy and other shows in this eight-week series will be devoted to Sophocles, Euripides and Aristophanes. The fare is culturally very rich and with some changes, more could be realized from the bill. Horo.

Foreign TV Reviews

COMEDY IN MUSIC
With Victor Borge and orchestra, directed by Eric Robinson
Producer: G. B. Lupino
50 Mins.; Tues. (31), 8:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, London

No one could possibly have foreseen the sort of impact Victor Borge would have on traditionally hypercritical British audiences. His advent to London, for a special one-shot by BBC-TV stint, was comparatively unheralded and almost completely unsung. A man known only by reputation, he was accordingly expected to live it up to the hilt.

From the first moment of the show, when he nonchalantly stepped on to the piano ("The Bechstein people have asked me to announce that this is a Steinway piano") he had the on-camera audience eating from his hand. The response was immediate, the impact terrific, and throughout the program—which overlapped, but did not get the customary fadeout—Borge played his hand with devasting effect.

Up until a few days of transmission, the most that British newspapers carried about him concerned instructions on how to pronounce Bor-ge. Since the show, he is still known as Bor-j or Bor-gay, but whatever the tag may be, he is definitely "in" with British audiences.

This type of act breaks new ground for the majority of viewers; the legit has its Ruth Draper, Emlyn Williams and Joyce Grenfell, but tv has so far managed to bypass the solo spot issue to the extent deployed by Borge. Perhaps there are too few Borges in the world; Britain at least has yet to discover one.

As gags tumbled from him it became plain that all his material was either very good or superlative; not one squib in a 50-minute basket of wisecracks failed to explode.

The man with the face of a saintly maniac worked on a simple set consisting of a piano against a curtain background that screened the orchestra. Now and then, they would be uncovered whenever Borge wanted to conduct.

Not satisfied with some expert clowning at the piano, Borge went to work on a mock Mozart opera, guying soprano, tenor, contralto and bass; this was way on par with the Ustinov Mozart takeoffs: his narrative was a triumph of measured timing and delivery. In a Tchaikowsky melange, one wandering hand picked out the main theme while the other directed the orchestra, all this done in a way that never left his virtuosity in doubt.

Unobtrusive camera work and distinguished production made this the outstanding comedy contribution of the year on BBC-TV.

Being networked simultaneously on the alternative commercial channel with the Bob Hope show; comparison of viewer ratings should prove interesting. Pete.

TIC-TAC-DOUGH
With Jack Barry, others
Producers: Barry & Enright
Executive Producer: Hudson Fausett
Director: Edward King
30 Mins., Mon.-Fri., 12 noon
Sustaining
NBC-TV, from New York

One of the major efforts of the telecommunications industry these days seems to be devising new means of giving away money. It appears that some of the best minds in the field are engaged in research on that process. Perhaps this can be called an extremely successful project since a lot of shows do give away the loot.

Latest exhibit in this field is "Tic-Tac Dough" a variation on the ancient game of Tic-tac-toc, in which two contestants in order to put their cross or circle in any selected segment, have to answer a question. For a sustainer the prizes are fairly generous.

Jack Barry, a veteran hand at quiz games, handles the show competently, and moves the contestants along at a good clip. The questions do not require savants, and so the time limit seems fair. It's good fodder for the daytime circuit. Jose.

FRANKIE LAINE TIME
With Patti Page, Anita Ekberg, Duke Ellington, Morey Amsterdam, Russ Case orch
Producer: Charlie Andrews
Director: Mel Ferber
Choreographer: Edith Barstow
Writers: Harvey Orkin, Shelly Keller, Lou Salaman
60 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
Participating
CBS-TV, from New York

The disparaging "summer replacement" tag has seldom been more appropriately affixed. Opener of "Frankie Laine Time," hot weather sub for "The Arthur Godfrey Show," last Wednesday (1), was an inept job of vaudeo packaging. Everything was wrong and nothing worked.

The rap obviously belongs to the behind-the-scenes staffers, from the producer down to the writers, because they had topflight talent to work with and they couldn't make it come off. A special boot goes to the off-camera voice that shouted, after a highly laudatory introduction of the Mellowlarks by Frankie Laine, "Get to the commercial." They got to the commercial despite the on-screen embarrassment of the show's host.

This bubu, which came close to the midway mark, just spotlighted the semi-pro quality of the stanza. The tipoff on how the show was running came earlier. Preceding was a restrained Frankie Laine with "I'm Sitting On Top of the World" and "Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams" and Patti Page with a static rendition of her current disclick, "Allegheny Moon" and a workover of the flipside of the Mercury etching, "Strangest Romance." It's "Allegheny Moon" all the way in the disk derby and the showcasing of the bottom of the deck didn't seem to add up.

Also on the debit side Morey Amsterdam whose routine belonged on a closed channel to Borscht Belt. In between, a running gag with Anita Ekberg began. This peg was built on showing off her build.

In the second half, Laine did "Sunny Side of the Street," Miss Ekberg, overly draped, walked on and off, The Mellowlarks, apparently having come to some agreement with the commercial, did an uninspired "Joshua Fit The Battle of Jericho," and FL and Patti Page were recruited to do a medley of their hits under a quiz show format. This bit almost came off but the puns got out of hand, Duke Ellington was wasted with a solo piano job on "Dancers In Love" and "Tomorrow Mountain," which was a choreographed production.

Through it all, for change of pace, was Miss Ekberg in a rehash of an old burlesque sketch. She gets a better showcasting in the tabloids.

Laine is a likeable tv host and the series could be a pleaser if the boys on top didn't act like it was only a filler. Gros.

FARE FOR LADIES
With Red Rowe, host; Mala Powers, Art Jarrett, Arlene Harris, Dave Barry, guests
Producer: Harry Koplan
Director: Dan Gingold
60 Mins., Mon., 2 p.m.
KNXT, Hollywood

At this stage, "Fare for Ladies" is a formless mishmash of quizzes, audience participation stunts, comic turns, songs and civic presentations, and seriously suffers from the lack of a strong central idea. Additionally, the opener was marred by a spate of dropped lines and cues, plus footless production which slowed an already creeping pace.

Item: host Red Rowe took starlet guest Mala Powers down into the house to let the studio audience ask her questions on studio production, but the question-posers had to fight their way to the aisles to do so. Item; Rowe, custodian of the hand mike, managed to lose a great part of the Q-and-A period, (no great loss, from the audible portions). Item; warblers Mimi Martel and Art Jarrett were announced for a duet, but only Jarrett showed up on camera because Miss Martel didn't know the words.

Comic Dave Barry's material, ill-suited to the afternoon crowd, didn't register at all well. However, Arlene Harris, reprising her well-known chatterbox bit, afforded a better-than-average return for the hausfrau audience.

Of "Fare's" two singers, Miss Martel's choice of material was unfortunate — a slow-paced, indeterminate number which did little to display her talents. Ex-bandleader Jarrett's projection showed a showmanlike flair, but, alas, his pipes also showed the passage of years.

As for the quiz portions, they were pegged at an elementary level which provided little real excitement. Kove.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

M-G FIRMS UP SALES PATTERN

Going Into Red With Wide Open Eyes

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Fordyce Enterprises, producing the new "On Trial" telefilm series to be seen on NBC-TV next season, will go $100,000 into the red, producer-owner Collier Young discloses in a razor-sharp reflection of the complicated economics of tv film. Series begins telecasting Sept. 14, but Young, making his first entry into tv, says already there's no doubt of the $100,000 in red ink.

Young, partnered with Joseph Cotten and writers Don Mankiewicz and Larry Marcus in the project, explained, "It's due to conflict between the dollar and artistry. At the moment artistry has the upper hand. At the rate we're spending, we will be $100,000 in the hole at the end of the season." Company is spending more than it's given by the sponsor, Campbell's Soup, but hopes to recoup its loss and make a profit via reruns, Young said.

The producer, making his first series for tv, said "we have the highest script charges in half-hour tv film. We pay $3,000 for scripts written by Marcus and Mankiewicz, in addition to which they own a piece of the company. But I have the greatest respect for the writer, and writing will be the last economy I'll practice." Writers' source material is furnished them, since the series is based on actual trials in history.

"This is the first time writers have been so heavily involved in a tv operation, but that's the way I want it."

Once a TV Station Gets the Feature Pic Backlog Bug There's No Stopping

Feature film purchases in recent weeks bear out the forecast that once a tv station gets on a feature film binge, it doesn't stop.

Just like a drinking prone individual, the tv station imbibes more and more after its initial plunge—subject, of course, to its ability to shell out the hard cash and its need for competitive quality.

Exemplifying this condition are many of the stations which have bought the RKO library from Matty Fox's C & C Television Corp., the first major library to be put on the block.

With over 700 RKO theatricals under its belt, Triangle stations, WFIL-TV, Philadelphia; WFBG, Altoona, Pa., and WNBF, Binghamton, N. Y., concluded a deal with National Telefilm Associates for the 20th-Fox package of 52. Triangle, in addition, has bought NTA's Selznick package.

Also indicative are the deals for the Warner Bros. library by Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., (WBC) which also possesses the RKO library for three of its four tv stations. (See separate story).

Another case in point are the six RKO Teleradio stations, which were given first crack at the "Finest 52" following RKO Teleradio's failure to get network airing for the package. RKO Teleradio took that step rather than go out and buy fresh packages for its o&o's, which already had the complete RKO catalog, with the exception of 152 features, from which the 52 were culled.

A dramatic example is KUTV, an ABC affiliate in Salt Lake City, which bought the WB library and

Seek Pay Pattern On 90-Min. Vidfilm

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Suddenly finding it has no provisos in its telefilm pact for 90-minute telepix, the Screen Directors Guild is planning to meet with Screen Gems, Columbia's tv subsid, to discuss a pattern of pay for directors on the extra-long films. SG is shooting eight 90-min. pix for the "Playhouse 90" series of CBS.

SDG's tv pact was negotiated five years ago, when there were no 90-min. vidfilms, and next negotiation won't be until March of 1958.

Guild board met recently to discuss minimums for the 90-min. vidfilm, and while it was proposed that a standard might be the tripling of minimums on the half-hour telepic, this was rejected by the board. Some members pointed out far more work goes into preparation of a 90-min. vidfilm than does in the average vidpic, and averred even tripling the pay wouldn't be adequate compensation.

Tracers Series Rolls

Parker-Rogers Productions has started on 26 30-minute vidpix based on the files of Tracers Co. of America, N.Y. investigative outfit which has spent 33 years ferreting out missing persons. MPA, New Orleans, will start syndicated distribution within 20 days.

Jim Chandler stars. Films have been shot in locale in at least seven U.S. cities. Show will make room for insertion of local spots, announcing recently missing persons, particularly those from the station's own area.

'Oz' Sale Inspires M-G Talks With Webs on Others

With the "Wizard of Oz" sale to CBS under its belt, Metro is holding talks with CBS and other nets for similar deals on what it considers five classics in the Metro library.

Network airing is sought for "Mutiny on the Bounty," starring Clark Gable, Charles Laughton and Franchot Tone, "Easter Parade," starring Judy Garland and Fred Astaire, "Treasure Island," featuring Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, "David Copperfield" and "Tale of Two Cities."

As Charles H. (Bud) Barry, v.p. in charge of the Metro tv operation, awaits the go-ahead signal to build a sales organization from prez Arthur Loew, talks are continuing in many directions. Barry met with execs of National Telefilm Associates last week on NTA's bid to purchase 52 Metro pictures for its planned feature film network. Talks were described as being in the preliminary stage.

TUNSTALL PEDDLING AFRICAN TV SERIES

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

John Tunstall, managing director of Dominion Film Productions Ltd., Johannesburg, South Africa, in town to sell a 13-segment half-hour adventure telepix series, is also dickering deals for further vidfilm production in Africa. He returns via Toronto, where he has a Canadian telecasting deal on fire; thence to London, where the series is already showing.

Series already in the can is tagged "Tales Around an African Campfire," and revolves around a white hunter spinning yarns, augmented by Kodachrome footage lensed at the actual tale locales in various parts of Africa.

JAEGER, OTHERS JOIN TV SETUP

A skeleton sales force for marketing the Metro library to tv has been appointed, as Metro firmed up plans on how it will package the library of over 700 features.

C. P. (Pete) Jaeger, a former v.p. of Guild Films, has joined Metro's television division, in an executive sales capacity. Monroe Mendelsohn, who recently headed up the sales promotion department of Guild Films and prior to that was advertising-publicity director for United Television Programs, has been named director of sales promotion. Maurice Gresham, radio and tv sales exec and former v.p. of McCadden, Inc., will head up Metro tv's West Coast offices, headquartering at Metro's Culver City studios. A midwest sales manager, who will work out of Chicago, is to be appointed shortly. They will all report to Charles C. (Bud) Barry, Metro v.p. in charge of tv operations, who will function as sales manager, assisted by Richard Harper and Frank Rosenfelt, the latter of Metro's legal department.

The jelled selling plans call for a limited number of complete library sales in markets to be selected by Metro. In non-library markets, Metro will offer a package of 52 films, subdivided into two groups of 26 each. The titles for the initial 52-feature package have already been selected and will be announced shortly.

In addition, a programming package of 39 features, consisting of the "Andy Hardy," "Dr. Kildare" and "Mazie" series will be offered. This latter package, because of its running story line and characters, is conceived for special handling and is expected to break open new time periods for feature films. Metro plans to work with advertisers on this programming package for tie-ins and special merchandising campaigns.

Regarding Metro's shorts, packages of varying units are being formed.

In six to eight months from now, Metro plans to release its second package of 52, which will combine some of the features in the initial 52 with a fresh list of titles. The second and subsequent packages of 52, like the initialer, will be broken down to groups of 26.

Of the 700 plus Metro films slated for tv, about 50 will be withheld for theatrical reissue. These 50 will be released for tv at about the rate of 10 a year. On a limited number, Metro currently is engaged in talks with nets for a possible net exposure, a la "Wizard of Oz" for CBS.

The tv operation, which will now function under the heading of the Metro television division, will move out of the Loew's Building and into the Mayfair Building in about two weeks. The Loew's tv division will occupy the ninth floor of the Mayfair building.

Ben Blue Telepix Series

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Lensing on the new "Dick Powell-Zane Grey Theatre" vidpix series gets underway this week with "Stars Over Texas," first of the 29 segments to be shown on CBS-TV this fall with General Foods bankrolling. Four Star Films is producing the series in conduction with producer Hal Hudson and members of the Grey family.

Ralph Bellamy and Gloria Talbott co-star in the Harold Shumate teleplay, with Hudson producing and Leslie Selander directing.

WB Backlog Sold To WBC Stations; WABD Buys 60

Three of the four Westinghouse television stations are matching their buy of RKO pictures recently with large chunks out of Associated Artists Productions' Warner Bros. pile. WBZ-TV, Boston, in what is considered the biggest feature film deal for tv in that city's history, bought all 754 Warners. Deals are reportedly being firmed with KDKA, Pittsburgh, and a third WBC station, KPIX, Frisco, each for several groups of 58 pictures.

WABD, the DuMont o&o in N. Y., bought 60 of the Warner pictures in the first major outlay for feature films in about two years. Station will show one pic every Sunday night, but will play it three times continuously between 8 and midnight. Charge to each of four sponsors on the four-hour show will be $1,750 a week. Price includes a quarter hour seg in each of the three showings, with any additional time rotating among the bankrolling quartet. WABD has also singled the "Bugs Bunny" cartoons, out of an additional Warners buy, for a new Friday night-at-7:30 half-hour. Seven-Up has already bought half of the juve stanza for fall.

The number of markets in which Warner features are sold was brought to over 50 by a spurt last week. Distrib is now beginning to count the number of markets in which more than one station owns Warner pix. Apart from WABD's 60, WCBS-TV recently inked for 150. Moreover, WRCA-TV is known to be negotiating for a package, and it's reported WOR-TV is dickering for still other AAP-controlled Warner pix.

KRON, as well as KPIX, each have Warners in Frisco. So do KVAR and KPHO, in Phoenix, and KBET and KCRA, Sacramento.

Permanent Sets For SG's 'Bengal Lancers' At Cost of $250,000

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Screen Gems is building several permanent sets for the new Herbert B. Leonard-SG telepix series, "77th Bengal Lancers" at a cost of an estimated $250,000, reportedly the largest sum ever put out for exclusively telepix settings.

Largest unit will be in the Mojave Desert, and will be a three and one-half acre replica of a British Army fort in India. Also to be built will be an Indian street, a Rajah's palace and British army barracks and offices, an Indian jungle and a Viceroy's summer palace sets.

Meanwhile, Louis Appleton Jr., former SG assistant director, has been promoted to assistant to producer Leonard for "77th Lancers."

Gross-Krasne, the telefilm production company which quit syndication 18 months ago through sellout of United Television Programs to MCA-TV, is returning to distribution. First show for sale is an O. Henry half-hour anthology, starring Thomas Mitchell.

Manuever is coincident with the reported "upbeat" in syndication, which only a few months ago was considered by many a "hazardous" business to be continuing in, much less enter afresh. G-K is risking the cost of a sales unit, because the "timing is right," according to Phil Krasne, co-owner of the Coast production firm. It is the most pointed reaffirmation of syndication to date.

Production of syndicated telepix came to a near standstill recently. Producers couldn't afford to match the price of network filmed product in the syndication field, because of the difficulty in recapturing coin. And fears grew over the plethora of features that were on the market. The best most syndicators did, Krasne declared in tracing recent history, was turn to first run off network for a few syndicated properties.

Now the fright over features is abating, both Krasne and his partner, Jack Gross, believe. They point out that industryites are beginning to recognize the limitations of feature film exposure, despite the all-fired power of full-lengthers as tv fare. Two conceded that from approximately 10:30 to midnight is top feature film time on tv, but they add that many national bankrollers avoid buying into Hollywood theatricals because they can't get adequate sponsorship identification unless they own the whole feature film show. Gross and Krasne said that sponsors find that buying the whole shebang is too costly. Add to this the contention that there is several times the coin available through regional sponsors as in all of network. Gross and Krasne feel the net result is there is room for the return of quality syndicated product.

Present system of syndication has many inadequacies, Krasne said. He found two reasons why it wasn't wise to turn O. Henry over to an outside syndicator. Just as was the case about a year back, producers can't make back their investments on telepix when they have to pay out 35 to 40% in distribution fees. Moreover, Krasne explained that current mode of syndication calls for selling more than one show at a time. Gross and Krasne want to concentrate on one skein at a time.

G-K has just hired two salesmen to hit agencies and is on the verge of hiring four more. They'll work on making sales in as many major tv situations as possible (via re-

OF's $2,000,000 On Four-Star Pix

With three major regional deals consummated, "Star Performance" has racked up more than $2,000,000 for Official Films in less than four months.

The Four Star Productions, now in syndication, has been sold in 130 markets. The series also brought in for the first time Slenderella International and Standard Oil of New Jersey (Esso) into the half-hour syndication sponsorship field.

Slenderella, which operates 150 salons in the U. S. and elsewhere, in its 39-week regional deal, will place the programs in 35 of the largest markets. Standard Oil, via McCann-Erickson, will take the series in 49 markets. The first regional sale garnered by Official was the 11-market deal with Budweiser Beer.

In Canada, Official sold the "Star Performance" package of 153 half-hour programs to Telepix Movies, Ltd., of Toronto.

ence." Much of the advance work of backgrounding and highlighting the news has been done by these shows, a format that will continue for both conventions.

As a result, Washington has been the scene of a two-way weekly sweepstakes. The shows vie with each other in an effort to cop the current top figure in the news. And politicos, conscious of the impact of tv, plus its overwhelming cost, maneuver for the covetted cuffo spotlight.

Past Sunday's lineup included GOP chairman Leonard Hall, whose stint was considered sufficiently important for "Face the Nation" to trek all the way to 'Frisco to get him. Harold Stassen, who stirred up a major tempest in the Republican teapot by his "dump Nixon" move, guested on "College Press Conference" for his third stint on a network tv show in a single week. Demmy presidential hopeful, Kentucky Gov. "Happy" Chandler faced the "Youth Wants to Know" quizzers, while Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) and Sen. Clifford Case (Rep., N. J.) debated on "American Forum." "Meet the Press" offered a different angle—a televised press conference with Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of National Association for Advancement of the Colored People. "Reporters' Roundup" featured Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.).

Obvious plums for which all shows have been competing—the major candidates—have thus far resisted the lure of the coast-to-coast cuffo appearance. This holds true for such national figures as Harry Truman, Senate leader Lyndon Johnson, and Speaker Sam Rayburn. This resistance, however, is likely to wither next Sunday, when tv cameras and mikes, complete with interviewers, will be lurking in every corner of every hotel harboring a major Democratic figure. Already inked for convention eve shows is New York's Gov. Averell Harriman, who will appear on "Youth Wants to Know."

Also on next Sunday's lineup are the following: Democratic National Committee chairman Paul Butler, on "Meet the Press"; Carmine De Sapio and James Finnegan, campaign managers for Harriman and Stevenson, respectively, on "College Press Conference"; and Harriman supporter Gov. Raymond Gary (D., Okla.) versus Stevenson backer Sen. Richard Neuberger (D., Ore.), on "American Forum." In addition, of course, NBC's "Citizens Union Searchlight," moderated by Ben Grauer, will line up any key figure it can marshall, as will virtually all commentators on the scene.

Standing in a unique position in the pre-convention coverage is Martha Rountree's "Press Conference," a Johnny-come-lately to the tv scene, but a formidable bidder for guests, with its 125 station lineup and its substantial Corn Products sponsorship. Programmed Wednesday night, rather than the standard Sunday afternoon, show will originate from Chicago tomorrow night (8); as well as next Wednesday (15), midway in the actual convention. Following her policy to date, la Rountree has not yet tipped her hand as to the guests on her two-show agenda.

In addition to the ABC and CBS final roundups, NBC has scheduled a 5-6 p.m. "Outlook," featuring interviews with leading figures, a report from George Gallup, and wrapups from the entire NBC stable of newsmen.

All three video webs are determined to keep preconvention coverage tighter and better organized than in '52, when it rambled aimlessly over the field, frequently bringing the same person to the screen on three or four successive shows. Working within the framework of established regularly scheduled shows, plus staying on top of the news with features whenever indicated, they hope to make sense to the mass audience.

Big question is whether the intensive preparation will whet the appetite of the staggeringly large potential tv audience, or satiate it. That question may well be answered when the final scores for the actual convention coverage are tabulated.

Ann Arbor TV-Radio Center Sets Top Names For Art Series on Film

Ann Arbor, Mich., Aug. 7.

A new group of related educational television programs designed to show how a creative person produces a work of art in painting, music and literature will be offered in 1956 by the Educational Television and Radio Center. The center acts as the hub for the National Educational Television network.

Playwright Arthur Miller will be one of those features in the "Writers of Today" series, to be hosted by Walter F. Kerr, drama critic of the New York Herald Tribune. Other current writers to be featured in the series will be W. H. Auden, Robert Penn Warren and Archibald MacLeish. In informal conversations, Kerr and his guest will explore the writer's philosophy, his techniques and working habits. The six-program series was filmed by Dynamic Films, Inc.

In the series "Music as a Language," composer-conductor Howard Hanson will be featured. In "The Painting," the young American artist Siegfried Reinhardt will be shown at work, with Reinhardt, himself, doing the narration.

Jamaica TV—U.S Style

Kingston, B.W.I., Aug. 7.

Television is coming to Jamaica, British West Indies. Jamaican coin will have the controlling interest.

However, even though Jamaica is a British possession, the American system of commercial tv will be adopted rather than embracing a BBC-type of operation. Headquarters will be in Kingston.

No definite plans have been formulated as yet, although it's reported some tentative discussions have been held on possible purchase of RCA equipment. It's figured that U. S.-made pix will play an important role in the Jamaican programming scheme.

Robert Lawrence Inks With Canadian Producer For North-Border Com'ls

Robert Lawrence Productions (Canada) Ltd., and Meridian Films Ltd., have inked an agreement whereby they'll both use stage space in Toronto, Meridian for theatrical and industrial production and Lawrence for commercial spots only.

Robert Lawrence, head of the companies, said that each of the three years his outfit has been active in Canada, it has doubled billings. Previous to the arrangement with Meridian, outfit rented studio space. Grantray-Lawrence Animation nc., in Hollywood, will do animation for all accounts, giving the outfit a three-way setup—Coast, N. Y. and now Canada.

Lawrence expects to use the new Canadian facilities for Canadian sponsors principally, but is leaving the door open for any U. S. bankroller who wants product shot there.

Levant

and precipitous," and that it was the result of his asking for a raise last Wednesday. Only thing everyone in the imbroglio agreed on was that some of Levant's ad libs were of questionable judgment; even Levant admitted this although contending he was never warned about it by the station or sponsor.

Terrence explained, "It seems we had a show about music, but instead Levant was razzing Nixon too much, and even the panel didn't have much chance to talk. The show got too dirty. We want to sell carpets. The station and I had warned Oscar several times, but he would go ahead anyway.

"We maintain a good reputation and can't antagonize people. I received complaints because of it. I'm used to them because I also sponsor Paul Coates, but I didn't want politics on the show. If Oscar had something clever to say about Nixon, that would have been okay. But whether you're a Republican or Democrat, you should have respect for the office. Oscar is a sweet guy, but he overdoes it with his cracks. I am a Republican and I don't particularly care about Nixon. I was a Republican, yet voted for President Roosevelt. I don't want any controversial show unless both sides are presented."

Plans Another Show

Asked how his carpet sales were affected since he has sponsored Levant, Terrence replied: "We should have done more business. However, I am inclined to blame the fact we didn't on general business conditions since business is off. What happened won't hurt my friendship with Levant, but he can't do those things—after all, Nixon is still Vice-President of the United States," he added.

Levant denied disagreement on program material, contending he was never warned by the station about his material, nor was there ever even any discussion about it. Levant said he realized himself he may have crossed the border of good taste on his last show, and remarked, "I was dumbfounded at my ad libs. I never know what I'm going to say beforehand. I'm like a middle-class James Joyce—I'm extremely self-conscious. The station left it up to my own judgment, which I don't have.

"The station gave me latitude, understanding I can never predict what I'm going to say. But Wednesday I asked for a raise and Al Flanagan of KCOP led me to believe he would take care of it, but that I shouldn't call Terrence, the sponsor. The next thing that happened was Flanagan phoning me Thursday and telling me of the station's decision.

"I'm not going to question the right of the station in this matter, although my leaving tv will be a big loss to the community. (Maybe it's a big gain, I don't know). The show made extraordinary demands on me, I wrote and handled it all."

Ross-Danzig packages the Levant show, and Frank Danzig said he and his partner are currently negotiating a tv film and kine deal of "Words." "We think Levant is a great talent. We are extremely regretful the show is leaving KCOP," he said. Latest ARB gave "Words" a 6.2 rating for the 11 p.m.-midnight show.

'MAJOR-MINOR' ADV. PATTERN

60% of Nippon TV on Film; Both Radio, Video Follow U.S. Patterns

Radio and television in Japan are developing along U. S. patterns with privately-owned operations a growing postwar trend, in the opinion of Nobutako Shikanai, head of the Nippon Broadcasting System, Inc.

Shikanai is currently in the U. S. on business pertaining to his AM-TV activities and also is negotiating for increased cultural exchange through importation of American concert attractions. He is one of the original founders of the International Cultural Exchange Association, recently-organized non-profit combine that embraces some of Nippon's most important figures, including key industrialists, bankers, newspaper-radio-tv owners, educators, shipping interests, etc. As a delegate for the Board of Japanese Employers' Federation (corresponding to our National Association of Manufacturers), Shikanai recently attended the World Labor Congress in Geneva, going from there t London and thence to New York. He proceeds to Washington, then to Chicago and San Francisco before returning to Japan.

Accompanying Shikanai is Saburo Matsuo, chief engineer of Nippon Broadcasting, a top radio combine and planning immediate expansion into tv. In Japan before World War II, there were no privately-owned and operated broadcasters, everything being government-controlled. Today, the Japanese government still is active, but private enterprise has been permitted to spawn, side-by-side with the official operations. Since the end of the war, about 40 privately-owned radio stations have begun operation, and there will be seven commercial tv stations, when two under construction are completed.

According to Shikanai and Matsuo, there are about 20,000,000 radio sets in Japan and about 200,-

Olympic Committee Sees 250G Potential In Global Video Spread

The Olympic Committee estimates that film coverage on the November games will be worth roughly $250,000 on global video. It has appointed Paul Talbot sole sales representative for all tv, newsreel, theatrical and 16m rights.

Talbot, who presides over Fremantle Overseas Radio-TV, an outfit selling only outside the U. S. until now, reports that negotiations are underway with Moscow for tv filmization of the event. Russian cinema is expected to buy the sports film as well.

Newsreel filming is to be done by a pool of cameramen for all the newsreel services, who have to pay for using the Olympic footage. The Committee is arranging five editions for theatrical and tv exposure to suit the specific interests of various parts of the world: There will be North and South American editions, a European-slanted copy, an edition for Eastern Europe and Russia and one for Japan. Talbot plans to jet-plane daily celluloid out of Melbourne, Australia, where the 1956 Olympics take place, to world-wide points. Olympics are on from Nov. 22 through Dec. 8.

Spanish Dubbings For 'Dr. Christian'

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Spanish-language dubbing on "Dr. Christian" will begin next month, despite fact that the show hasn't been released in the U. S. as yet. However, current deals call for telecasting in Latin American countries in January, when the series will also be aired in Britain, via the Associated TV Programs Ltd. net.

"Dr. Christian" will be aired in the U. S. in late September or early October.

'Code 3's' 50 Markets

Eight regional or national spot advertisers have brought "Code 3" for sponsorship in 35 markets, bringing the total markets sold for the series to 50.

Simultaneously, ABC Film Syndication announced that the series has just been released for individual market sales nationally. "Code 3" multi-market sponsors include Dining Car Coffee, Strom Brewing, National Biscuit, Petri Wine and Signal Oil.

100 Stations Join In Public Service Industrial Web

Amid all the talk about a commercial film net, either for features or telefilms, one such net in the industrially-sponsored public service field has been successfully launched by Public Service Network, Inc., headquartering in Princeton, N. J.

With Sherman Price at the helm, PSN since last March has garnered over 100 stations from coast to coast to join its operation, under which each of the stations contractually commits itself to play one or both of two PSN's regularly weekly scheduled series, "Building America" and "Transition." "Building America" is a half-hour series and "Transition" a quarter-hour.

The PSN plan runs along these lines:

All films accepted by PSN from sponsors, mainly trade associations and larger companies, are rigidly edited to take out any direct commercials and to fit the films in either the half-hour or quarter-hour format. They also are viewed in terms of content and audience interest so that affiliated stations can schedule them safely in regular weekly time slots.

Industrial sponsors pay PSN a servicing fee, in addition to furnishing 30 black-and-white or color prints for series circulation. The fee to the sponsor is $10 per certified telecast for each of a minimum of 200 telecasts and $7.50 thereafter. Stations, donating the time for the public service programming, do not make any payments.

Among the industrial and trade association sponsors employing PSN facilities are: Campbell Soup, Hamilton Watch Co., Sperry-Rand, Welch Grape Juice Co., American Chemical Paint Co., West Coast Lumberman's Association, and Structural Clay Products Institute.

Stations joining the net include: WPIX, New York; KLOR, New Orleans; WREC, Memphis, Tenn.; KSAN, San Francisco; WGR, Buffalo, N. Y.; KARD, Wichita, Kan., and WICU, Erie, Pa.

39 More 'Hudsons' For Carolina Power & Light

Carolina Power & Light Co., which sponsors MCA-TV's "Dr. Hudson's Secret Journal" in five southern markets, has signatured a contract for a new batch of 39 half-hour stanzas, following backing of its initial series of 39 installments. Show stars John Howard.

Walter J. Klein of Charlotte, N.C., is the agency.

MORE 'GOLDBERGS' SALES

Guild has signed five more stations to "The Goldbergs."

Buying the half-hour tv film series, starring Gertrude Berg, were: WAAM, Baltimore, with sponsor attached; WXYZ, Detroit; KFMB, San Diego; WGEN, Quincy (Ill.); KSWO, Lawton (Okla.)

ALTERNATE WEEK SYNDICATION COIN

The growing trend of alternate sponsorship in the syndication field has gained momentum, with regional advertisers, in market after market, adopting the "major-minor" weekly ad format as a flexible tool in their tv outlay.

The recent Television Programs of America deal with Chunkies, the candy outfit, for alternate sponsorship of "Foreign Legionnaire" in 17 Eastern markets is typical of the booming development for many of the top syndicators.

TPA, as soon as it closed with Chunkies for 17 markets for a 26-week period, on an alternate basis, for about $83,000, went ahead and sold the series in 10 of the 17 markets to alternate sponsors or tv stations on a 39-week or 52-week basis, parlaying the deal to about $225,000. Before, TPA is through selling in the 17 markets, it expects the "Foreign Legionnaire" series in the area to bring the take up to $275,000.

National Premium Beer is utilizing the alternative format on TPA's "Stage 7" in the East, with Krey Packing Co., and Bell Bakeries is adopting the same tack for the show in other areas of the country.

Ziv, whose shows also are on the alternate bandwagon along with other syndicators, currently has Emerson Drug for Bromo Seltzer on "Science Fiction Theatre" in about 24 markets. Riding along with Emerson in several of the markets is Auto-Lite. Others on the Ziv alternate lineup include Phillips Petroleum on "I Led 3 Lives" in 46 midwest markets, Carter Products on "Mr. District Attorney" in about 40 markets, and General Cigar and Piels Beer alternating in a number of markets on "Man Called X" and "Mr. District Attorney."

The growth, which parallels the development in network tv, stems from a number of factors. From the sponsors' point of view, a normally spot advertiser can gain program identification by spending just about half the amount of money; a comparatively well-heeled advertiser can buy another show and attempt to reach another segment of the audience, aiming one program for the family and another for the kids; and an advertiser needing the quick, hard, fast sell of spots can still hang on to a program through the alternating week device. Flexibility appears to be the keynote and more and more syndication sponsors are going for it.

Also spurring the trend are increases in time and film costs.

Those syndicators with a full field force find themselves advantageously equipped to ride the crescending wave, having the manpower to tie the alternating knot in key areas around the country.

REP'S VIDFILMERY SETS HEAVY SCHEDULE

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Possible sale of Republic to a group repped by BevHills banking firm of Cantor & Fitzgerald seems to be becoming more remote, with start by Studio City TV Productions, vidfilm arm of Republic, of a hefty production schedule last week.

An additional 26 "Frontier Doctor" stanzas, starring Rex Allen, with Edward J. White producing and William Witney directing, went before the Studio City cameras. Also, according to Studio City prexy Mort Scot, a new series, "True Detective," based on the crime mag, is definitely slated for production shortly and other tv properties are under active consideration.

Additionally, the Studio City teleblurb operation continues at an estimated 50% hike over the 1955 rate of biz, for such clients at General Electric, Kaiser Aluminum, Procter & Gamble, Kellogg cereals, Gulf Oil and White King Soap, Scott revealed.

TV Film Producers Alliance Pushes Adoption of NARTB Code for Telepix

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Formal adoption of the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters TV Code by the 16 member-firms of the Alliance of TV Film Producers was recommended by the Alliance's committee on ethics over the weekend. This move climaxes a series of confabs between ATFP and NARTB over expanding the scope of the NARTB code to telepix production. (The code presently applies primarily to station exhibition). It also drives another nail into the proposals by another multi-organization committee, headed by Martin Leeds of Desilu Production, that the telepix industry formulate its own code.

The AFTP ethics committee, headed by Maurice Morton, v.p. of McCadden Productions recommended that the Alliance by-laws be amended to adopt the NARTB code and that members display an Alliance seal, to be designed, on their films as a token of adherance.

Further, the ethics committee proposed that a permanent committee be set up by the Alliance to pass on code violations, and set up a tentative scale of punishments, ranging from removal of the proposed seal from the offender's telepix, to expulsion from the Alliance for repeated violations. Morton stated that the seal will not be available to non-Alliance members, but that they could adhere to the NARTB code individually, or join the ATFP.

In discussing the Alliance committee's recommendation, Morton, backed by John Sinn, ATFP treasurer noted that from the start of its deliberations, the committee felt the best solution was the adoption of the NARTB code. "There's nothing wrong with Leeds' objectives," Morton observed "but we felt that this is a more practical approach than drafting our own code The NARTB code is well-written and well-thought-out. It already covers the ground.

"Also, uniformity is the quickest way of gaining adherance. Since the code already governs what stations show, it should also govern what producers make, to insure uniformity of codes within the industry."

Besides Morton, members of the committee include Hal Roach

'Wire Service' Rolls

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

First stanza of Don Sharpe's new ABC-TV "Wire Service" series started to roll at Red Rock Canyon locale yesterday (6), with Dane Clark starring, Warren Lewis producing and Alvin Ganzer directing.

Hour-long vidpix bow on Oct. 4, with R. J. Reynolds Co. bankrolling.

Cal. Gets 'Tarzan' Vidpix & Features In Lesser Pact

California National Productions Inc., the newly-named (ex-Kagran) telefilm subsidiary, will produce the first half-hour vidfilm series about "Tarzan." In making the deal for video rights with Hollywood producer Sol Lesser, CNP also acquires joint control of several features on the Edgar Rice Burroughs' jungleman.

CNP, helmed by Alan Livingston, will hereafter distribute the feature film "Tarzans" to both tv and theatres, as Lesser and the distrib maintain joint control. Another facet of the Lesser pact gives CNP merchandising rights. Publication rights, however, are not part of the contract.

As a result of the Lesser agreement, the telefilmery is going to offer 39 half-hours for January start to national sponsors. Gordon Scott, who did the lead role in the last two "Tarzan" features, will star.

There are 13 features in which California National shares distribution rights with Lesser. A dozen are in reissue and the last was just completed. Announcement said that forthcoming "Tarzan" product "will be distributed under the same arrangement" as those already made.

All told, there have been 31 "Tarzan" films since the first in 1918, which starred Elmo Lincoln and Enid Markey. Twenty-three books by Burroughs have been published on the hero since 1914. Scott is the 11th actor to play "Tarzan." Johnny Weissmuller did 12 pix over a 15-year span. Buster Crabbe and other Olympic champs and Lex Barker have also played in the theatrical skein.

Moroccan Govt.'s Got TV Film Production Yen Designed for U.S.

Paris, Aug. 7.

The new independent Moroccan government is showing interest in tv film production. New studios have been built in Casablanca which have been equipped with modern U. S. equipment.

Report is that a Moroccan production unit will be ready within a few weeks. Jean Paul Blondeau, Gallic producer and owner of "Dollar a Second," indicated here that he was the first to reach agreement with the Moroccan group in Rabat for a series of tv films to be produced exclusively in Morocco.

First skein will be titled "Sheherazade of the 1,000 and One Nights," and will be shot with full Moroccan government support. It will be essentially for U. S. consumption, with an American cast.

Ted Hudes, Blondeau's U. S. rep, is now here and is returning to N. Y. next week to ink some American players for lead and supporting roles. Blondeau is understood to be throwing out feelers for Alfred Drake or possibly John Raitt, with a name Italo actress as femme lead.

Washington, Aug. 7.

A substantial expansion of Hullinger Productions, Inc., and a change of name to Hullinger-Casselberry Productions, Inc., has just been announced by the D. C. firm which produces films, mainly for television.

Firm has just been retained to produce the 1956-57 series of Drew Pearson's filmed "Washington Merry-Go-Round" programs for tv. It will also film both the Democratic and Republican National Conventions for the U. S. Information Agency. The convention films will be distributed abroad, for both television and theatrical showings.

Edwin Ware Hullinger, company's president, announced that Dr. William S. Casselberry becomes board chairman. Casselberry and partner Lee Mytinger market "Nutrilite." Among other changes in the expansion program:

A branch office has been opened in Baltimore, with William B. Crane, former Baltimore advertising and publicity exec, in charge.

Arthur F. Moore is the new head of the animation department. He is a script writer and ad man, formerly with Young & Rubicam and the Joseph Katz Agency.

took us 12 years to reach a decision on one rule-making procedure."

To the assembled broadcasters he spoke specifically about regulation of programs by FCC. "I feel that there is a need to clarify the atmosphere somewhat in this field," he declared. "First, I would like to banish from your minds the so-called 'bugaboo of censorship.' There is no basis for any such fear on the part of the broadcast industry—from the Commission, at any rate. In ruling out censorship by the FCC, the Congress wrote a guarantee that Governmental regulations would not abridge the free flow of ideas."

Bartley, who has been a dissenter on many controversial issues before the FCC favors regulation of political time in this presidential year and suggested that stations block off a certain number of hours for political campaigning—"and no more." He advised a wise management policy so stations that plan ahead won't get trapped.

"The more the concentration of station ownership the greater the danger of regulation," Bartley said. "The networks need more stations but beyond that I don't go along. I am not opposed to station ownership in the same town by newspapers, but it is interesting to note that some papers are horrible on slanting the news while their stations take a safe, middle road on controversial issues."

000 tv sets. A 14-inch set costs about $200 in American dollars, a 21-incher, $350. The video fare is about 60% on film. Radio operates 18½ hours a day, with the time being sold in segments of half-hours or less. No advertising sponsor is permitted to buy more than 30 minutes at a time and the bulk of the programs are divided into 10-and-20-minute blocks. On radio, about three-quarters of the programs are recorded, with one-fourth live fare.

There is no censorship of advertising copy by official sources, but the broadcasters themselves have set up self-imposed restrictions on copy claim. Patent medicines are accepted as sponsors, but if extravagant claims are made for a product, that copy is toned down or the product forced off the air. With this self-censoring of copy, the industry has no fears of government taboos.

Com'l TV in Britain Ups Giveaway Coin, Accents Pix Features

London, Aug. 7.

Full length feature films on Sunday afternoons and a doubling of the prize money on the "64,000 Question" show are the main new features of the autumn schedule for Associated TeleVision, weekend commercial programmers in London and weekday operators on the Midlands outlet.

First of the feature films, which will be screened on Sept. 16, will be "The First of the Few," starring the late Leslie Howard and David Niven. Other titles are being withheld for the time being, but details will be released in the next few weeks. All the pix will be in the oldie class.

On the previous day (Sept. 15) ATV will double the potential top prize of the "64,000 Question" by raising the prize units from sixpence (7 cents) to a shilling (14 cents). The top would net approximately $9,000, far and away the biggest giveaway on British tv.

Among new program series being launched in the fall will be "The Adventures of Sir Lancelot" and "The Buccaneers," both British made and already sold to the U.S.; "Annie Oakley," "The Adventure of Aggie," "Brave Eagle," "The Errol Flynn Show" and a science fiction feature entitled "The Strange World of Planet X." ATV will also be running "Do You Trust Your Wife?" with a prize of £2 a week ($5.60) for life.

Among the top features being retained by ATV will be "Sunday Night at the London Palladium," "The Adventures of Robin Hood," "I Love Lucy" and the Douglas Fairbanks series.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Jack Benny and his crew traveled over 5,000 miles to get a shot of Rome's famed Fountain of Trevi for one of his forthcoming tv shows and almost had to return to fake it in the studio. Just as the crew under Parke Levy and Hilliard Marks was about to shoot a cordon of police appeared to kill the operation. Reason: their permit was a general one good for shooting anywhere in Italy, but not a local one which is required here. Quick use of the telephone by Count Sigmund Fago Golfarelli of ENIT, press chief of the national tourist office, and American Vice-Consul Robert Gibbons saved the situation. Footage will take less than two minutes in tv programs but was important to the gag.

Three publishers thought enough of Ford Foundation's "Omnibus" series of last season to put parts of the video show in print. Decisions all seem to have come in a rush, but the key strategem, by book publisher Houghton-Mifflin Co., will be to convert the text of three Joseph N. Welch programs on The Constitution into two books, a text for schools and civic groups and a trade edition.

Publisher is keeping verbatim scripts, which can be dramatized. Title of the editions will be "The Constitution." Original tv series was prepared by Pulitzer Prize historian Richard Hofstadter and the "Omnibus" staff.

This month, Atlantic Monthly is giving the cover and lead feature to another "Omnibus" highlight, an interview last winter with scribe James Thurber. Vogue, also in August, has a feature on "Omni" data. It will be a reprint of the ballet script used by Agnes DeMille. Both mags, a Ford Foundation spokesman said, will use exact wordage of the tv shows.

Don McNeil is continuing with his practice of giving the mike boys from the outlying stations a crack at the big time whenever he takes a few days off as host of ABC's "Breakfast Club." For example, this week McNeill is off to New York to sub on CBS-TV's "I've Got a Secret" tonight (Wed.) He's staying over the balance of the week and has lined up three "new voices" to helm the "Club" during his absence.

a deodorant commercial. In place of Ford on "Producers' Showcase," NBC brought in John Hancock Insurance and a Buick one-shot to make up most of the coin deficit. In shifting Chevy's Bob Hope-Dinah Shore hour showcases to Sunday, it paved the way for Chesterfield's moving into the Tuesday night sked with "Noah's Ark."

Dodge pullout from Danny Thomas' "Make Room For Daddy" and "Break The Bank" dealt a serious blow to ABC, but "Daddy" will be back in business, sans auto coin but very much sponsored, while "Bank," incidentally, shifts over to NBC under Benrus-Lanolin Plus auspices to fill the Tuesday night 10:30 gap occasioned by the switch of "People Are Funny" to Saturday 7:30.

It's true that Sunday afternoon poses a sponsor problem for the networks, and it's in this area of programming that—at least the webs hope—the still uncommitted Detroit coin will come to the rescue. CBS won't be mad if Ford came through with its talked-of coin to get the new "Seven Lively Arts" off the ground, while NBC is still relying on General Motors to rally once more around "Wide Wide World."

Dr. Keys says he's aware that many video fans' temptation and tendency are to consume beer and other beverages and to munch cheese and crackers and other food and candy while sitting before their small home screens.

Also, many of these people are inclined to cut down on their exercise, he points out. Moreover, the suggestive video commercials often provoke people into food and beverage indulgencies at the watching time.

"This contributes to overweight and aggravates the weight problem," says Dr. Keyes. "And in this way tv may be doing a disservice to the national and individual. There are people who are watching tv at exercise's expense and their eating after and between meals makes for excessive poundage, too."

Shortage of engineers is hitting the FCC as well as the electronics industry. Agency issued an urgent call last week for experienced radio-tv engineers to fill vacancies in its Broadcast Bureau at salaries ranging from $4,480 to $7,055.

Need is "acute," Commission said, for engineers with extensive radio experience. Agency will consider applicants without basic engineering college education if they have considerable professional training.

Sarnoff's remarks were echoed by Carleton D. Smith, NBC veepee and general manager of WRC and WRC-TV, who pointed to the development as having particular significance to "official Washington." The color tv era, he noted, will now include members of the cabinet, Congress and other personalities of national importance.

When the facilities are completed in the fall of 1957, Smith added, the majority of WRC-TV local live shows will be telecast in color. The schedule will be expanded as advertiser and consumer interest in the Washington market, the ninth largest in the nation, develops.

The new WRC plant will have three tv studios, the largest of which will be 60 x 100 feet. It will also contain three radio studios. An antenna nearly 500 feet high will rise from the site.

anced," Doerfer asserted the decision "will permit others to dispense entirely with any sustaining programs, the method commonly used to provide without cost local services for non-profit organizations."

Since the Commission failed to order a hearing in the WQAM case, he said, "I am in no position to state that this applicant is not within his rights to program as he pleases. Without benefit of argument as to the powers of the Commission to reconcile conflicting legal viewpoints. I cannot say that this Commission is evading any responsibility. But that time has come, if it has not long since passed, to make a final determination."

Referring to programs by Mid-Continent which the Commission charged had the effect of "purchasing" the audience, Comr. Doerfer declared: "It may be of no concern to this Commission what promotional stunts a broadcaster employs to attain a large viewing (sic) audience. The throwing of dollar bills from an office building into a busy intersection is solely a problem for the local traffic court. Treasure hunts in public libraries are the problems of the local library board. Whether the odds of finding any treasure are so great as to amount to a lottery is wholly within the province of local authorities.

"But the use of radio broadcasting to promote these stunts, taken in connection with the intent not to broadcast any educational, religious, talk or discussion programs (WTIX New Orleans) raises a serious question as to whether or not this pattern of conduct may not be an inducement to other broadcasters to adopt similar methods' to the end that all broadcasting frequencies are no longer to be regarded as a 'public trust' in the hands of licensees but solely a mercantile business operated for maximum profits."

This is the "crux" of the problem raised in the WQAM case, Doerfer asserted. The Commission, he concluded, "should have taken this opportunity to determine first the extent of its powers to require a broadcast license to be used as a public trust, and, if so, then to determine whether or not this broadcaster and others may convert the 'public trust concept' into a pure business enterprise."

Sale of WQAM or WIOD was required by the FCC when it granted Biscayne Television Corp. the authorization for the Channel 7 tv station in Miami. The Knight and Cox newspaper interests (Miami Daily News), which own WIOD, together with former NBC board chairman Niles Trammell, own Biscayne.

what's coming every night, a carryover of the radio concept. It's better to keep the viewer guessing on what he'll see rather than have a cut-and-dried pattern of sameness. It's a bad idea when when everyone knows what's coming."

Despite the heavy losses of last season, "Matinee Theatre," the daytime color hour strip will be continued next season and so will Steve Allen stay in Sunday night contention against Sullivan, said Weaver. "Wide Wide World," a Weaver creation, will be gradually expanded, he said, and at least one from Europe via kine has been scheduled for next season.

Doesn't Matter If It's Live Or on Film: Pulse

Pulse Inc. claims that live vs. film "is of little importance" in determining what viewers watch, even though audience preference lies with live programming on television. The research house completed a special survey among 500 men and 500 women in N. Y. Features were not included in the study.

Survey finds that 51% of the homescreeners prefer watching a program that is live. Only 7% favor film, with the remaining 42% having no preference.

Only 17%, reports Pulse, felt that the fact of a tv show being live or film played any part in determining whether they watched it. Pulse feels that there is "considerable confusion" among viewers about what shows are done live and which are on film. A check of Pulse's top 10 half-hours showed that 49% didn't know whether many of them that they'd seen were on film or live. "Red Skelton Show" was one instance. Among other shows, 42% of the watchers thought "Mama" was on film; 29% said Groucho Marx was live, and 25% believed Phil Silvers was live. Nonetheless, only 3% incorrectly classified "What's My Line" and 7 "Person to Person" as film programs.

money had been found in order to break up the tangle.

Early clues by Cullen last week had a gaggle of WRCA listeners out in the wee hours of the morning with flashlights. The crowd surrounded the N. Y. Public Library at 42d St. in a wild goose chase. At another time, Broadway Maintenance, the N. Y. electric service for street lights, issued a complaint to the station that people were taking lights apart seeking the voucher.

The audience promotion contest, which began clues on the third $1,000 hideaway last Friday, soon after had a throng gathered at the Central Park Zoo. Partial clue was "Grass abounds where I am around." But early searchers were off in their calculations; two Southern belles living in Greenwich Village, found the third bill in the mouth of a fish statue at Manhattan's Battery.

The N. Y. Times carried three stories as of Friday on the contest on various winners, etc. Tribune headlined affaire d' giveaway last week too. And spot coverage in other N. Y. dailies was quite extensive, somewhat reminiscent of the early days of $64,000 Question."

"Finders Keepers" will run for four feeks, according to initial planning, but may run longer. Promotion covered rating week, which ends today (Wed.).

many of the lines related to that period.

The tele critics seemed even more kindly disposed to Borge when it was pointed out that he got £1,000 ($2,800) for this session, but received $100,000 for a similar stint on CBS-TV a couple of months ago.

A Real Drunken Success

Copenhagen, Aug. 7.

Victor Borge's current visit to his homeland has been a prolonged ovation marred by a single incident of considerable embarrassment but with a happy ending.

Borge showed up for a gratis concert in the new Koncertsal within the downtown Tivoli Gardens. This was the fulfillment of a promise the entertainer had made a Danish doctor friend. His audience was some 2,000 children's doctors attending a convention in Copenhagen. The performance started very late following an exuberant banquet.

Delegates from countries not understanding either (a) the English language or (b) Borge's brand of piano comicking interrupted with whistling, catcalls and general hubbub and Borge finally walked off. The disturbers—about 20—were then given the Danish equivalent of an American heave-ho.

A considerable embarrassed hiatus ensued but Borge finally returned, having changed from tails to street attire. He was so warmly greeted that the fiasco was transformed into a warm-hearted triumph lasting until after midnight.

Borge thereafter played three performances in the same hall for the Copenhagen general public but this time used the Danish language.

If time permits he will return to play some of the small cities of Denmark, following commitments to entertain U. S. troops in Germany. He was unable to accept an offer from the Danish television to give a show for its 25,000 sets.

Fort Worth—There were 585,000 tv sets in the Fort Worth-Dallas area as of Aug. 1, according to WBAP-TV Director Harold Hough.

flank and the scaffold in the center of the hall.

But it's readily apparent the CBS, NBC and ABC news masterminders are going allout to impart that "different look" to their respective convention packages. They've already fanfared their portable minature cameras which will be toted among the delegates in the hunt for special pickups that will add spice, color and added individuality to their political spectrums.

The schemes aren't confined to the Buck Rogers minicam gadgetry which may or may not stand up in a jostling scramble on the crowded floor. With considerably less ballyhoo, the networks are installing "private" cameras in the radio-tv commentators' crows nest overhanging the speaker's rostum. Both NBC-TV and ABC-TV will have two lensers in their booths, and CBS-TV will have one.

Decision to rig the cameras in the back-of-the-hall location undoubtedly dates back to the Republican convention four years ago when ABC-TV bootlegged its own floor shots from a camera quietly installed in the gabbers' cubicle. At the time there were beefs aimed ABC's way, charging "violation" of the pool agreement. This year, all three are prepped for ad lib coverage from up in the rafters.

In '52, Guy Gabrielson, then Republican national chairman, sought to blow a traffic whistle on AM's "walkie talkies" and tv's "walkie lookies," claiming they were adding to the congestion in the convention aisles. For the upcoming Demo conclave, convention manager J. Leonard Reinsch has said, in effect, "Hop to it boys. Just be sure you're accredited and grounded properly."

So look for video's "cooperation" to end at the edge of the pool with lots of elbow pushing and "you saw it here first" claims emerging from the heat of the battle to score those scoops.

flated as much as 50%, at times, over net revenue.

Wants $ Payments Waived

At present, Mutual's station relations men are working hard getting stations to sign the web's newest affiliation contract, a big switcheroo from what affiliates have become accustomed to. Chief contract changes include a reduction in total network option hours from 60 to 35 hours a week, perhaps the one point the stations may accept wholeheartedly. But the other major change is what Mutual is banking on for its existence, and it may prove less palatable: Stations must pre-clear and waive dollar payments on two and three-quarter hours Monday through Friday, one hour Saturday and two hours Sunday.

The extent of success in inking the new contract is not known and it may be several more weeks before the network divulges how many stations have accepted it, either in part of wholly. None theless, Mutual execs have disclosed their feelings about the new contract. While they don't seem particularly worried, they paradoxically admit the contract is a "do or die" proposition. Mutual has over 540 stations on its lineup, but the execs say they don't care if contract demands drive the smaller stations out of the fold, because all they want are about the first 100 bigtime affiliates for national advertisers.

But the greatest resistance to network radio seems to be centering at present in the major markets, where these key affils are located. Some resist because they figure they can make a better buck through national spot and local sale, without network obligations. Others may simply object to Mutual's new contract formula. That, some people are conjecturing, is possibly why WHK decided to switch to NBC in Cleveland.

Since getting the smaller market radio affils to "buy" the new pact without hitches is not of vital importance, the success in the major markets is expected to determine how long Mutual will stay in biz. It has been pointed out that if MBS has to make too many compromises in key areas, it will hasten O'Neil's decision.

apolis and other cities, wherever they can be found. But if things move as expected at the Demo conclave, CBS-TV will start shifting personnel and equipment to S.F. by Thursday. "We already have 20 seats booked on airlines then," Thompson noted.

New one-man mobile tv remote units nicknamed "creepy-peepies" are being imported by CBS-TV from the French Intercontinental Electronics Corp., as well as a version developed by Lockheed Aircraft in Burbank, to help in convention coverage. According to present pool ground rules, these units cannot be used on the convention floor, and CBS-TV intends to abide by the rules so long as the other nets do so. Instead, the "creepy-peepies" will be used for hotel and airport interviews, with CBS-TV fielding three such units, plus one as a roving "crash" unit.

PATTERNS OF AMERICAN CULTURE: CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE NEGRO
With Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson
15 Mins., Sun.; 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WLIB, N.Y.

Well worth dialers' interest is this series of weekly lectures which WLIB, N.Y., is presenting in cooperation with the U. of Michigan. For the program content will review the history of the Negro's contribution to America's way of life from colonial times to the present. Among lecturers slated in weeks to come is Jesse Owens.

Initial airer Sunday (5) was a particularly enlightening 15 minutes inasmuch as Dr.Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard U., digressed somewhat from his overall topic of education to credit the Negro's strides in law over the last 25 years with advancing "his people's" civil rights.

He said he was especially proud of these gains because they centred in Howard U.'s law school. The educator recalled how the late Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis once advised him to train students "to recognize a good case of law involving civil rights of your people." The jurist, Dr. Johnson said, deplored the fact that poorly prepared cases had to be thrown out on technical deficiencies although the court was eager to consider the constitutional issues.

UNDER 21
With Jeanne Sauve, Paul Baylis, guests
Producer: Michael Hind-Smith
30 Mins.; Fri., 7:30 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Ottawa

Probing the minds of teeners can be a hectic experience with astounding results and not always with the results the probe is after. Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s new "Under 21" show sets up a panel of teeners for quizzing on various matters and from the initialer it looks like adults might learn something about their children's minds. First show, to start with, asked the panel what Teenagers were, and it was set at from 16 to 21 years of age. That settled, the inquiry got into the meat of its subject: what do teeners do with their leisure? The answers ranged through rock 'n' roll, television vs. books, vandalism and others.

There was no specific defence of rock 'n' roll but the panelists defended the acceptance of it by teeners and moppets, "We're past Benny Goodman," one said.

Television, said one panelist, made youngsters conscious of the times and its people but didn't allow improvement of grammar or literature unless the listeners concentrated on that angle—and who does? Vandalism was laid to the need for companionship inherent in all children, but whether they follow a black leather-jacket gang or the YMCA depended on environment and circumstances. They follow the gang, no matter where it goes or what it does, so they won't lose friends or make enemies.

Jeanne Sauve operated nicely as panel moderator, keeping the panelists talking, on the rails and alive throughout. Only difficulty arose from the similarity of her voice to those of the teeners, making it all but impossible to know when she was talking unless the camera was on her. Paul Baylis announced. Micheal Hind-Smith's production was okay, gabbers always clearly audible and camera working neatly to catch them as they talked.

"Under 21" stays for at least four shows, but if it keeps its questions exciting to garner catchy answers, it may return to the web. Panel used six teeners — three femme, three male — wisely selected for variance of opinion.

BIG WILSON
240 Mins.: Noon, Daily
KYW, Cleveland

If everybody doesn't already love a fat man, they'll certainly join the believers of the old saw after listening to "Big" (6 ft.-5 in., 280 pounds) Wilson, KYW's newest entrant into the disk jockey parade in Cleveland. Moving over from Philadelphia, Big Wilson is firmly entrenched in an across-the-board strip that starts at noon, Monday-thru-Friday, and changes slightly on Saturday and Sunday.

With a sharp sense of humor, an ability to say what has to be said briefly, and a definite mike personality, Big Wilson has already cut deeply into the platter-listening audience. Furthermore, his ability to tickle the ivories gives him an added asset in the shellac-spinning race. Wilson also does a 55-minute film spot at 5 p.m. on KYW-TV. Both shows reflect strong sponsor approval of the large-size quality offering.

PANORAMA
With Ted Knight
55 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Sat., 10 a.m.
Participating
WROW, Albany

Ted Knight, another of the newer mikemen who have noticeably raised the quality level at WROW, features production numbers, instrumentals and standards on a 55-minute program sandwiched between Geoff Davis' three-hour deejay stint and Arthur Godfrey's network show. For comedy and offbeat, purposes, Knight uses an alter voice. At times, this seems odd, almost out of place, in the musical background established. On other occasions, the fooling and quipping are mildly amusing, although rarely original.

Blocks have a rather slow tempo, probably deliberate. Selections from "The Student Prince" bulked large on one origination heard; from "Naughty Marietta," on another. Percy Faith orchestrals were also to the front, on the latter. Knight's voice is good, while his technique is generally sound. The second voice—addressing the first as "Theodore"—fits into spot commercials, too. When caught, board work on "Panorama" was sharp and skillful.

HARNESS RACING
With Bud Heber, Nick Stemmler
15 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 11:15 p.m.
UTICA CLUB BEER
WGY, Schenectady

The second summer of harness-casts from Vernon Downs (outside Utica) over a special network brings Bud Heber to the microphone as caller of two races, and Nick Stemmler as recapper of the night's card. Similar originations from the Saratoga Raceway for the past decade have indicated an air audience for the trotters and pacers, exists. The newer series seems to proceed on the assumption listeners are well acquainted with the sport and its participants. There is little, if any, explanation of technical points—at least, not when heard.

Program is competently handled, despite a little unevenness. One pickup was weak on the fidelity side, there being too much voice distortion. He accelerates his tempo during the second half of a race to build tension and uncertainty about the finish. Heber might use a more imaginative vocabulary; over-uses the phrase "does the driving."

a series of packages following its deal for the RKO library.

The more a tv station buys, the more that tv station remains in the feature film market—a principle dictated by a number of circumstances. Once the tv station has made a large investment in such programming, it has to protect its investment by adding "leaders" from other packages. Many of the large libraries and big packages contain "clinkers" and they just can't meet the competition of upgraded quality being poured in the market.

It isn't easy to draw back, either. Once a station, using time, effort and money in merchandising itself as a showcase for good quality features, has made a niche for itself with the viewing community, any retreat is costly.

Crosley's RKO Buys

Cincinnati, Aug. 7.

Crosley Broadcasting Corp. has signed a $1,500,000 deal with C & C Television Corp. for the rights to 371 RKO feature films.

The deal, which is for half of the total RKO library sold to Matty Fox, is for the four Crosley stations in Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and Atlanta. Programming of the newly-acquired features will begin immediately.

Part of the deal involves payment in time which will be utilized by International Latex in a pattern established in similar C & C Television deals.

gional deals) before concentrating on the smaller markets. Krasne said that his experience with syndicators has been that they make the big sales and ignore the little "bread and butter" pacts. Worst of it, he felt, was that the big deals in multi-station markets aren't as hard to make as the one-station market sales, so what's the sense in paying large distrib fees for easy sales? He said the reason why syndicators ignore little tv sales of telefilm is to give time to other packages they front for.

Gross said that the six-man sales unit of G-K will never work on sale of two series simultaneously. He hopes, when O. Henry enters rerun sales, new men can be hired to handle that facet solely, while the original six-man team concentrates on saturating a second series.

Eight of the O. Henry pix have been completed at G-K's California National Studios at an average outlay of $30,000 each. Twenty-five or six scripts have been completed on the stanza which should be ready for telecasting sometime this fall.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

The Four Lads: "The Bus Stop Song"-"A House With Love In It" (Columbia). Sock followup for the Four Lads' past three clickos in succession is "The Bus Stop Song." Tune, theme from the 20th-Fox pic "Bus Stop," is a jaunty folk-flavored item which the boys serve with plenty of appeal for the jock and juke trade. It'll rack up a big score. "A House With Love In It" is a change of pace ballad which comes across with lotsa impact.

Leroy Holmes Orch: "When the White Lilacs Bloom Again"-"The Last Wagon" (MGM). Current disk company scramble is for the "When the White Lilacs Bloom Again" instrumental out of Gerlabel. "The Blue Whistler," on the MGM flip, spotlights the Hyman technique with the blues idiom.

Eddie Fisher: "If I'm Elected (To Be the One You Love)"-"Oh My Maria" (RCA Victor). A love song set in a march tempo is the peg that could get Eddie Fisher off to a strong sales and spinning spurt. The song, "If I'm Elected," also has topical and novel values to pull it along. Fisher gives it an attractive belting treatment. "Oh My Maria" is a more orthodox entry that rates attention because of Fisher's rhythmic styling and its similarity to a previous Fisher click, "Oh My Papa."

Rover Boys: "Young Love" — "From A School Ring To A Wedding Ring" (ABC-Paramount). The Rover Boys are back with a good two-sided affair after a successful ride with "Graduation Day." Group has fine takeoff chance with "Young Love," a neatly etched ballad offering. Theme of the back side gives it plenty of spinning values for the teenage set.

Dick Jacobs Orch: "Theme From 'East of Eden'"-"The Seven Wonders of the World" (Coral). Coupling of pic themes adds up to okay spinning fodder for the jocks but commercial aspects are iffy. "East of Eden" waxing is tied in with the fan buildup for the late James Dean, who appeared in the film. On the "Seven Wonders" side, the voice of Lowell Thomas is heard introing the piece. It wasn't really necessary.

Betty Wells: "Young Man"-"Goodbye, So Long, I'm Gone" (ABC-Paramount). Newcomer Betty Wells is a slick exponent of the rockin' beat. She belts with solid rhythmic power that makes you sit up and take notice. The "Young Man" side seems to have the better getaway potential. Side shows off her vocal punch to advantage. Reverse also is in the high octane groove.

The Goons: "I'm Walking Backwards For Christmas"-"Bluebottle Blues" (London). This is a frenzied novelty coupling out of the British disk mill. It's an offbeat group working on offbeat material but many. It's a melodic and fetching piece that sticks to the ear. It will be a tough race for the breakaway side but Leroy Holmes may have the edge due to his top-flight orch treatment. Helmut Zacharias, who started the whole thing via a Polydor release in Germany, gets a try at the U.S. market via Decca while Florian Zabach is also in the running on the Mercury label. Both Zacharias and Zabach stress the violin values of the tune. On the MGM flip, Holmes hits a western motif tagged "The Last Wagon."

Karen Chandler-Jimmy Wakely: "Crazy Arms"-"Tonight You Belong to Me" (Decca). The recently teamed up Karen Chandler and Jimmy Wakely are off to a fast start with "Crazy Arms." Their solid harmony job gives this country-flavored tune a wide appeal. It's sure to pull in solid spins all over. They are in a brighter groove with "Tonight You Belong To Me," and it, too, will draw lots of turntable time.

Dick Hyman Orch: "One Finger Piano" - "The Blue Whistler" (MGM). Arresting rhythmic beat of "One Finger Piano," as whipped up by Dick Hyman should pull this side to the top. It's a catching instrumental effort that moves at just the right gait for jock and juke action. Hyman's harpsichord piano is highlighted with a vocal effort by The Naturals. Tune also gets a shipshape treatment by Freddy Martin on the RCA Victor

Longhair Reviews

Roy Harris: Symphony No. 7; "1933" (Columbia). Two massive, powerful symphonies by Roy. Harris add to the stature of the American classical repertory. The No. 7, which was premiered last year, is delineated with color and sweep by the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. The Symphony 1933 is heard in an old but still compelling performance by the Boston Symphony under the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Robert Wagner Chorale: "Folk Songs of The World" (Capitol). A neatly arranged collection of English and European folk songs, most of them widely known, delivered in a pleasing, straightforward style by the Robert Wagner Chorale with Harve Presnell and Salli Terri as soloists. Informative liner notes, with some line drawings, are done by Stephen Longstreet.

Mozart: Symphonies No. 36 & 38 (Epic). Two of Mozart's most popular and charming symphonies, the "Linz" and the "Prague" in light, precisely executed readings by the Vienna Symphony conducted by Willem Van Otterloo. It's another fine contribution by Epic to the Mozart bicentennial.

Werner Egk: "The Magic Violin" (Decca). Excerpts from Werner Egk's modern opera, "The Magic Violin," a work in the popular theatre vein with no contemporary abstractions or difficulties, brightly rendered by the chorus and orchestra of the Bavarian State Opera conducted by the composer.

Album Reviews

Michael Antoine Orch: "And So to Bed" (RCA Victor). This is one of the many albums that U.S. music publisher Robert Mellin cut abroad for peddling to the U.S. disk companies. It's a fine example of what's being done overseas to produce those rich instrumental sounds that are earmarked for the growing mood music market. The tunes, all newies, are easy on the ear and make for solid deejay programming.

Cliff Edwards: "Ukulele Ike Sings Again" (Disneyland). Cliff Edwards, a disk-selling phenom in the 1920s, revives 16 of his past hits for an updated going over. He gets a lot of exuberance into the vocal riffs and it may even please today's rock 'n' roll crowd. He gets a peppy backing from a hip group labelled Wonderland Jazz Band.

Ed McCurdy: "When Dalliance Was In Flower" (Elektra). The tunes collected by Ed McCurdy for this folk album come mostly from the Elizabethan England era. They're lusty, whimsical, risque and ribald and McCurdy delivers with the proper accents. Erik Darling supplies a neat banjo assist.

Bernie Wayne Orch: ". . . and Then I wrote." (ABC-Paramount). In the past few years Bernie Wayne has been turning out some lilting compositions which have been compiled in this set for the cleffer to supply his own musical interpretation. The melodies are pleasant and rhythmic and are showcased with taste and style. For added dressing there's a knockout photo of Jayne Mansfield on the album cover.

Julie Wilson: "Love" (Dolphin). The vocal stuff Julie Wilson has been delivering in posh niteries and Broadway legits (currently "The Pajama Game") has been captured on wax for good results. Her warbling sets an intriguing romantic mood as she goes over such familiars as "From This Moment On," "Don't Ever Leave Me" and "He Was Too Good to Me." Arrangements and orch backing are by Phil Moore.

Serena Shaw: "Cry My Love" (Rama). Newcomer Serena Shaw fills her wide vocal range with plenty of s.a. When she goes into the upper register, she's reminiscent of Yma Sumac, but for the most part she sticks to the more popular range. She works with such oldies as "Love for Sale," and "St. Louis Blues" as well as a flock of originals by Rudy de Saxe.

MGRS.' LOW BOOTY ON ORCHS

Gov't Still on Payola Prowl

The Internal Revenue Dept. is still probing Tin Pan Alley for evidence of the payola loot. The T-Men have been combing the books of the top publishers looking for evidence of undeclared income from the recipients of the cash favors.

The Government agents, incidentally, are hep to the music biz operation and speak about "taking" and the "cut-in" like Brill Bldg. habitues. They are not concerned with the various "legitimate" payola devices, such as writing and publishing cut-ins on tunes, just so long as its declared to Uncle Sam. They are interested in nailing down the sub rosa cash payoffs which are listed on the publisher's book as "expenses" and are not listed in the recipients' gross income.

If there is no direct evidence, the Government can crack down via the "net worth" approach which matches the standard of living against the declared incomes.

Major Diskeries Pulling Out Of R&B Competition As Indies Hold On

The major record companies are throwing in the towel in the rhythm & blues competition with the indies.

It's not a complete pullout from the r&b field, yet, but there are definite signs on an ease-up and a slow withdrawal from the rivalry for the r&b dollar. This is putting the beat back into the hands of the indies who originated it and were able to withstand the onslaught of the major companies' promotion pressure.

For the last couple of years, the indies had to buck the johnny-come-lately majors, which began to make inroads into the field via covers of disks the indies originated. In several instances, then, the cover jobs by the big companies stole the play away from the indies. In the past few months, however, the indies have been topping the majors because the deejays, juke operators and consumer have been sticking with the original version.

One of the prime examples of a topline diskery relinquishing the r&b field to the indies is Coral Records. Bob Thiele, Coral's artist & repertoire bossman. For some time Thiele watched the r&b charts for indie platters that were break-

Aussie's Top Disks

Sydney, Aug. 1.

Disk sales continue at a very good pace, according to key music stores.

Current hits with teenagers presently include "Poor People of Paris," "Rock and Roll Waltz," "Rock Island Line," "Woman in Love," "The Great Pretender," "Moonglow," "Jukebox Baby," "Dungeree Doll." "Dixieland."

Epic Yens Actors Who Can Chirp 'Em for Teeners

Epic Records is on a drive to round up dramatic actors who can sing for disk exposure. Only prerequisite according to Marv Holtzman, label's pop artists & repertoire chief, is that the thesps have some teenage appeal.

Holtzman figures that wrapping up a waxing deal with a performer active in other media will give his Epic platters an extra promotional push and added exploitation values. And in the case of pix, especially, it virtually insures a soundtrack album or at least a title song disk if the pact with the artist is on a solid exclusive basis.

Label has already worked out a crooning deal with Tony Perkins and expects to wrap up a pact with Sal Mineo.

Perkins came to the attention of Holtzman when he crooned "A Little Love Can Go A Long, Long Way" on the teledrama, "Joey," on NBC-TV a couple of months ago. Mineo, on the other hand, hasn't shown off his crooning style yet, but Holtzman figures that his exposure on tv and pix ("Rebel Without a Cause," "Crime In The Streets," "Somebody Up There Likes Me") is building him into hot teenage fave.

AFM to Launch Branch in L.A.

The American Federation of Musicians is prepping the setup of a Coast branch in Los Angeles on a trial basis. Herman D. Kenin, member of the Federation's exec board from Portland, Ore., has been given the special assignment of establishing the office.

Purpose of the move is to ascertain whether there is a need to create a permanent branch there in order to eliminate possible difficulties encountered by all locals in that area because of the time differential between it and New York, where the AFM's headquarters are based.

It's expected that the Coast office will begin functioning by Sept. 1. Kenin, who is prexy of the Portland Musician's Mutual Assn. (Local 99), will resign that office to take over the new assignment.

Spirals Shellacs 'Em For Unique in a Production, Distribution Tie A La Pix

The record business is now getting a counterpart of Hollywood's independent producer setup.

Taking a leaf from the film indies, Spirals Unlimited has been formed to produce wax packages for distribution by an established label. Spiral's kickoff tie-in will be with Unique Records, RKO subsid, which is already set to distribute six Spiral-made albums this fall.

Spirals was formed recently by Herbert J. Morrison, personal manager; Joe Castro, pianist; writer A. S. Cooper and publicist Art Franklin. Ted Collins will act as con-

WILLARD ALEXANDER IN EXPANSION MOVES

The Willard Alexander Agency is swinging into its fall operation with an added stress on the bands and acts division plus a concentrated drive into the tv and motion picture fields.

In line with stepped-up activity, bossman Alexander has promoted Jack Green and Irv Denkin to veepee status and has brought in Ira Sidell from the Coast to work with Rudy Viola in the jazz department. Green and Denkin specialize in bands and acts.

Alexander also plans to enlarge his New York office at newer quarters, as yet undetermined, and is expanding his Chicago operation with the addition of new men to assist Chi office chief Fred Dale. He's also mulling the opening of a Hollywood office. His Coast activity is now worked out in conjunction with Harold Julian.

5% INSUFFICIENT INCENTIVE: KAYE

By MIKE GROSS

Biggest obstacle in the way of putting the band biz back to its heyday stature of the 1930s is the 5% restriction for managers on bands' take slapped down by the American Federation of Musicians. That's the opinion of orch leader Sammy Kaye, who believes that the manager is the most important part of the band business.

The 5% limit on a manager's earnings from orch properties is keeping key men out of the field. Kaye attributes his longtime standing as one of the country's top orch names to the managers with whom he's been lined up—Jim Peppe, Mike Nidorf and currently Dave Krengle. If the band business is made more financially attractive to managers and investors, Kaye claims, there'll be a noticeable upbeat in band activity around the country. In the late '30s, he said, new bands were sparked and backed by established orch leaders but that practice has been stopped because there's not enough money to be made from the investment. At one time, Kaye added, he and the late Glenn Miller and Tommy Dorsey had considered forming a combine to back new bands. "Now," he admitted, "I won't put a penny in a new band."

The development of new orchestras is the key to keeping the band business on a payoff level. Despite this managerial drawback, Kaye believes that the business can still pick up some of the oldtime excitement. Factors which will bring this about, he pointed out, are 1) continued interest in dancing,

Salkin Heading Decca Promotion

Martin P. Salkin has taken over Mike Conner's spot as director of publicity and promotion for Decca Records. Conner ankled his post last week after 11 years with the diskery.

Salkin will also head Decca's network of promotion staffers in key locations around the country, with all company disk jockey promotion under his supervision. Staffers at present are Bud Katzel, eastern rep; Don Foreman, midwest; George Sherlock, Coast; and Harry Silverstein, southern territory. Ann-Elizabeth Reisman will continue to handle publicity as assistant to Salkin. Salkin has some longrange revamping plans for the publicity-promotion setup but he doesn't expect to get around to it for several months.

He joined Decca six years ago and has been associated with its production, recording and sales departments.

Hamblen's 'Unfair' Rap

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

A venture into telepix has put Stuart Hamblen Music Co. on the Screen Actors Guild's "unfair list."

SAG national exec secretary John L. Dales reported Hamblen had hired three girl singers for the vidpix and has failed to pay them, despite repeated promises. Members were instructed not to work for the firm until further notice.

'Play It Safe' Programming Boosts BMI's Hit Tune Performance Coin

Indie stations' concentration on hits is boosting the perforance take for BMI's top tunes. With the deejay stress on the top 20 or 30 songs increasing steadily, a BMI hit can now earn as much as $18,000 or $20,000 in performance money. This is close to double the amount a top tune carned a few years ago.

The turntable accent on the hits is primarily a BMI boom. Effect on ASCAP is less noticeable because its logging is pegged mainly on network radio and tv plugs BMI., on the other hand, logs many indie stations and that's where the deejays swing the spinning trend.

Move toward programming the hits is pegged on the deejay and station manager's desire to play it safe. There was a time when the deejays were given free reign to devote their turntable time to discovering and unveiling new platter material. The indie managers, however, decided that the dialers and the sponsors would be happier with the steady programming of already established hits.

This doesn't mean that there's a blanket shutout on the spinning of newly released tunes. Although it's tougher today to get a new disk started, there are still enough powerful deejays around the country to give a new platter that added spinning push to get it off the ground. Once it starts rolling, the disk is headed for a bigger ride than ever before via the flock of deejay shows that program only the top 20 or 30 songs of the week.

GOP-Dem Disks

Latest entry in the political sweepstages on disks is "Pick the Winner," which sits on the musical fence in the upcoming contest between the Dems and the GOP.

One side of the 12-inch LP is pro-GOP with such songs as "I've Got Those New Deal, Fair Deal, Square Deal Blues," "After the Brawl Is Over," What He Used to Be." On the "Eisenhower Hold That Line," "Harry Done 'Em Wrong," and "Ole Wayne Morse, He Ain't What He Used to Be." ## 'Saucer' Settling Case Privately Possible suit against "The Flying Saucer" is being averted via an out-of-court settlement negotiated between Luniverse Records, producers of the disk, and Julian T. Abeles, representing the ASCAP and BMI publishers. Negotiations, which are still under way, are centered on Luniverse taking out a regular license and paying royalties on the 19 tunes parodied on the platter.

When the rock 'n' roll novelty was first launched a couple of weeks ago, the MPPA moved in to stop it alleging that there was an infringement on the ASCAP and BMI tunes utilized on the platter. "Flying Saucer" was written and published by Bob Buchanan and

Test Suit Vs. U. Studio Over Right To Fire Balky (5th Amendment) AFMer

Los Angeles, Aug. 7.

American Federation of Musicians' Local 47 has filed a precedental suit in Municipal Court here, seeking to test whether a studio can fire a contract musician for invoking the Fifth Amendment in refusing to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee. Plaintiff in question is Manuel Compinsky, one of three sidemen released by the studio following their refusal to testify before hearings held here in April. Suits on behalf of the others are expected to follow.

Local 47 emphasized its unalterable opposition to Communism but declared that as a union it must take steps to "protect" musicians from arbitrary action by producers. Key to the action is the fact that the studio fired Compinsky for "good and sufficient cause," without bothering to specify what the cause was. Union contends that the contract with the studio provides that no musician may be fired except for cause, and that cause must be spelled out by the firm.

Compinsky received permission from AFM to file the suit against Universal Pictures. Complaint asks $2,249.80 damages, contending that amount still is due Compinsky from the studio.

R 'n' R Invading British Market

London, Aug, 7.

Britain is beginning to feel the influence of the rock 'n' roll craze. Within the past week there have been a series of events which have given the novelty a hefty boost: (1) the first two rock 'n' roll outfits have been formed; (2) the Bill Haley picture, "Rock Around the Clock," is having its London preem; and (3) disk sales are rising.

Rock 'n' roll centres are being opened up and down the country and bandleaders are being harassed by requests for more and more new numbers. London is still trailing the States on the craze, and it seems unlikely that any mass-hysteria will replace the present level-headed reception it's been given. Tony Crombie will front his re-formed group when they move into circulation on Aug. 31 with a three-day stand in Manchester. As a six- or seven-piece outfit, they are enlisting the help of two colored Americans brought over to teach them the beat. Cliff Lawrence, vocalist with the Eric Delaney orchestra, hopes to enter his own six-piece combo into the field about the same time as Crombie. He'll have trumpet, tenor, drums, guitar, bass and piano.

TED HEATH PLANS 2D U.S. TOUR IN '57

London, July 31.

The Ted Heath orchestra which undertook a 30-day tour of the States last April and May, and grossed $83,000 (as part of a package show) during their first week, is expected to pay a return visit next spring.

Negotiations were instituted before the end of their last tour when Nat King Cole, June Christy, the Four Freshmen, Gary Morton and Patty Thomas formed the rest of the package. But this time, the band hopes to pound the West Coast beats. Stan Kenton came to Britain as the U. S. half of the last reciprocal, but on what basis the next Heath tour is to take place has yet to be arranged.

Marches Riding High in Germany; Hitler's Favorite Among Bestsellers

Berlin, Aug. 7.

It seems as though there's currently here a renaissance for German marches. "Alte Kameraden" (Old Comrades), for example, is a bestseller with most domestic diskeries. And Philips has, besides "Comrades," in "Badenweiler Marsch" another top item at present. Latter, curiously, used to be Hitler's favorite march and which he, after 1933, made a "monopoly" march, i.e. could only be played on special occasions, such as when he—the Fuehrer—came along.

Heinz Dembeck, chief sales agent for Philips records in the Berlin area, said that nostalgia probably is the reason why so many of his buyers are so fond of marches. Best march sales, he added, are registered in Berlin's Zehlendorf district, knowingly a place where many former generals, retired Government officials and conservative-minded families are living. The younger set, Dembeck pointed out, has no special predilection for marches.

Philips' current bestsellers are "Moritat" and "Faithful Hussar" (both Louis Armstrong), "Skin

Summer Circuit Jazz Festivals New Coin Riff for Top Tootlin' Cats

As far as jazzmen are concerned, the sprouting of festivals all over the country is the best thing that's happened since the spread of the small jazz clubs. At a time when bookings are generally off, the festivals are providing a regular summer circuit for a flock of jazz soloists and groups.

The salary scales at such jazz blowouts are generally very good. Rate for a name quartet at a festival is around $600. That's for a couple of numbers on two or three nights. The same group would get about the same woring for a full week at a jazz club.

While the Newport Festival is credtied with kicking off the whole movement towards jazz under the stars, the upcoming New York Jazz Festival at Randall's Island Aug. 24-25 is making a bid to become the top annual jazz event. In fact, it's understood that some friction is developing between the Newport and N.Y. festival producers.

The N.Y. fete, meantime, is getting full backing from the local authorities. A big parade down Broadway with some literal tailgate jazzmen will be held preceding the Randall's Island gig, which is being tied in with the "N.Y. Is A Summer Festival" theme. Don Friedman and Ken Joffe are producing the N.Y. event.

Crowell-Collier's Josefowitz Buy Breathes New Life Into Disk Clubs

The Crowell-Collier drive into the record club field was stepped up last week with acquisition of the Concert Hall Society and four record clubs operated by David and Samuel Josefowitz.

The record clubs, Musical Masterpiece Society, Chamber Music Society, Jazztone Society and Opera Society, have combined mailing lists of over 600,000 LP buyers. Over 1,000 recordings are included in the transaction with a repertoire that covers the fields of opera, symphony, jazz, chamber music and light classics.

The acquisition of the Josefowitz record operations, which began in 1946 at Concert Hall Society Inc., will complement the formation of additional C-C record clubs being planned by William H. Fowler, who general manages the recording club subsid for the publishing outfit. Fowler joined C-C last March when he ankled his veepee post at Capitol Records.

According to Paul C. Smith, C-C prexy, a concentrated drive to expand the present clubs will be made through extensive use of C-C publications (Collier's and Women's Home Companion), company mailing lists and the C-C radio and tv stations when available. "We feel," he said, "that records provide an ideal communications medium; one that will complement our communications efforts in magazine and book publishing, and our recent entry into radio and television."

The Josefowitz brothers will devote their time to their other actives in the musical, chemical and pharmaceutical fields which were not included in the C-C buy-up. They'll work with the C-C disk club subsid in an advisory capacity for an indefinite time.

Deep" (Duke Ellington) and "Teenagers" (Dan Terry). Latter, incidentally, leads also currently the RIAS-Hit-parade here.

Philips Records, headed in Berlin by Erich Maschewski, is handling a large part of the U.S. Columbia repertoire. From Jan. 1 on, Philips will take over the total Columbia program. As to the recently established Bertelsmann disk cycle, which has become a special topic around here, Philips is not willing to supply this or any other cycle with disks. As also the other big diskeries, including Deutsche Grammophon and Telefunken, won't tie up with Bertelsmann, latter has to be on the lookout for other labels. It's expected that Bertelsmann will seek contact with foreign units which, so far, haven't taken up connection with the German recording industry.

Philips, incidentally, keeps a close eye on new artists. Among its latest discoveries is Leo Leandros, a Greek singer who was given an exclusive contract. Leandros follows the Latin-American style and has cut four songs so far, including "That Is Fiesta," "Black Rosita," "Conchita" and "Little Violetta."

2) recording bands developing own style, and 3) tv's acceptance of bands. "Radio developed the bands in the old days," he said, "and tv can do the same thing today."

Kaye looks on rock 'n' roll as a good thing from a bandman's point of view. His reasoning is that it's developing a dancing habit in the younger generation which will be carried on through later years. He also cited the deejay record hops as being instrumental factors in building a dancing populace.

Although many dance promoters have dropped out of the business in the past few years, Kaye pointed out that there are still plenty of top men around who are still bullish on the band biz. He singled out Tom Archer, midwestern promoter, as one of the key men who believes that there will always be a dance business and a profitable one, too. In the past five years, Archer has built three king-size ballrooms in Iowa. The new danceries are in Cedar Rapids, Sioux City and Des Moines.

On the economics side of the band biz, Kaye stated that an orch can no longer afford to sit down at a hotel for an extended date unless there are some tv deals around to supplement the income. The one-nighters can be profitable tours but these have to be carefully routed to keep the traveling expenses from adding up between dates. Even so, Kaye revealed, the jumps between dates nowadays are longer than ever.

Kaye recently wound up an extended one-nighter tour through the midwest and he's now prepping for a week's stand at Atlantic City's Steel Pier to be followed by a week at the Surf Club, Virginia Beach. A tv series is in the offing for the fall.

Dick Goodman. They also own the Luniverse label.

Warren Troup, attorney for Luniverse, also spiked a report that the Federal Communications Commission had stepped into the picture with an overall ban on the disk. "No action on the disk was ever made by the FCC," he stated. Buchanan & Goodman also issued a blanket license to stations around the country to play the disk assuring them that they were assuming no liability.

Meantime Luniverse record Corp. has filed papers in Albany, N. Y., to conduct a recording business. Capital stock is 200 shares, no par value.

Kid Ory, vet dixieland jazzman, has been signed to a recording pact by Norman Granz' Down Home label.

HMV Has Verve In Gt. Britain

London, Aug. 7.

Verve Records, American pop label launched by Norman Granz, will be released in Britain by HMV from August onwards.

The agreement follows recent discussions between Granz and EMI executives in London, and is undoubtedly tied up with the fact that RCA Victor is transferring from EMI to Decca next spring.

Meanwhile, Decca have renewed with Dot for another three years.

The American Music Conference has launched its seventh annual Advertising Awards Competition for the use of music themes in advertising of non-musical products. Closing date for entres in Jan. 21, 1957, and winners will be announced April 15.

Inside Stuff—Music

Harry Fox is acting as trustee for a group of music publishers, and not the Music Publishers' Protective Assn. in the action against Luniverse Records and that "Flying Saucer" disk which is accused of utilizing some 19 different copyrighted tunes and excerpts from other diskeries. As a matter of fact, most of the complaining publishers for whom Fox is acting, through attorney Julian T. Abeles, are not members of the MPPA, which is a dominant ASCAP group; the indies and their indie disk labels involved in the complaint against Luniverse are BMI affiliates.

Legal representative for Luniverse has been talking to Abeles and Fox for a settlement, via a royalty license which, technically, would not absolve any violation prior to any such licensing arrangement.

Jack Brooks-Sammy Fain score for the upcoming NBC-TV spectacular, "The Soft Touch," will mark the publishing debut of NBC's subsidiary, Kagran Films Inc., an ASCAP member. Name is that of the telefilm subsidiary and since the outfit recently changed its corporate title to California National Productions Inc., the pubbery handle probably will be changed to conform. Pubbery venture by the web is part of the expanding production scene. Where possible, NBC will seek to publish scores on all musical properties it produces, whether live or film, and the pubbery will, of course, work closely with RCA Victor in exploiting tunes.

Cafe Bohemia, one-year-old jazz club in New York's Greenwich Village, is following on the heels of its uptown rival, Birdland, with its own theme song. The theme, simply titled "Bohemia," was cleffed by Ed Smollett, Charles Shirley and Mynell Allen. It's being published by Mellin Music. "Lullaby of Birdland," which has already developed into a jazz standard, was written by George Shearing and is published by Patricia Music. The "Bohemia" theme got its first network plug Saturday (4) when Zoot Sims Quintet was picked up on remote from the jazzery via Mutual's "Bandstand, U.S.A."

In these days of dwindling sheet music sales, "He," spiritual-styled tune by Jack Richards and Richard Mullin, stands out as an exception. In the year that it's been on the market, Avas Music has shipped 500,000 copies and drawn only 5,700 returns. The publisher claims that 80% of the returns belong in the soiled and damaged category. Tune broke initially in August of last year via Al Hibbler's Decca etching. The McGuire Sisters cut it later for Coral. Avas recently readied a deluxe standard edition of the tune.

---

In a drive to widen the scope of its classical catalog by adding domestic talent to its roster, Decca Gold Label has inked American pianist Ruth Slenczynska to a longterm pact. Her first Decca release is set for late fall. Miss Slenczyncka, who recently came out of a self-imposed retirement, is heading out on an extensive concert tour this fall in which there'll be 60 dates with the Boston Pops. Her concert schedule is being lined up by National Artists Corp.

---

Songwriters come from everywhere. Latest origination point is the U.S. Army's Nurse Corps Reserve. Miss Sonny LaGlaire, a captain in that outfit who was recently discharged after 15 years of service, has come up with "Bamboo Rock and Roll," which has been cut by the Nite Caps on Groove Records. She wrote material for nitery singers while stationed in Tokyo. Currently she's a private nurse working out of Mt. Sinai Hospital, N.Y.

---

Shep Fields, who has been holing up in Houston for the past two years, has been brushing off a return to New York, Chicago or L.A. unless a network broadcast is tied in. Field's orch is currently playing a 10-week stand at the Shamrock and he is running a daily deejay show over KTHT, Mutual outlet in Houston. In addition, Fields has organized an agency tagged Artists Corp. of Texas which books talent for parties and conventions.

Bethlehem Records is giving a hefty push to its upcoming "Porgy & Bess" package of three 12-inch platters featuring Mel Torme (Porgy), Frances Faye (Bess), Al (Jazzbo) Collins, the Duke Ellington orch, the Australian Jazz Quartet and a flock of others. Company is issuing a special 10-inch LP for disk jockeys containing excerpts from the package and a pamphlet about the production. Indie label is also distributing elaborate dealer display material to push the $14.95 set. Collins, WRCA-NBC disk jockey, handles the narration on the platter.

RCA is getting a helping hand from rival CBS in the buildup of its new thrush Ann Gilbert. RCA, via its Groove Records subsid, is prepping a push for the thrush's first album, set for release at the end of this month, while CBS will give the singer her first tv network crack Aug. 29 as guester on "Frankie Laine Time."

Decca Pulls Sales Meets To Spur Canadian Trade

Claude Brennan and Stanley Goodman, Decca sales execs, hit Montreal late last week to head up a series of meets for the diskery's Canadian salesmen and distributors. At the confabs the sales team presented Decca's fall promotion, which is based on the simultaneous release of 52 new 12-inch LPs.

The diskery pulled in more than 500 viewers to its New York dealer meet held last Wednesday (1) at the Hotel New Yorker. Similar "open house" meetings at which dealers were introduced to the fall line have already been held in Hartford, Newark, Philadelphia, Boston and Washington.

R & B Competition

ing for hits and would move in fast with a cover disk. In most instances he'd take the play away from the indie as in the McGuire Sisters' version of "Sincerely," but in recent months his covers have been out of the running against the originals. Example is Dorothy Collins' "Treasure of Love" which hasn't even come close to Clyde McPhatter's Atlantic original.

The other companies, too, have had similar experiences with their cover platters. Rather than play second fiddle to the indie versions, they'd now rather originate their own material for the pop market. The r&b market, many of the major a&r men say, is strictly for the indies. It's a fast-moving operation that needs a single-disk concentration. An indie can throw everything aside to put all its power behind one platter while a major has many other things to consider. An indie also has more freedom to operate with deejays, distributors and one-stoppers.

In sum, it's developed that the majors are too topheavy for the r&b market.

Jocks, Jukes & Disks

both sides have a certain kind of odd listening attraction. The jocks may get behind this one because of its unusual aspects.

Vaughn Monroe: "In The Middle of the House"-"Rollin' Heart" (RCA Victor). Vaughn Monroe has come to bat to challenge Rusty Draper's already-on-the-move Mercury waxing of "In The Middle of the House." It's the kind of tune that can take more than one hot version and Monroe looks like he's got it. He also has a good spinning contender with "Rollin' Heart," a tune built along the country & western groove.

The Collegians: "Please Let Me Be The One"-"Blue Solitude" (Groove). The Collegians are a new group that bears watching. In their initial Groove etching, the three boys display a slick harmony technique (somewhat reminscent of The Ames Bros.) but their styling is individualistic enough to get 'em off on their own. Both sides, pegged for the pop market, have the kind of rhythmic beat that gets disks on deejay shows and draws jukebox coin.

Danny Knight: "Beachcomber, Beachcomber"-"My Heart Isn't In It" (MGM). "Beachcomber" is well-written material which MGM's new singer Danny Knight projects strongly. The flip is a more conventional item, also done with a neat vocal gloss.

Little (Butchie) Saunders: "Lindy Lou"-"Rock 'n' Roll Indian Dance" (Herald). This is a typical example of the kind of moppet vocalizing which has been rising in the rock 'n' roll movement. Saunders shows immature pipes, but fine rhythmic sense in "Lindy Lou," while the Indian dance takeoff on the flip is a so-so novelty idea.

Brit.'s R&R Orch Trend

London, Aug. 7.

The first rock 'n' roll homegrown band will hit the road Aug. 31 for a nationwide tour of one-niters.

Fronted by leading drummer Tony Crombie, the band will be a six-piecer and the idea is to form a complete show around the group along lines of the American r&r packages. The band makes its debut with a couple of dancehall dates in Manchester.

Band Reviews

AUSTRALIAN JAZZ QUINTET
AHMAD JAMAL TRIO
Modern Jazz Room, Chi

The Australian Jazz Quintet bowed here Wednesday (1) for a two-week run after a year-long absence from Chicago. The fact that they last played the Blue Note highlights the competition between the rapidly multiplying jazz rooms here.

The Aussies bring with them an unusual instrumentation for jazz since they use the bassoon and the flute in their versions of some of the jazz standards. Group's forte is sound rather than original musical ideas, technique or the bouncy beat characteristic of the idiom. Some restraint still inhibits the rhythm.

But the use of bassoon and flute in such numbers as "April in Paris" creates an almost bucolic sound pattern, in effect a new and pleasing interpretation. The bassoon is less effective in rendering more animated selections, such as "Jumping with Symphony Sid." This is partially due to the lack of "attack" inherent in the mechanics of the instrument, when compared with, for example, the trumpet. Group varies from a basic piano, drum, bass and reed format to include vibes, clarinet, bassoon or flute; at least three members of the group double. The reed element can be tenor and alto or tenor and clarinet.

Percussionist Jack Brokenshaw gets rapt audience attention for a savvy performance on the vibes, particularly a solo of "Moonlight in Vermont." Group merits kudos for versatility and imaginative instrumentation, at least, they keep interest up and provide some unusual sound treatments. Quintet goes off to a big mitt.

The Ahmad Jamal Trio plays opposite the Aussies in a fast rise due to culminate at New York's Embers after this run ends. Discovered in Chi's southside Pershing Hotel, Ahmad Jamal impresses with a serene, yet technically facile, manner at the keyboard. As much cannot be said for the backing guitar and bass, who sometimes overpower pianist Jamal's light touch. Jamal also has a tendency toward overlong mike intros.

The new room, open for several months now, looks like a successful jazz showcase, particularly for combos. Atop the Loop's Preview Lounge, it was not refurbished in any way when converted from a mambo terpery and leaves much to be desired in the way of atmosphere, possibly to be a major element in the room's sustained success or lack of it. Also, whether the busy Saturday-night-out atmosphere of Randolph St. after dark is the best setting for such recherche divertissements as progressive jazz is debatable. Gabe.

THREE MEN & A MAID
Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City

After being closed briefly while remodelling went on in connection with the new wing the Hotel Muehlebach is erecting, the street-level Cafe Picardy is reopened and with some new appointments. It also has a new musical group in the Three Men & a Maid, up from St. Louis for the reopening of the room and an eight-week stand. The crew is playing for dinner nightly from 6 till 10, and on Saturdays for dancing.

Men & Maid are long on versatility with a string of doubles shared by the quartet, including the vibraharp, electric accordion, string bass, drums, piano and valve trombone. There is Les Buchman on drums, and he can take a lick on the bass. Don Schroeder on the valve trombone, seldom seen anymore, switches to vibes or bass, and Joe Byington basically handles the accordion, but comes in on piano vibes as needed. Maid is Hope Herman, who handles the piano, or the string bass, and who can also add a fine soprano when policy permits singing.

Out of this comes a wealth of variations on standard and show tunes, medleys from the hit musicals, and even light classical favorites. Then they switch to a Latin or two, wrap up one of their own special arrangements. Their work draws steady acknowledgment from the customers, and generally fits the room. Quin.

ducer and ASCAPers have contended that this goes beyond small rights and into the realm of grand rights, use of which must be negotiated separately.

Straight medlies, however, aren't generally regarded as being in the grand rights category. Recently, the Shuberts lost a suit against Ben Yost, because one of the Yost groups had used a medley of "Student Prince" tunes. Court ruled that the straight rendition of a medley still is regarded as a small right.

However, there have been decisions which declared that substantial reproduction of musicals with songs and dialog could be construed as a grand right.

Tony Zale, Disker

Tony Zale, ex-middleweight champ, is taking a jab at the disk business. He's set up a new label, Zale Records, with headquarters in Chicago. Artists & repertoire topper for the new diskery will be Ted Travers, a freelance deejay.

Kickoff release, slated for mid-August, was waxed by a new combo tagged the Cheerful Earfuls. For the past couple of years Zale has been active with Chi's Catholic Youth Organization.

Harry Fox to Coast

Harry Fox, music publishers' agent and trustee, headed for the Coast early this week to work out music clearances on telefilm projects. He'll also arrange audits on the Coast-based record companies.

It'll be about three weeks before Fox returns to his New York desk.

Wrinkles in the royalty payoff to Spiral are still to be ironed out, but it's understood the producing outfit will come close to a 50-50 profit-sharing split with Unique.

The first three albums set for release next month will feature Castro on LP of standards and an LP of originals and a package by Flo and George Handy of 12 original Handy compositions.

Morrison will also double as recording supervisor working out of Spiral's independently operated studios in the east and on the Coast. Plans are also in the works to set up ASCAP and BMI music publishing subsids to be headed by Morrison.

Gt. Lakes Area Group in Combine To Push 'Long Play' Intime Circuit

Cleveland, Aug. 7.

Nucleus of a unique circuit of intimate niteries has been formed in this Great Lakes bowl region by several indie restaurateurs and Irvin Arthur, New York booker who handles their talent.

"Operation Intime," which Arthur conceived for them, is a new show biz wrinkle aimed to guarantee longer-playing time for performers imported from New York while giving chain members more entertainment buying power in getting the type of offbeat sophisticated acts they want.

So far the budding wheel consists of Kornman's Back Room in Cleveland, operated by Billy Weinberger; the Penthouse Room of the Embers in Akron, run by the Garner Bros.; and Lester & Sam Gruber's London Chop House in Detroit. All of the spots have a limited capacity, from 40 to 75 maximum, which presents limitations on entertainment budgets.

Founding members and Arthur are drumming up more prospects to bring cooperative project up to a minimum of from 10 to 15 similar supper clubs. By offering acts 20 to 30 weeks of steady work on their midwestern circuit, amortizing transportation costs, and pooling bids, they figure to draw higher calibre of entertainers to their rooms. Falling into this category are semi-name singers, smart piano-and-song teams, vocalizing guitarists, recording attractions wanting to promote their disks and others that play the Ruban Bleu, Bon Soir, Vanguard, etc., in New York.

Weinberger, one of the chief organizers, has Mimi Kelly currently in his Kornman's Back Room which has become one of Cleveland's most popular intimate spots. During past year it brought in Juanita Hall, Ada Moore and Greta Keller and did turnaway biz with them. After her run here, Miss Kelly, who has been singing the "South Pacific" lead in tent strawhats, will move into Akron's Penthouse Room with Eddie Ryan as pianist.

Arthur, making periodic missionary trips to this area, said he expects to sell "Operation Intime" to restaurateurs in Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Columbus, O., and several others who have expressed interest in project.

D.C. Sheraton-Park Now 'Only Hotel in World With Built-In Train Service'

Washington, Aug. 7.

Showmanship takes novel forms in the battle between the nation's growing major hotel chains.

Latest credit goes to the Sheraton chain for the "Cherry Blossom Special," just installed at the Sheraton-Park, Washington's largest hotel which spreads over 16 acres of ground.

The Cherry Blossom Special is being promoted here as "the world's newest short-line railroad." It is a private, miniature, rubber-tired train which travels over a specially laid asphalt "track" circling the hotel grounds. Operation includes a toy-town diesel type locomotive and two open passenger cars seating a total of 27. Route goes by the hotel's outdoor swimming pool, parking lot, front entrance, the apartment annex, tennis courts, the new ballroom in the rear of the Sheraton-Park and the garage entrance. Train travels at a maximum speed of 13 miles per hour.

Sheraton-Park claims it is the only city hotel in the world with "built-in train service."

St. Loo Cracks Down On 5 Downtown Spots

St. Louis, Aug. 7.

Operators of five small downtown bistros last week drew two-day suspensions from Excise Commissioner Arthur H. Bader after cops testified on various violations. In one, Dublin Village, indecent dancing was permitted, according to the cops.

That spot and another in the same area are operated by Joseph Orlando.

Dot Lamour to Play Versailles, N. Y., in Nov.

Dorothy Lamour has been signed for her first N.Y. stand in many years. She goes into the Versailles, N.Y., around Nov. 19, after the run of Edith Piaf, who starts Sept. 19. Miss Lamour has worked vauders in New York previously, and recently has confined her dates to niteries and tv.

The Versailles will go on a name policy next season for the first time in several years. Spot has been playing units for some time, except for the breaks when Miss Piaf worked there. Discussions are going on for Hildegarde to play that spot.

Boston Niteries In Facelift; LQ May Be Reopened

Boston, Aug. 7.

Hub niteries, shuttered for the summer, are getting an extensive facelifting looking toward fall openings. Biggest innovations are going on at Blinstrub's 1,700-seater where $65,000 worth of work is being done, including a new lighting system, new stage, new foyer and decor.

The new stage will have stairways down to the dance floor. Stanley Blinstrub plans to reopen Labor Day with a produced show and has been dickering with Georgie Hale, who did "Red, Hot and Blue." For the upcoming season, Blinstrub has already signed Guy Lombardo and Marguerite Piazza.

At Joe and Max Schneider's Steuben's, new decor is being installed. Plans call for a roll-out stage which will come from under the bandstand, new lights, new sound system and new draperies.

Efforts are being made to reopen the shuttered Latin Quarter for the coming season and guessing is going on as to who will take over the club, dark for the past year. Interest in opening the spot has been expressed by Johnny Howard, Florida comic who is a frequent Hub visitor and holds the longrun record at the Bradford Roof.

Unless the Latin Quarter is reopened, Hub will have only three supper clubs going, as last season, Blinstrub's, Bradford Roof and Steuben's.

KAYE'S 2-A-DAY KICK FOR 4 WEEKS IN CHI

Two-a-day seems to be going in for a revival. Latest to go for a variety show in a legit house is Danny Kaye, who signed to do four weeks at the Shubert Theatre, Chicago, starting Sept. 5, following his one-weeker at the Carter Barron Amphitheatre, Washington, where he gocs in Aug. 21 for one week. Latter date is a quick repeat, Kaye having done a two-weeker there for a gross of $160,000. There's possibility he will play a Boston legit house after Chicago.

Kaye is the second to announce plans for two-a-day for the fall season. Judy Garland will do a minimum eight weeks at the Palace, N.Y., starting Sept. 20.

Eck Dickering 1-Niters

Singer Billy Eckstine is negotiating for a series of one-nighters with promoter Morris Levy, operator of Birdland, N. Y., and who has been active in the one-nighter field lately. Tour under discussion would have Eckstine on the road for four and a half weeks in the east, south and midwest starting Feb. 15, after which he'll lay off for three weeks or so and resume on the Coast for 11 consecutive days.

Possibility is that Eckstine will take some cafe dates during the layoff period.

Liberace Show in Vegas Postponed to Nov. 14

Las Vegas, Aug. 7.

Liberace has set back his return engagement at the Riviera to Nov. 14, opening a new show, "An Evening With Liberace," for a three-week stand. Pianist originally was slated to go into nitery preceding his upcoming European tour.

He and brother George embark for London in September for series of English bookings which will take him into late October.

'Ice Capades' In Equal Editions

Pittsburgh, Aug. 7.

John H. Harris, producer of "Ice Capades," is no longer putting out a No. 1 and 2 edition, but this season will divide his facilities, talent roster and production to float two shows of equal strength and size. This was made possible by the folding of the "Hollywood Ice Revue," opening up new towns for Harris as well as making more personnel available.

In past, Harris' main event has been tagged "Ice Capades," with the junior version traveling as "Ice Capades International." This year for the first time "International" is being pulled up to the full standard of "Capades." Heretofore that wasn't possible because the No. 2 show had to play smaller towns, with less seating capacity. Now there's sufficient playing time for two big ones.

It's Harris' plans to play each edition of his "Capades" for two years, alternating in different cities over that period. For 1956-57 shows, he has brought over 12 gold and silver medalists from Europe to augment the ballets and plans additional importations from time to time as foreign skaters achieve those ratings.

One "Ice Capades" opens 10-day engagement outdoors at Forbes Field here Aug. 17 while the other is tuning up in Atlantic City for preem at Madison Square Garden next month.

Stagehands' Nix May Spell Doom of Vaude At Ex-Bigtime Chicago

Inability to get together with the local stagehands' union has forced cancellation of a disk jockey stageshow which was to have started next Friday (17) at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago. Failure to come to agreement with the grips indicates that vaude shows are out of that house permanently.

Deal had been in the works for a show to be headed by Howard Miller. General Artists Corp. had been dickering for the unit, when agreement was sought with the union, which had been seeking an increase in the $2.26 hourly rate. Inability to come to terms forced cancellation of the deal.

Until the breakdown in negotiations, there was the possibility that stagers might resume at the Chi theatre, if not on a permanent basis, at least on spot deals when suitable attractions become available. It's understood that deals have been made with other unions, had matters cleared with the stagehands.

The Chicago Theatre had been the last Windy City outlet for bigtime vaude. Until two years ago, it had been one of the few regulars on the variety circuit, but then a flock of big pictures forced out stageshows, and since then, paucity of headliners coulped with high prices made vaude a sparse item in that house. Bookings for this house were by Harry Levine out of New York.

Old Dayton, O., Burley To Become Parking Lot

Dayton, O., Aug. 7.

The Mayfair Theatre, local burlesque house, which opened in 1876 as the Gebhart Opera House, will be razed to make way for a 120-car paved parking lot in downtown Dayton. This will mean removal of a statue of a Greek goddess at the top of the theatre building. A landmark for all that time.

The Gebhart Opera house was known as the Park and the Lyric before it became the Mayfair.

Indie Agents Feel Majors Clamping Down In Crowded One-Niter Field

The club date and convention field is beginning to show signs of overcrowding. Many of the indie agents who went into the casual field following the foldo of vaude are finding that there are a considerable number of bidders for every job, the cost of entertaining committee members (who award the jobs) is getting higher and the danger of major offices walking off with all the top accounts becomes increasingly greater.

The plight of the indie agent in the club field is believed to stem from his inability to obtain any degree of control over name acts. The majors having the bulk of them can hold onto the top draws for shindigs their own office is booking.

The name acts have been a key to the situation, according to the indies. Should an individual agent call up a major for a topliner, the indie says there's always the danger that the large office will go after the account on its own. And says the independent, if it isn't done immediately, there's always the possibility that it will be done for the following year. The followup system in some offices is in good shape.

As a result of the fierce competition, the profits in the club and convention field are being pared. Various offices have had to get a more expensive brand of talent and at the same time, haven't been able to charge higher sums.

Conventions are, of course, the more lucrative field, but the indie is finding it tough to get a firm foothold on that type of date because of his dependence upon the major for names. As it now stands, the club and convention field is one of the few outlets left for the indie who formerly depended on the vaude business. They are finding the overall problems to be similar.

Zsa Zsa, Adams, Kelly For LQ's Unit in Vegas

Lou Walters, Latin Quarter, N. Y., boniface who produces units periodically for the Las Vegas trade, is going all-out on his newest edition which will open at the Riviera there Sept. 12. Zsa Zsa Gabor, Joey Adams and Al Kelly have been booked in that tab which will stay for four weeks and options at that hostel, and then move on, possibly to Reno and elsewhere. Booking was made by Cass Franklin, who heads the Lou Walters Enterprises Inc.

In former years, most of Walters' LQ units have played the Desert Inn. Last year he did one show for the Dunes Hotel, Las Vegas, shortly before its takeover by Jack Entratter, who has since relinquished that inn to concentrate on the neighboring Sands Hotel.

Bingo, Radio-TV Lotteries, Etc., On The Pan in Can.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.

Disaster for big bingo games, radio and tv lotteries, filmer "fotonites" and several other types of take-a-chance activities could result if recommendations from a report made to Parliament in Ottawa became law. The report, which also recommends a federal okay on midways at agricultural fairs (including the Canadian National and Central Canada Exhibitions), was made by a special joint Senate-Commons committee probing for more than two years into lotteries as well as Canada's capital and corporal punishment regulations. It will not be dealt with during the current session of Parliament, due for a mid-August halt, and will not come before Parliament until its next session at the earliest.

Service clubs, Canada's major bingo operators, called sudden sessions to mull the recommendations, which would put a $5,000 ceiling on the retail value of prizes offered in a single year for bingo games by any group. Bingo games have netted some service clubs nearly $200,000 each annually. The committee urged a parallel ban on joint lotteries designed to swerve around the ceiling.

Other recommendations:

Elimination of professional lottery promoters by eliminating their

'GUYS & DOLLS' WANTED BY L.V. NEW FRONTIER

Sammy Lewis, talent buyer for the New Frontier and the Riviera, Las Vegas, spent the early part of the week in New York trying to line up rights and talent for a cut edition of "Guys and Dolls," the Frank Loesser musical, which he would put into the New Frontier for a comparatively long run starting Sept. 20.

Lewis is attempting to get an assortment of names, including Pamela Britton, to do the Vivian Blaine role (Miss Blaine is now in "Hatful of Rain"); Robert Alda, in the original; Phil Foster, and Jack Prince, among others.

This would be the second run of the Loesser musical in the gaming spa. The Royal Nevada staged a full-length version of that show a couple of years ago. Legit musicals are not new to Las Vegas since several briefies played there, but bulk of them weren't too successful. "Guys and Dolls" however, was regarded as a success despite the fact that its running time of more than two hours is said to have kept a lot of players marooned in the nitery room and away from the casino.

Ban on Impersonators Upheld in Miami Beach; 2 Sentenced and Fined

Miami Beach, Aug. 7.

Miami Beach ordinance banning femme impersonators from appearing in local night clubs was upheld in a Dade County Circuit Court test this week. Judge Ray Pearson ruled that a performer and operator of Club Benni must serve a 30-day sentence and pay violation fines of $100 and $150 imposed March 11 by the Municipal Court.

The pair, Jack (Ricky Renee) Renner and Ben Nedelle, had appealed the lower court convictions. In turning down the appeal Judge Pearson said "private rights and interests of performers who specialize in impersonating females must give way to the public interest and welfare." In his decision he also observed that "the liquor business is one of those affected with public interest and subject to any reasonable regulation."

Renee in recent months has been featured at the Stork Room in London, owner Al Burnett having booked him while here on a talent-buying tour last season. The Circuit Court ruling may be appealed by Nedelle to the state Supreme Court. The ordinance specifically rules out the wearing of female clothing and does not apply to those acts which do takeoffs on show biz distaffers and in-the-news personalities.

Organist Ethel Smith's Strawhats to Niteries

Organist Ethel Smith, who has temporarily forsaken niteries for a legit fling at the Starlight Theatre, Pawling, N.Y., has been booked for a two-week stand at the Maisonette of the Hotel Pierre, N.Y., beginning Oct. 4. She'll debut her new act there consisting of flamenco guitaring and singing. Her organ workover will be relegated to the encore spot.

Also on Miss Smith's sked is a Nov. 3-4 date with the newly formed Milwaukee (Wis.) Symphony-Pop concerts. This week she's appearing at Pawling in "Roomful of Roses." She made her acting debut there last week in "Chalk Garden."

AGVA to Arena Mgrs.: Circus Picket To Continue; Show Seeks A.C. Dates

Switch by Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus to indoor arenas next season will cause no shift in strategy by the American Guild of Variety Artists which along with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, had been picketing the show at all its stops this season.

In a letter to the Arena Managers Assn. the union has said that it will continue to picket the circus unless it comes to terms with both unions.

The letter came to AMA on the eve of a meeting of its members at Convention Hall, Atlantic City, which started yesterday (Tues.) and in which the possibility of booking the Ringling show was slated for discussion.

The AGVA letter brings to the AMA two facets of booking the Ringling circus. In addition to courting picket lines, unless some settlement is made, the advisability of abandoning sponsored indoor circuses, which have been annuals in some of the arenas, in favor of a Ringling show, unsponsored, will be debated. AMA isn't expected to make any hard and fast rule on this matter, but every facet will be discussed and each arena manager will decide the issue on the basis of the situation in his community.

Thus far, it's known, many of the arena operators are interested in the Ringling show. Since it's fold and the announcement by circus prexy John Ringling North that the show would go indoors in airconditioned arenas, many operators have been inquiring. Subject will get a complete airing at the AMA confab.

July-August Shutout

Atlantic City, Aug. 7.

Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus is seeking dates at big Convention Hall here next year, when it will assume a new format and appear in auditoriums and halls instead of under its big tents. However, there is little chance of the circus getting July or August dates.

Convention Hall manager Philip E. M. Thompson, in acknowledging that he had received a letter from the circus requesting information, said the hall is now occupied during July and August by the National Hardware Show and "Ice Capades," the latter playing the final six weeks of the season while the former is in for a week with several days necessary in between on rearrangements.

"We could squeeze the circus in for a couple of days in April, May or early June," Thompson said. "I don't think the town would want the circus for more than a couple of days off-season because it takes too much money away."

With letter from circus came one from the American Guild of Variety Artists which notified the hall management that the circus was still on the "unfair list" and would be picketed if it played here.

Plenty Cocoanuts For Grove Talent

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Business is so good at the Cocoanut Grove, despite a general downbeat around the country, that the last four attractions have chalked up sufficient draw to go into percentages.

Dorothy Shay, who winds her second week tonight (Tues.), was handed a percentage check at end of her first stanza in room, to continue the consecutive run of overages which room has enjoyed. Previously, the Four Aces, Janis Paige and Gordon MacRae, in that order, collected a slice of the take over and above their guarantees.

Earlier this year, the Champions and Lena Horne both went into peecee on their stints.

Tony Martin's 1-Niters

Chicago, Aug. 7.

Music Corp. of America is currently booking a series of one-niters in the midwest for a package to be toplined by Tony Martin.

A series of 10 dates, beginning Oct. 10, is being lined up.

Langford-Evinrude-Wick Pards in Splendex Co.

Singer Frances Langford, her husband, Ralph Evinrude, who's a manufacturer of marine equipment, and Charles Wick have formed a general partnership for the operation of Splendex Enterprises, which will invest in various types of enterprises, including talent. Wick is a general partner and the Evinrudes are limited partners. Each of the limited partners has invested $50,000, and an overcall of funds not to exceed $200,000 each is written into the partnership.

Wick, for many years a personal manager and who has been producing telefilms, is lining up a series of projects for the new firm.

Clyde Beatty Woos R-B Acts Pending AGVA Clearance

The Clyde Beatty Circus, which dropped out of circulation earlier this season because of failing box-office and assorted difficulties, is attempting to sign many of the performers who had been working with the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus before its foldo several weeks ago in Pittsburgh.

Steve McCloskey, now in charge of the Beatty outfit, is currently attempting to clear some of the performers with the American Guild of Variety Artists. Performers who had been with the circus are currently on the union's unfair list and will be given permission to work only if they make arrangements to pay the $2,000 fine decreed by the union's national board. Original penalty carried a six month suspension which would be voided once payment of the fine is guaranteed.

BILLY DANIEL'S HEAVY TERP SKED IN GERMANY

Berlin, Aug. 7.

That German producers are finding it more and more essential to use foreign artists for their internationally still not so successful musical features is evidenced by American choreographer Billy Daniel. Latter is currently working here (Arthur Brauner's CCC studios) on two pix, "You Are Music," a Caterina Valente tinter (Eastmancolor), and "Music Parade," a b&w musical starring Swedish Bibi Johns. Before these, Daniel did the choreography for "Bonjour, Kathrin," another Caterina Valente film, and also "Girl With Bad Memory" and "Kiss Me Again." That means that within nine months, he has worked on five German pix, a record which undoubtedly makes him Germany's busiest film choreographer at present. He's been signed for a number of more German productions, including all forthcoming Valente musicals.

Daniel's close connection with Miss Valente dates back to 1954 in Hollywood when she appeared in Colgate's NBC-TV show, "Comedy Hour." Daniel did the show's dances. Before that, he had mainly been under Paramount contract, doing a number of the "Road" pix with Hope-Crosby-Lamour, and also worked for 20th-Fox ("Gentlemen Prefer Blondes") and RKO ("The French Line").

Fisher's Dual 1-Niters

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Eddie Fisher will do a one-nighter at the California State Fair, Sacramento, Sept. 1, immediately after his Hollywood Bowl date. Singer expects to wind his initial film, "Bundle of Joy," this week and will then rest for a short time before prepping his return to the air on his "Coke Time" teleshow Aug. 29.

Hollywood Bowl date is Sept. 1, a Saturday, with the Sacramento date on the following day.

Riley's Tees Off Spa's Race Season With Acts

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 7.

Riley's Theatre Restaurant, on Saratoga Lake, opened for the racing season Saturday (4), with a no cover and no minimum. First show, "Meet the Girl Friends," had Princess Yasmina, Egyptian dancer, headlining. Other acts are the Three Galanes, Wells & 4 Fays, Helen Vernon Trio, Ed Farby, Dick Bernie & Stanley Montfort and a line. Noel Sherman is producer. Joe Condulla Trio and the 4 Montreal Cats entertain in the lounge.

Spot has a liquor license this year. It is the only "famed" one now operating here with a floor-show. Newman's Lake House continues as a restaurant.

CNE Sets Acts For 400G Bill

Toronto, Aug. 7.

With a $400,000 budget for the fortnight's run (last year the b.o. take was $560,000 at $3.50 top), Jack Arthur, executive producer of the 24,000-seat grandstand shows at the Canadian National Exhibition here, has lined up all his acts for the engagement (Aug. 24 to Sept. 8 and no Sunday performances). He has started rehearsals of his 60-girl line with their 18 male partners, a mixed chorus of 30, and his 60-piece orch, latter under the direction of Howard Cable.

For the first time in his five years' association with CNE, Arthur will be directing the entirely different productions for the afternoon and evening sessions, his previous chore being the evening spectacular.

This year, the afternoon show will be headed by Gene Autry, with Gail Davis (Annie Oakley), Autry's horses, Champion and Little Champion, plus other performing equines; the Promenaders, square dancers; the Cass County Boys, western instrumentalist and vocal group; Barbara Bardo, girl roper; Carl Cotner & Melody Ranch orch. There will also be five circus turns.

Other acts inked for both afternoon and evening shows include Richard (Mr. Pastry) Hearne; Jean Wetzel, one-man-show harmonica player of European revues; Bobby Wynters, pantomimist; the Three Deuces, vocal trio; Fred Barber, impressionist; Gaudsmith Bros., the Three Merkys, Goldilocks & bears (Clauson's), Lola Dobritch, the Goetchis. For the big production numbers, Arthur will use such dancers as Nirska, the Stuart Morgan group, Alan & Blanche Lund. Choreographers are Midge Arthur and the Lunds.

Hugh Heller was named new chief of MCA's Frisco office last week.

Quick Miami Beachcomber Foldo Hints Gloom for Non-Hotel Cafes

By LARY SOLLOWAY

Miami Beach, Aug. 7.

Scheduled for a four-week run, the Beachcomber folded Saturday (4) after two weeks of unsuccessfully trying to buck the stiff competition from hotel cafes. Shuttering of the 900-seater—perhaps permanently—may well mark final blow to plans of operators contemplating running an independent night club this winter.

Despite marquee lure of Martha Raye and a strong supporting show, Norman Schuyler, who for years has been in the van of the big salary operators in booking triple-name lineups to meet the growing hotel-cafe inroads, found lessening in attendance after a strong opening weekend. He experienced the same in-the-red results with his biggest "in season" array: Sophie Tucker, Frankie Laine and Buddy Hackett, who also closed prematurely to cap a near-disastrous winter run.

Question now is whether Schuyler will renew his lease on the biggery. Neighboring Copa City has been dark for over two years; Ciro's, just around the corner, gave up recently after trying with Frank Parker. Only the Latin Quarter's Lou Walters has announced any definite plans to relight come mid-December. The Vagabonds Club is the only spot on the mainland still running, thanks to the quartet's ownership-operation which allows them to budget within the profit side of the ledger when booking acts to support. The Clover Club has long been dark and, as of now, stands little chance of reopening as a big name location.

All the patron activity is now along oceanfront row. Top names must look to hotel bookings this winter with the Fontainebleau, Eden Roc and the new Americana high bidders; the Versailles cafe, newly under lease to Monte Gardner, is a late entry. Eden Roe's winter book is almost filled with Harry Belafonte leading the pack beginning Christmas for two-weekers, and Nat (King) Cole, Johnnie Ray and Joe E. Lewis to follow. Owner Harry Mufson is busy filling out the rest of the heavy 12-week seasonal height. Fontainebleau has Tony Martin, with bids out for the better knowns; the Americana has brought in Stanley Melba, longtime maestro-booker for the Pierre Hotel in Manhattan, to set up its roster. Thinking here seems to be along the "society" patronage line—what with the newery located in the swank Bal Harbour sector—and dittoing of the type of acts used by Melba at his previous post.

The Versailles is going after such acts as Ella Fitzgerald and others with heavy dough offers. Sans Souci is set with its intime Blue Sails Room returning Myron Cohen for three dates spread through the season, Jackie Miles for two, Billy Gray and Phil Foster. The Nautilus, Seville, Lucerne will be in the field with middle-bracket performers. Status of Ciro's and aforementioned Beachcomber remains in doubt.

Name Anita Alvarez As Choreo for St. Loo Spec

St. Louis, Aug. 7.

Anita Alvarez, New York, will direct the choreography and be the lead dancer in the spectacle show to be presented during the Mid-America Jubilee presentation on the local riverfront next month. A huge stage is being readied in front of the Old Cathedral for the nightly shows.

Stanley Herbertt has been chosen as an assistant to Miss Alvarez and also will be the lead male dancer. The production, with lyrics and music by Norman Zeno, will be tagged "Gateway to the West" and will unfold an original story of the historical significance of the development of the west.

N. Y. Garden Rodeo Hits Dog Days Via Rin Tin Tin Star

The paucity of rodeo headliners has been stressed more strongly than ever with the announcement by Madison Square Garden, N.Y., that its annual World's Championship Rodeo starting Sept. 26 would be headlined by Rin Tin Tin and the Collins Kids, latter a pair of youngsters who have appeared on several video shows. Neither Gene Autry nor Roy Rogers, who have headlined the Garden roundups for a number of years, will be available this year to the N.Y. spot

There's still possibility that Garden officials will be able to put more names on top of those already booked, but nothing has presented itself thus far, even after a fairly thorough looksee of availabilities.

Although possibilities of a big gate are diminishing because of the failure to come up with a top headliner, the costs of rodeos are going up. The run this season will be for 28 performances and prize money will run to about $100,000.

Freed's R 'n' Repeat

Alan Freed, holder of the all-time record of $204,000 for 10 days at the Brooklyn Paramount, will repeat his rock 'n' roll show in a nine-day stand at that house starting Aug. 29. He'll have Big Joe Turner, Fats Domino, Teen-Agers and others in his retinue.

Freed, WINS deejay, is the great white father of the controversial rock 'n' roll cult. He's in on a percentage deal.

N.Y. Hotel Season Has 'Old Faces' Returning for Upcoming Season

The New York hotel booking picture seems to indicate that there's a stock company making the rounds of the inns. Bulk of the names booked for the forthcoming season are no strangers to the hostel circuit. Most are on repeat dates. Pattern changed considerably last season when many rooms took a number of chances on some fresh faces. Majority of them worked out well. This season, however, a picture of repeats is setting in, at least for the early part of the season.

The Waldorf-Astoria, for example, is playing Los Chavales de Espana following Ted Lewis, who closes Aug. 13. They'll stay until the end of the summer season at the Starlight Roof. Harry Belafonte preems the Empire Room Sept. 20 for six weeks. Bookings will resume at that inn when veepee Claude C. Philippe returns from Europe.

The Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel preems with Lisa Kirk on Sept. 13 and then follows with Eartha Kitt, who'll play her first hotel date on Oct. 11 for four weeks. Los Chavales then come to this room Nov. 8 for five weeks.

The Pierre continues, however, to be actively on the search for new talent. Booker Stanley Melba comes in with an Italian import, Caterina Valente, who made some hit disks with Ernesto Lecuona tunes. She preems at the refurbished Cotillion Room Sept. 25 or Oct. 2. Lilo, a newcomer last season on the hotel circuit, is set for a January stand. The St. Regis gets a familiar item on Sept. 6 when Connie Moore comes in for four weeks. No others pacted as yet.

The hotels seemingly are operating within self-imposed limitations. Bulk of the inns are seeking performers with a certain built-in chic and sophistication as well as name value for a genteel type of spender. For that reason, they stick fairly closely to singers and occasionally a dance team as featured performers. Under these restrictions, it's frequently been very difficult to round out a season. Last season, with some new faces clicking, it was felt that the search for new faces would be accelerated this year. However, it hasn't worked out that way with bulk of talent set so far.

AGVA Taps Barto As Outdoor Chief

Barto, a former national executive secretary of the union and until his acceptance of the outdoor post a member of the national board, has been active in union affairs since 1940. Wilson Storey, who headed the Sarasota branch, will continue in that post.

Murray Becker, who was in the outdoor branch, takes over the top organization spot in St. Louis, succeeding Morgan Wayne, who went to the Philadelphia office. Jack Wilson, who had been heading the Philly branch, is currently on sick leave.

Hoopla Boomerangs As Presley Packs 'Em In Olympia, Miami, 2-Dayer

Miami, Aug. 7.

Heralded by biggest local press coverage ever devoted to a performer in this area, Elvis Presley took over the Olympia Theatre for a two-day (3-4) revival of live shows in that house and packed the 2,000-seater through seven shows at $1.50 per rock 'n' roll head. His end of the net was a reported 90%. Notable was absence of any riotous demonstrations inside the theatre — the jammed streets outside causing the most trouble for the squad of gendarmes assigned to control the predominantly femme teen-age crowds.

From the press angle, what had been an almost overwhelmingly favorable interview reaction, preshows, turned to near-unanimous condemnation of his activities onstage, his pelvic and knee-actions being singled out for caustic comment by the city-siders who covered his shows. Amusement eds were in accord, except for one scrivener; all, however, joined in admitting that his vocalistics couldn't be heard for the squeals, shouts and screams that greeted him from walkon to finish. Accompanying show was brushed off by the attendees. Added act for Presley's show was provided by a contingent of coppers who lined the approaches to the stage to fend off overenthusiastic fans.

Presley could have stayed on all week, if it were up to the Olympia poobahs, but the datebook forced him out of town Sunday (5) for north Florida.

N.Y. LQ Date Holds Up British Tour for Laine

London, Aug. 7.

Frankie Laine will not be coming to Britain this autumn after all.

Weeks of negotiations have been taking place for him to appear here, but the snag has been a prior booking in October at the Latin Quarter in New York.

It was hoped to find a replacement for him that would satisfy the management there and enable him to undertake a British tour, but this has not been possible. Accordingly, the Lew & Leslie Grade office is now negotiating for Laine to come here next April.

Jean DeMarco (Sisters) Hurt But Plays Show

Torme is presently on a vaude tour in Britain.

Water Show Review

Aqua Spectacle of 1956
(EMPIRE POOL, WEMBLEY)

London, Aug. 1.

Starring Esther Williams, with Jack Dodds, Herman Boden, Bill Damian, Alex Plasschaert, Wisa D'Orso, Sonny Howe, Norma Arnould, Millie Maudlin, Edith Motridge; Ed Gillen's Aquabats (5), Aqua Dansettes (34), Aqua Skimmers (4), Aqua Men (20), Aqua Danseurs (20), Evy & Everto, Ravic & Babs, Janik & Arnaut, Sammy Wilde & Kari-Kari Sisters, Manetti Twins; Orch (22) conducted by Bertram Willis; staging, choreography and direction, Jonathan Lucas; executive producer, Ben Gage; settings and lighting, Sam Leve; costumes, Motley; Musical consultant, Gerald Dolin. At Empire Pool, Wembley (London) July 30 for six weeks. $2.50 top.

About the most lavish spectacular of its kind ever staged in England, this is financially a "splash" affair by any standards, staged at an estimated cost of $140,000. The junket employs over 200 people and after its run here moves to New York for a 90-minute presentation to be networked by NBC-TV on Sept. 29. An extensive American tour follows, opening in Montreal in October.

Opening in London at a time when the incidence of tourists is at its highest, there should be plenty of scope for recouping during the next five weeks. Imaginatively planned, it offers all the ingredients necessary for top entertainment appeal — a topflight swimming star, a mixture of vaudeville and aquabatics, a host of bathing belles, a well-turned-out dancing troupe and novelty gimmicks, making ideal family entertainment accessible to all income groups.

Though the production has not undergone any cheeseparing process, the glitter cannot compensate for an overlong program. A cut of at least 30 minutes of this three-hour stint would make an appreciable difference and weld closer together some excellent turns. One other moan: there's naturally a limit to what one can do in a 70-foot circular pool; consequently, the swimmers are hampered, there's a sad lack of formation swimming and no serious diving. The producer surmounts this impediment by devoting over two-thirds of the program to a "dry" floorshow which carries the spectacular smoothly along. When taking a too-infrequent dip in the pool, Miss Williams shows what a glamorous amphibian she is, and how easy she makes the backstroke look.

Throughout, the spectacular lives up to its description; there's never a letdown in the sophisticated manner of presentation. Costumes and lighting effects add their sparkle and terra firma dancers strike the happy compromise between the wet and dry sections of the show. Highlights include expert displays of slalom in which water ski champs Marina Doria, Simon Khouri, Marc Cloutier and Francine Eternod skim around the pool from a central revolving device, a breath-catching performance of fire-eating by Sammy Wilde in an interesting Inca ritual (again rather lengthy) and some clever clowning on a low springboard by the Eddie Gillen troupe, who supply the only laughter of the whole spectacle. Pete.

Liberace Sues Promoters Who 'Stopped' Checks At Akron Rubber Bowl

Youngstown, O., Aug. 7.

Liberace, pianist, and his brother, George, have filed twin lawsuits for a total of $17,500 against Gorgie & McComb Enterprises Inc. of Youngstown, to collect money said to be due them for a concert in Akron's mammoth Rubber Bowl on July 4. The suits were filed in Mahoning County Common Pleas Court here last Thursday. The petition said that Frank Gorgie and David McComb still owe the brothers $17,500 on contracts totalling $34,933 in connection with the event.

The concert originally was planned for Wednesday, July 4, but bad weather prompted postponement until Friday, July 6. Then, less than 5,000 turned out to hear the performance, which was part of an auto-racing card. The performers gave the substitute concert at no extra charge.

The suit said that according to the contract, Liberace was to be paid $23,333 for a matinee and evening performance, and George was to get $11,600. Half was to be paid at the time of signing the contract and the other half was to be paid on the day of the concert. At the signing, according to the petition, Liberace received the $11,666 and George collected $5,833 representing the first half payments. Payment was by certified check. Furthermore, says Liberace, on the day of the concert, the second half was paid, but payment on these checks was stopped immediately. The Liberace brothers want the money, plus interest from June 28, according to the petition.

The two Youngstowners claim to have lost $65,000 on the venture. Gorgie said he felt the lawsuit was a misunderstanding, and possibly did not have the backing of Liberace, whom he tried to reach by telephone.

Meanwhile, several Akron firms and the Race Drivers' Assn. were considering whether or not to take any action against the two Youngstown promoters who, they say, left them stuck with "substantial" tabs in the wake of the Akron debacle.

Lonnie Donegan, British hillbilly singer, has signed Mannie Greenfield to represent him in the U.S. for another five years. Donegan, who recently completed his first U.S. tour, is slated for a return trek in the spring of 1957.

Stevens

next Monday (13). He plans to get back to his legit and real estate interests as soon as that's over, however.

As the chief fund-raiser for Stevenson four years ago and again for this campaign, Stevens would presumably be in line for some Government post, possibly a Cabinet office, if the former Illinois governor should be nominated and win the Presidential election. He pooh-poohs the possibility of receiving such an offer and says he wouldn't want public office, but avoids saying specifically that he'd turn down a bid if he got one.

In view of Stevens' multiple activity in legit, not only as a producer but also as an investor, theatre operator and, recently, as a theatrical realty promoter, there has been considerable trade speculation about his political future. There's been some question whether, if Stevenson become President, his principal financial backer might not be drawn into a fulltime political career.

The importance of the question, in theatrical terms, is indicated by Stevens' current legit prospects. They include, as of a couple of weeks ago, active managerial interest in 13 scheduled productions, major financial stakes in three other upcoming shows, the operation of three other upcoming shows, the operation of three Broadway theatres and the contemplated construction of a unit of four new legit houses as part of the proposed arts center in the Lincoln Square area of New York.

Schoolmarm

phasis hurts the story, turns the day's teaching session into a red-hot bull session.

(Recent release of "King and I" has stirred the enthusiasts to suggest that college courses on the drama ought to start including musicals.)

No Vocational Goals

This new emphasis on classroom criticism is not to be confused with any of the long-existing courses (such as that of Prof. Robert Gessner at NYU) which train students for the entertainment professions. The new movement has no vocational goals—only cultural.

Just this summer Northwestern U., at Evanston, Ill., has set up Jack Ellis as an asst. prof of films as an art form. Teachers College at Columbia has had Patrick D. Hazard conducting a seminar on general principles of popular art criticism.

Hazard secured the cooperation of Columbia and industry officials to set up a two-week "Popular Arts Festival" (ends Aug. 10) at Morningside Heights. It is open free to all students (i.e. post-grad teachers bucking for special credits) desiring to familiarizing themselves with the coming season's educational tie-in possibilities among motion pictures, video and radio.

On the side, Hazard is one of the young academicians now writing pop arts criticism for the scholastic publications. Others include Miles Platt, of Chicago; Henry Maloney, of Detroit, and Ellis. Hazard's case is an instance of a Ford Foundation fellowship producing results on the practical level of direct action. He hit Manhattan over a year ago from the East Lansing (Mich.) Highschool, where he was an instructor (of English) and he is now signed to stay east this fall with the rank of asst. prof at the Trenton State Teachers College.

Stress Values

Advocates of schoolmarm criticism take the position that education and entertainment meet at many points and that the time is long past for intellectual snobbery to bar mass media material from the classroom. They point to many "developments" which enable teachers to find vital aids on the outside.

Cited is a recent recording of James Mason reading "Browning's Meditations." This is one of a number of literary disks turned out by two girl Phi Beta Kappas from Hunter College who, not knowing quite what to do with all their brains, set up shop to produce intellectual and educational recordings under a Cadmon label.

Films and disks with an authentic American "folk" flavor find ready classroom acceptance. What makes the present open door policy in the scholastic world significant is that the initiative is coming from the pedagogs themselves and is not being forced-draught hoisted upon the educational system by publicists, as in the instance some years ago of Metro's big pitch for "Julius Caesar."

Laurence Olivier's "Richard III" and John Huston's "Moby Dick" are rated "naturals" for English courses since they provide springboards for the study of the original texts. Tolstoy's "War and Peace" is already set up for a big tie-in, since the literary mob is prone to describe the work as the finest novel ever written.

Wagner Fest

the realistic romantic style" was the phraseology of one leading German paper. The Frankfurter Allgemeine, the staid paper in authority in Germany, called the performance, "struck down with too much symbolism," continuing that the public would not accept this strange interpretation of such a popular opera.

For the first time since 1951, when the grandsons brought opera up to date with this modern style of staging, the audience objected loudly—with boos and whistles, almost unknown among the usually sedate German opera fans. The Wagner brothers' style has been to present opera with singers in simple costumes on a nearly bare stage, with dramatic effects achieved by unusual lighting. Heavy robes and pomp are out.

Directors and producers of opera from all over the world have come to see the innovations, and to copy, with "Wagner in modern dress" being presented recently in France, Spain and England as a result of their changes.

Completely Sold Out

Despite this lack of acceptance by public and press, the Wagner Fest has been completely sold out, with all tickets for the eight performances of "Meistersinger" long since gone. Some operas of the current series have been sold out since last December with hotel space also booked solid since then. The boxoffice reported that despite the poor crix appraisal, no tickets for "Meistersinger" have been turned back.

Fest this year covers 27 performances of seven operas, including "Meistersinger," "Flying Dutchman," "Parsifal" and the four-part "Ring."

Astrid Varnay and Ramon Vinay of the Metropolitan Opera and Jean Madeira of New York are all singing this year at the Fest. Prices for tickets range from a top of $10.80 to a low of $6, high prices for the German operagoers. Festival reports, however, that 45% of their visitors are foreign, many being American. With the growing international interest in the Fest, this year's brochures were printed in German, English, French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese.

Unit Review

Maywood Italian Festival

Chicago, Aug. 2.

Dick Contino, Arren & Broderick, Consolo & Melba, Scalabrini Chorus (12), (produced by Phil Consolo) Lou Breese Orch (8); 50c gate admission.

This marks the first time that Chi's annual Italian Festival, a benefit for the Villa Scalabrini home for the aged, has taken the plunge with a vaude package helmed by a name act. The 12-day layout is coupled with the usual carnie midway for maximum charity disbursements. The concessionaires are the first to admit, complainingly, that the free show is the big draw.

Attendance for the 12 days is estimated at 80,000. This is also one of the first production attempts of the fledgling Chez Paree management and booking annex, Chez Paree Artists Inc., helmed by longtime hoofer Phil Consolo, with wife Melba assisting.

Although okay for a community benefit, this package would have tough sledding against the usual fair productions put on by some of the bigger fair bookers. By keeping production costs to a minimum, all the producing involves is putting the acts on in the right order. Staging and lighting are rudimentary.

Dick Contino tops the bill here and proves that as long as he sticks to playing the accordion, he's a master in his field. The piano playing and singing can go. Feeling at his ease among his "paesani," Contino gives the impression of not trying as hard as he would in a nitery or theatre sans benefit of rooters. Overlooking the relaxed conditions, Contino shines with lightning fingerwork when squeezing out "Ciribiribin," "Lady of Spain," his disclick, and the aud's favorite "Yours." Though there seemed to be not enough accordion work at the session caught, the crowd sent Contino off with lusty salvos.

Comedy chores are handled by Arren & Broderick, a perennial Chi club date act. Femme takes the spotlight with basic and somewhat dated humor while the male partner accompanies at the piano. Distaffer spoofs the operatic diva in shrill voice, an old bit, and relies for the rest on sight gimmick buffoonery. When at the end she brings on the kids it brings back the old days of vaudeville and the sure hand that killed it. But the crowd goes for this in a big way.

Consolo & Melba open the show with their experienced terpology, wrapping it up with an "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" number, complete with cascading, real bubbles. Here they get vocal aud participation and a hefty mitt. Hoofers do tango and Charleston routines replete with smooth lifts and spins.

Backing is provided by one of the top local jobbing bands, the Lou Breese orch, and Breese obliges with some fancy banjo work as well. The Scalabrini Chorus, a semipro vocal group, provides some solid piping with excerpts from "Student Prince"; duets by the lead tenor and soprano are more than acceptable versions of Romberg favorites.

Tents

der such a plan, a fall return to Broadway is possible, if circumstances warrant.

The modern "big business' aspect of the tent circuit has altered managerial thinking considerably in recent years. Whereas former strawhats were limited in capacity and facilities, today's warm weather legiteries can do productions at potential takes that rival, and in some cases exceed, Broadway figures.

Segal also reasons that a Gotham show that's about ready to fold, could be held together for another three months via the tent circuit hypo. He says his theory is supported by the early success of the tent version of "Teahouse of the August Moon" in its first canvastop stand at Asbury Park, N. J., and the considerable amount of advance interest in its fortnight run at Oakdale, Aug. 27-Sept. 8. Various other canvastops offer more or less similar boxoffice potential for just-from-Broadway hits, he thinks.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Aug. 1.

Joe E. Lewis, Lili St. Cyr, Austin Mack, Renee Molnar Dancers (9), Dick Rice & The El Rancho Orch (12); $2 minimum.

Bangtails and pari-mutuels are not a part of the Vegas gaming curriculum, but as far as the El Rancho Vegas is concerned, there will be always be a bugle to sound "Boots & Saddles" to signal post time for Joe E. Lewis. Joe E., in at Beldon Katleman's paddock this time for a five-frame tour, once again couples his nonsense to the provocative peeling of Lili St. Cyr. And, there's no shying from it—naughty comedy and palpitating sex are still king and queen among bistro subjects.

Lewis has brought with him some new and some w.k. material, but whatever, it still comes out as the familiar parlay of Lewisisms, gals and gin. His fresh songalogs parody science-fiction pix, the dictionary of Mr. Webster and a hit tune from a Broadway musical, which, through no error, gets a new lyric and winds up under the title of "She Was Lying in My Corner, Wishing I'd Come By But I Couldn't—I Was Drunk." The more familiar numbers, i.e., "Music By Cole Porter as Sung By Joe E." and "Say Levine" are enduring gems and, of course, the w.k; pause for post time gives the pixie of the boltes room for his nonsensical patter.

La St. Cyr is fashioned this trip in an idyllic "South Pacific Dream," a posh piece that leaves nothing to the imagination, yet is still carried off with subtle charm. The clime radiated by Miss St. Cyr is instantly torrid, but she tosses added coals to the fire as she ignited a prop hearth. Later further illuminates what the boys came to see as she wriggles out of gown, then negligee, ultimately peeling to the protective G-string. Wrapup, natch, has her slinking into the inevitable bath, then draping her sensuous frame over a divan for the climatic hip-flipping, limbs akimbo.

Renee Molnar & Her Dancers set up Miss St. Cyr's entrance with vivid south sea gyrations while choreographically relating some far-fetched "Tales of Samoa." With a quickie circus prance, daneers signal the finale, which sees Miss St. Cyr giving the guys a last glimpse while perched in a cage that circles the room via an overhead rail. Blackout to LeRoy Prinz' girlesque has La St. Cyr join Joe E.—now clad only in shorts and dunking in the St. Cyr bubblebath.

Diek Riee guides the El Rancho orch competently, keeping his tootlers well abreast of the score throughout. Austin Mack tickles the keyboard through Joe E.'s ribald humor with his usual sureness, and keeps his sometimes absentminded boss abreast of the cues by feeding him lead-in lines.

Alan.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, Aug. 1.

Josephine Premice (with Roy Romero), Jimmy Ames, The Stylers (3), Joe Parnello, Al De Marco, Kenny Sweet; $4.50 minimum.

The Orehild comes up with a thoroughly entertaining show this time around, one bridging several areas of audience preference. Combo of Josephine Premice for the sophisticates, Jimmy Ames for those who like their laughs loud and long, and the Stylers for both, should do strong biz here.

Miss Premice keeps things humming during her well-paced stint, varying her original calypso metier with sophisticate ditties. Femme is a whirling dervish of a performer who endows her material with some of herself and extracts a full measure of meaning from the saucy song-tales she and the audience seem to prefer. Opening with the "Adam & Eve Blues," Miss Premice sets an impudent but inoffensive tone for what follows.

Endowed with a hard-hitting set of pipes, tall and whiplash thin distaffer flicks her songology across with telling impact. Such standard calypsos as "Tongue-tied Baby," "Hold 'im Joe," and "Pull Down Your Shades, Marie," are spaced with such high-life musical bits as "Charge It" and "Lush Life." All get bountiful returns, and deservedly. Roy Romero does a bang-up backing job on the bongos and shares in the salvos tendered Miss Premice at the wrap-up.

Jimmy Ames breaks it up again. For the umpteenth time this year, this tumult comic doubles many over here. Noisy and overpowering, Ames grabs the aud early and doesn't let them get away. Interlarding topical one-liners with his Iragusi Indian and southern bits, comic runs the gamut of performance with songs, ad libs and good-natured ringside barbs delivered at the table. Closing with his riotous musical saw bit, he encores using his wife in a ventriloquist routine that displays further versatility. He goes off to a big mitt.

The Stylers do a short opening stint and the youthful vocal trio exhibits more future promise than present performance. This is in large part due to use of a dated "Davy Crockett" piece of material replete with artificial, propped-up foreign versions of the Crockett legend. Group opens well with a spec rendition of "Shine," creating a strong impression of youthful exuberance, harmonious voice blending and lively movement. Inclusion of an excellent barbershop oldie and, again, a dated rock 'n' roll tune, displays group's excellent versatility and augurs well for the act, if brought up to date. Group gets neat aud reaction.

Joe Parnello and Al De Marco do a workmanlike job of showbacking and Kenny Sweet plays a tasty intermission piano.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, Aug. 4.

McGuire Sisters, Jack E. Leonard, Blackburn Twins, Boots McKenna Dancers, Jack Curtis, Joe Frascetto Orch (12); $5 minimum.

McGuire Sisters plus the not so large Jack E. Leonard and Blackburn Twins are the attraction this week at Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's midtown 500 Club—all back again for a mid-season date.

Paced by Phyllis, sisters Chris and Dottie put on a bangup show, serving up 10 numbers, many familiar because of their being waxed, or heard via the Godfrey tv shows. "Sincerely," their top Coral disk, is outstanding, while the ballad "Picnic" from the motion picture scores heavily.

Girls mix numbers well. In "Sisters" Phyllis is deserted to do carbons of the wax greats. As a trio they jam "Alabama Jubilee" playing—but not too well—piano, sax and bells with the orch. In "You're So Much A Part of Me" they utilize prop Coke bottles plus sputtering cigarets. Numbers are nicely paced with "Think Of Me Kindly" their begoff piece. Beautifully gowned, the girls again score solidly and bid to give the spot good midseason biz. They play to a sellout at their opening dinner show.

Leonard, down 100 or so pounds, is an oldtimer as far as the resort crowd is concerned. His brand of humor, perhaps at times too brash for the dinner show set, when many youngsters are out with their parents for the evening, is good for plenty of yocks for the regulars.

Blackburn Twins, two boys who register well with the femme trade, set show's pace with some nifty song and dance numbers, their mirror bit being tops. Boots McKenna Dancers complete good bill with two production numbers.

Frolic, Revere B'ch

Revere Beach, Mass., Aug. 1.

Eileen Rodgers, Nick DeMarco, Jean Dawn, Buddy Thomas Line (11), Bob Warren, Cliff Natalie Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Eileen Rodgers, Columbia Records chirp, on a return date here after a winter date, is bringing crowds across the Harbor from the nearby Hub for bonifaces Chick Della Russo and Jimmy Cella. Seasoned by some top bookings since hitting the nitery circuit a year ago, Miss Rodgers, who opened Sunday (29) for a week, gives conclusive proof that she has all the elements necessary to rate a niche with top contemporaries. Night caught (1), singer nabbed three encores for begoff.

Since last seen, she has added light comedy bits, walkarounds, aud participations and a satirical "Heartbreak Hotel" a la Elvis Presley. She gets big returns with current disking "Miracle of Love" with immediate response. Smartly-groomed looker has gained stature and stage presence and wraps up the aud sailing through a half dozen bits like "I've Got the World On a String," "Masquerade Is Over" and "Love Thy Neighbor." Whether rhythm or ballad, she commands attention with full, husky voice of great tonal range. The Mitch Miller protege proves a big crowd pleaser in this spot.

Nick DeMarco (see New Acts) does a slick comedy turn in the relaxed manner and Jean Dawn scores with amazing acro work on ladders and working from the floor. Buddy Thomas line is a standout with 10 tall-stemmed lovelies and production singer Bob Warren unveils a big baritone for "Sing You Sinners." Cliff Natalie batons the show with a crisp beat.

Mocambo, Hollywood

Roberta Linn, Paul Hebert Orch (7), Carl Carelli Trio, Frankie Sands; $2 cover.

Since departing the wholesome aegis of Lawrence Welk, Roberta Linn's been exploring the boites with a new act which, her entourage insists, displays her new "sexy" personality. What emerges from the current Mocambo show is a sweet and pretty girl with a good set of pipes and the musical knowhow to exploit them well, but by no stretch of definition of "sexy" chanteuse.

Miss Linn demonstrates that she certainly knows her way around a song. However, the question is whether she as yet has that certain extra something which might be termed "authority," for lack of a better word, to capture and hold the normally hardboiled bistro crowd. From the show caught, it appears that she needs more seasoning before she can be considered a topline attraction.

As for the act itself, staged by Charlie O'Curran, it's startlingly short — 25 minutes — considering that it's the sole attraction on the current Mocambo bill. Within this time, Miss Linn ranges over a wide catalog of moods with commendable dexterity. Her bridging chatter, however, could stand sharpening to highlight the otherwise straightforward songalog.

Nelson Riddle's noteworthy arrangements are served up with a nice control of volume by Paul Hebert's augmented (three extra players) house orch. Billy Rose's accompanying pianistics also show fine musicianship. Miss Linn's costuming, by mother, Mrs. Madge Linn, is a definite asset.

The Herbert aggregation alternates with the Carl Carelli Trio, featuring vocalist Frankie Sands, for the dancefloor devotees.

Club Harlem, A. C.
(FOLLOWUP)

Atlantic City, Aug. 3.

Arthur Lee Simpkins is in to augment Larry Steele's "Smart Affairs of '57," summer fixture at Club Harlem, midtown sepia spot. Singer is on for half-hour stint appearing before Steele's big finale production number.

Simpkins is altogether new as entertainment in this spot, which for a decade has drawn them with a topnotch revue mixing dance numbers, songs and fast patter. His big voice is best in his operatic bits, but he mixes his program for his audience.

Pops like "Autumn Leaves," "Sweet Marie," "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," "I'll Get By," etc., fill up the greater part of his songalog, and with his patter before each number delights the customers.

Contrast between Simpkins and the Steele show is too great—both good but working against each other. Steele's fast-moving and sometimes bluish revue comes to an abrupt halt to let singer go on with an entirely different kind of act. When his half-hour is over, attempt is made to recapture mood with Steele's "Jukebox" production number. It just can't be done. From Simpkins' "America the Beautiful" to the jukebox mood is just too abrupt a drop for this nitery audience.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Aug. 2.

Count Basie & Band (16), with Joe Williams; no cover or minimum.

Wherever he ventures Count Basie engenders excitement, and no less so in Las Vegas where the casino is king and the Count will prove to be a loyal subject during his initial tour here. For a fortnight then, the Dunes will jump to the familiar Basie wail and the big voice of Joe Williams.

Many legends have been fostered by Basie's two decades as a jazz conductor-pianist, but the real "Count Basie Story" is told by the maestro himself as he hunches over the keyboard and spurs his windjammers through an electrifying 60-minute performance. Currently, Basie and his band are one of the hottest properties on the jazz market. And this fact is perhaps best explained by the Count's ability to flawlessly organize an aggregation of devotedly proficient jazzmen who, inspired by Basie's own verve, effect a distinctive, memorable sound.

Such is evidenced in the soulful baritone sax solo during "Even Tide" by Charlie Fowlkes; the upbeat tenor sax trot on "Little Pony" by Frank Foster; the true trumpet piteh of Wendell Culley and the fervored tenor sax essay by Frank Wess during their respective parts in the dual movements of "Coast To Coast"; the gentle alto sax embrace by Marshall Royal of "Falling In Love"; the rhythmetic bass echoes created by Eddie Jones during an interlude with Basie; Sonny Payne's explosive percussion punctuation of "Dinner With Friends," and the rapport with which trombonists Henry Coker, Ben Powell and Bill Hughes slide the glisses during the flagwavers. The clean, fullbodied sounds of the entire band are best mirrored in such as Wild Bill Davis' arrangement of "April In Paris."

Williams tunes up his vocals with appropriate gusto and definitive expression during his important role as a member of the Basie ensemble. Similarly, he eontours his lyrics and deftly sets phrasing and pace. With Williams, there are no gimmicks. He's a straight standup singer from the old blues shouter who doesn't have to resort to vocal or physical gyrations. He simply employs tremendous range and reserves gestures with preacher-like effectiveness to sock across a point. Williams has become quickly identified with his repertoire and he signals spontaneous salvos as he belts "Alright, O.K., You Win," "Roll 'Em, Pete," "My Baby Upsets Me," "Send Me Someone To Love," "In The Evening" and "Ev'ry Day." Shouts for "more!" are long and loud after his final nod. During Williams' sesh the Count's affectionate, earthy 88ing — around which, of eourse, the Basie commentary revolves — is drawn into sharper foeus. Undeniably, Count Basie will leave an enduring impression on this circuit.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, Aug. 3.

Anne Russell, Joe Reichman Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Second fortnight of the Joe Reichman orch's stand in the Terrace Grill leads off with all indications it will equal or surpass the first fortnight. The customers are coming to hear Reichman and his pianistics and to dance to his rhythms, with the dance floor more crowded than it has been in many a moon. Hotel management is quick to fasten down a good thing, and so is holding the Reichman crew over for at least six more weeks. It all is a very good refresher on the established idea that good music makes for dancing, and the dancers make for business.

Helping to entertain for this fortnight is comedienne Anne Russell making her debut in the room. Reichman does the m.c. honors and opens with a piano piece, and then Miss Russell has it all to herself for 25 minutes. She fills these with a series of comic episodes and impressions, including Sophie Tucker, Lolly Parsons, Mae West and a li'l-ol' gal from Arkansas. She has some moments of well-paced comedy, doing much with Tucker and Parsons, but running long on a bit with a Bridey Murphy basis and the Arkansawer. She meets with moderate customer approval and is quite satisfactory in this particular situation.

Quin.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Aug. 2.

Guy Mitchell, Don Adams, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Combination of comic Don Adams and singer Guy Mitchell proves a fortunate one at the Eddy Bros. restaurant, opening a two-week stand. Show of 50 minutes opening was possibly a bit long, but should settle down nicely at 45 or so for the remainder. And it is one to the liking of the customers, with plenty of laughs from Adams and fair passel of music from Mitchell, both doing their first turns in this room.

Adams' work is deliberate from the first line, but it's a constant pace and the customers soon get with it. His satire on a pocket-book romance and a pep talk a la Leon Football are gems, and he rounds these with jibes at marital spats, phobias and assorted subjects. All of it is in subtle vein, but with points humorously taken and appreciated throughout by the customers.

Mitchell is of the roving western singer type who has settled down to more polished warbling for the record, club and picture trade. There's a long list of songs, from current pops like "Wayward Wind" and "I Could Have Danced All Night" to his recorded hits like "My Truly Fair" and "Pittsburgh, Pa." A couple of novelties and a satirized "Heartbreak Hotel" round it out. Mitchell keeps the pace swift and adds much to the proceedings with his own personality, including a strong registry with the femme contingent. He builds nicely to a solid hand at finish.

Lucerne, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, Aug. 4.

Maurice Rocco, Elaine Deming, Mel Greene, Lucerne Lovelies (5), Jacques Donnet Orch; $2.50 minimum.

This smaller new hotel is holding to the fast moving girl-show policy installed four weeks ago, to remain in competition with the larger cafes along oceanfront row, and is attracting fairish biz. For the low tariff it's a top buy for budget-minded summer vacationers, but the planned-tour ops haven't caught up with the spot as yet, negating the insured profits their bargain-buy groups bring.

Withal, the Lucerne management is still trying. Current production is a breezy one that aecents song and dance with featured act Maurice Rocco adding the rounding out touch to cap the breezy goings-on. He's a deft 88er with solidly staged assortment of boogie, New Orleans beat and current rock 'n' roll tinge added to standup keyboarding and yodeling. Roceo's technique is sound, boasting a basic bounce that befits his frenetics on the breakaways (from the ivories for injects of vocalistics and hoofing trick of getting the tablers to supply handelap backing adds to free and easy effect engendered.

Elaine Deming, a leggy looker, is due for better things, gauged on her progressive restagings through the weeks wherein she's been featured as production lead and soloist. Eye-filling acrodancer has a bagful of flips and twists combined with graceful spins. The visual impact earns her resounding returns.

Mel Green emcees in easy, capable manner and holds his own in the spot handed him with diversified trio of pop and standard. The line—only one in town—has obviously been picked for looks as well as ability to handle capably the high-kick routines and frame-backgrounds for Miss Deming.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, Aug. 2.

Don Cornell, with Jerry Carretta; Bob Cross Orch (12); $2-$2.50 cover.

Don Cornell, featured on Conrad Hilton's big Jan. 18 hotel opening show here, returns for a two-frame Empire Room stand. His interim European nitery tour has added polish and plenty show savvy to the handsome baritone's act.

Singer has a relaxed selling style in his 45-minute stint, reprising (nateh) his w. k. Coral tune waxings. "I'm Yours," "Hold My Hand," "Bible Tells Me So" and "It Isn't Fair" pull mitting. Again he gets a trim femme on stage for his neat "Size 12" gimmick. Medley of oldies is prefaced by pseudo-serious reeitation of comic poetry, nicely done.

Cornell spotlights his vet accompanist, with Jerry Carretta 88'ing an original "Caprice," adding lace to his expert piano backing. Also, maestro Bob Cross is brought on by Cornell for a trumpet solo and vocal of "I Love My Baby," while Cornell (an ex-sideman with Red Nichols and Sammy Kaye bands) takes over on string bass with Cross' band. Spotlight sharing garners heavy mitting and Cornell wraps up a slick show with "Whiffenpoof Song."

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., Aug. 3.

Betty & Jane Kean, Step Bros. (4), Cris Cross, Donn Arden Dancers (10), Dean Campbell, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

A lively variety show unfolds for Greater Cincinnati night clubbers in Beverly's current two-framer.

Popular by reason of previous appearances, the Kean Sisters, Step Bros. and Cris Cross give lotsa entertainment wallop and bidding more visits. Backing them admirably are location forces of the Donn Arden line, in three numbers, with Dean Campbell as singing emcee, and Gardner Benedict's band.

Betty & Jane Kean take over for a full 27 minutes of hilarity immediately after the four Step Bros heat up the boards with 22 minutes of sensational speed and acro hoofing and comedy line breathtakers. The Keans are carefree in burlesque capers, clown vocally, do takeoffs of Marilyn Monroe and Helen Traubel, and Jane sips drinks from ringside tables. Rocky Cole is their pianist.

Cris Cross, mustached ventriloquist, does justice to a 17-minute routine with cowboy, luminous puppet, and life-size dizzy blond figures. His impressions of the Ink Spots' "If I Didn't Care" and the "Tennessee Waltz" tune register solidly.

Koll.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 31.

Gordon MacRae, Jackie Miles, Sheila Stephens, Art Johnson, Donn Arden Dancers (13), Carlton Hayes Orch (14); $2 minimum.

Gordon MacRae's plume atop the marquee should stir up plenty of interest among the show shoppers to keep traffic to the Painted Desert Room moving at a swift gait during the month at hand. Absent from his circuit 15 months, MacRae returns with a fresh, entertaining network of song and theatre. His warmth both vocally and verbally is an instant pleaser. His bary pipes donate a rich verve to his balladeering section that includes "If I Loved You," "I Went to the City" and "Walk Hand in Hand With Me."

Keynote of his turn is a 22-minute vignette of "My Fair Lady." Sock tabloid of the Broadway hit sees MacRae and his wife, Sheila Stephens, reciting the roles of the show's principals, Professor Higgins and Liza Doolittle. MacRae's histrionic astuteness is clearly evidenced as he intones the dialog and belts the show's click tunes, tieing it all together with a slick synopsis narration between scenes. Miss Stephens' portrayal of the wench who, through the professor's tutoring, becomes a lady in Her Majesty's court, is convincing and displays an adept ability to thesp.

MacRae is not limited to song or acting. His manner with comedy is arresting and laugh-evoking. He scores howls with his spoof of rock 'n' roll chanters via "Blue Suede Shoes," and later gathers yocks with his parody of Hollywood acting techniques through studious impreshes of film stars. He caps his 40 minutes onstage with "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning" and the title song from "Oklahoma."

Jackie Miles is a slick monologist who is not unfamiliar to the patrons of this bistro belt. For this Vegas sojourn, he sticks to the topical subject—dice and dice tables. His tales of gambling capers are sock, and the departure from the casino sport to create an infectious character study of the horse bettor and the frustrations of the omnipotent "getaway race" ignites a chain reaction of roars. He then travels to other story locales via song for the kicker.

Donn Arden Dancers launch show with neat terping to "Sweepstakes," a bit of homestretch choreo that includes a trained equine. Centerpiece is a racy modern sortie called "Skyscraper Symphony." Art Johnson competently swings the lyrics to the production numbers. Carlton Hayes guides his tootlers expertly to the show's midway mark, then turns over podium to Van Alexander, who applies a learned hand to the baton during MacRae's sesh.

The Village, S. F.

San Francisco, Aug. 4.

Johnnie Ray, Oscar Cartier, Joy Healy Dancers (7) with Dick Merritt, Leon Radsliff Orch, Guy Cherney; $2 minimum.

Johnnie Ray, with little voice and seemingly tiny talents, shot an electric charge of showmanship through a 400 to 500-person crowd at the refurbished Village and scored an impressive triumph. Partly contributory, of course, was the fact that it was opening night in a club which 18 months ago had burned down and which Chuck Johnston—and $300,000—had revived. Ray undoubtedly sensed this and resolved to do his bit toward a smash opening.

But Ray, too, has acquired a sort of stylization to his herky-jerky movements, his meagre voice and offkey notes. He has learned to concentrate on standards, for the most part, and, above all, he has learned to manipulate the tremendous empathy he establishes with a crowd.

After singing a dozen songs in 35 minutes at opening, Ray begged off and begged off, but the crowd wouldn't let him go. No one moved and clapping, whistling and cries of "more, more" filled the room. So Ray was forced to close—again—with the first number he ever recorded, "Whiskey and Gin."

He opens big with "Who's Sorry Now," and follows this rapidly with "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "If I Had You," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "My Prayer." Then he socks across "Such a Night," replete with swoons and knee bends.

Ray takes a brief breather at this point, explaining in tense, small tones that his mother and father were in attendance and introducing the orchestra. Then, saying it was "once again for you, Mom," he does "Little White Cloud," smashes over "Cry" and caps this with "Walk and Talk with My Lord." The crowd took over here and forced one more number out of Ray, who'll play the Village through Aug. 13.

The 70-minute show opens with a quick dance routine from the Joy Healy group. Oscar Cartier spends 20 minutes running through a string of psychiatric jokes, imitations and a western film takeoff. Cartier is a competent comic with a slight French accent and fairly funny patter. The Healy Dancers return with an elaborate and excellent capsulization of old Broadway musicals. Miss Healy, a curvy blonde, does most of the specialty dances and Dick Merritt fills in on the vocals capably. It's a pleasant 15-minute stint, after which Ray comes on to provide the show's clincher.

Leon Radsliff's orch is good, if a bit loud, and Guy Cherney handles the few emcee formalities nicely.

Murray Franklin's, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, Aug. 1.

Murray Franklin, Bobby Sherwood, Don Rickles, Jo Ann Miller, Peter Brady, Van Smith; two drink minimum.

This intimery opposite the Roney Plaza has become a showcase for talent since the discovery of Roberta Sherwood, who'd been working there for months when Winchell, Sobol, Wilson, show biz toppers and talent managers hopped on the big-boom wagon for the songstress.

Departure of Miss Sherwood from the spot hasn't affected business, thanks to Franklin's astute approach to finding upcoming entertainers looking for a likely showcase, now that his all-nitery is a must-drop-in for local and the tourists, as well as the news-show biz fraternity. The place is packed to turnaway numbers nightly. Franklin is a vet pub operator who doubles as host-emcee (in the Jack White-Club 18 tradition) and entertainer in his emporium. Of late his shows and talent are being angled more and more to the Club 18 idea. He's latched on to two aides who fit into that format in top manner.

Don Rickles, whom he's giving the big buildup via ad campaign, is his comedy key. The guy is in the uninhibited class, with an unpredictable bent for workovers on customers, his barbs directed at the tourists then worked over to whatever name personalties are on the premises. Result is he converts the room into a howling house-party, following no set routine, sparking the yocks with lines that are fresh and ad libbed to the situation at hand.

Rickles primes his warmup on Franklin, then on confrere Bobby ("Masquerade Party") Sherwood before taking on the tablers, who eat up his brash approach. Technically, the guy has no act. What he does comes up with is a screwy series of discourses on topical terms, which contain an intelligent vein of scorn for the niceties. Once he disciplines his 40 minutes into a set act, he can make the bigtime circuit. As is, he's a wacky laughmaker who keeps them coming back for more.

Sherwood, who commutes to Gotham for his Saturday tv'ers, provides the underplayed comedy to balance the antics of Franklin and Rickles. He doubles as emcee, weaves in guitaring, song and trumpeting (with other acts on the bill) working in and out of the proceedings smoothly and effectively.

Jo Ann Miller is the lone femme on the agenda and sets solidly with her mixture of specials, balladings and rhythm tunes. A classy looking thrush, she boasts a talent for playing straight to the Sherwood-Franklin-Rickles oombo and holding her own. Vocally, she handles her tunes artfully to earn big returns. On her special lyrics she works out the lines with canny understanding of the comedy values contained. Miss Miller is easy on the eyes, to add to overall values.

Peter Brady, in the male singing slot, holds his own in this company nicely—a tall, good-looking lad who has the vocability to develop into a strong entry in the better songster ranks. He's in the fast development stage now and with Franklin holding him over for a long stay, should soon add the know-how only experience in a busy spot such as this one can provide.

Van Smith, who longtime conducted for Monte Proser at his La Vie ventures in Gotham, makes plenty of music for the proceedings, adding imaginative invents to the backings.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Aug. 2.

Dennis Day & His Revue, with Natalie Nevins, Don Doyle, William Parsons, Francis Barns, & George Wyle (musical director); Starlets (8), Bill Clifford Orch. $2 minimum.

It's not quite the same old shillelagh. Dennis Day has built himself almost a one-man show, except that the other entries don't always leave him alone on stage. But except for one stint by Natalie Nevins, Day works the entire 65 minutes, which is a pretty long day.

The songalog has new zip. He's worked in only a couple of Irish tunes, using mostly "McNamara's Band," and otherwise stays up to the moment with numbers from "My Fair Lady," and maybe a pop or two. (See New Acts).

Day gives himself plenty opportunity to expand his comedy in this revue, first as a composite Presidential candidate in the opening number, later in a "Wide, Wide, Wide, Wide World" takeoff which puts him in various accents and costumes.

The only other act, as such, in the show is Natalie Nevins, who sings prettily and gets a good response from her giddy-talkative-giggly female who plays the flute.

For a finale the whole cast reprises "Finians' Rainbow." It's a long show, with highs and lows, but comprising in most part an enjoyable Day with his many facets.

Chaudiere, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 31.

Crew Cuts (4), Marge Cameron, Marjorie & Lee Murray, Harry Pozy Orch (8); $1 admission.

The Crew Cuts are showing notable advances in showmanship maturity, but with this more mature presentation has come a solemnity that puzzles the customers. In the Rose Room of the Chaudiere Club, the mob expects the old fireworks and when the Cuts go for more than a half-hour with strangely quiet tunes like "Blue Moon," the mitting, while generous, is almost polite. If the foursome could generate more power during the stint and send up strategic skyrockets now and then, the act's new look would be really big.

Arrangements and handling are socko with strict attention to smallest detail throughout. Stanza's impact is enhanced by batoning of Morty Jay, music director for the Cuts. Tunes are largely w.k. oldies, with their Mercury disclicks featured near closing.

Bill also has Marge Cameron (New Acts), capable femme comic who found opener crowd hard to loosen but managed it smoothly and collected big mitting. She uses some chirping, okay gag material and caricature apings, plus femcee chores. Sprightly, fresh and youthful, Marjorie & Lee Murray brighten the show's mid-section with a stretch of clicko adagio. Male is handsome, femme is fragile blonde looker, both able terpers. Harry Pozy band handles showbacking and dance tunes.

Lotteries on Pan

profit and legal assurance that the maximum proportion of a lottery revenue would get to its announced purpose.

Limitation of lottery advertising to certain restricted poster locations, newspaper space and radio or television time to be prescribed by law.

Filling legal loopholes in the Criminal Code by repealing existing provisions and enacting new ones.

Complete ban on "footnote" in theatres as well as lotteries conducted on radio and video and in newspapers.

Strong enforcement of current laws against possession of illegal lottery and sweepstakes tickets. Even though such laws are on the federal books, big winners are never prosecuted in spite of front-page coverage by their winnings.

Three kinds of lotteries will be let alone if the committee's recommendations are made law. They include those where the retail prize value is less than $5,000 annually; small raffles with prizes totalling less than $50 held coincidental with parties, etc., and midways at agricultural fairs. It was also recommended that such fairs be licensed to stage lotteries with a total prize value not exceeding $10,000 on advance admission ticket sales.

DENNIS DAY REVUE
With Natalie Nevins, Don Doyle, William Parsons, Francis Barns, George Wyle, musical director
Revue
65 Mins.
Riverside, Reno

Hardly a beginner, this is a new departure for Dennis Day, however, comprising a new format entirely. Heretofore he did a single. Now, he has a cast which assists, points up, but only once, takes over.

Revue begins with Day running for president. He's a composite of presidential candidates; golf clubs, cigar, coonskin hat (not so fitting after Kefauver pulled out the following day), a pair of shoes with holes in the soles, etc. He makes a lot of promises in song, and while no particular plank in the platform stirs the voters in this aud, his overall campaign impresses for a good opening.

Jokes about this gambling state fill the gap between opening and his current songs, mostly from "My Fair Lady."

In a takeoff on Garroway, Francis Barns, sits on a stool and takes everyone on a "Wide, Wide—Wide, Wide World" tour in which Day does a rocket scientist about to takeoff; a Russian Walter Winchell, and best of all, a Japanese Elvis Prelsey, complete with bumps and grinds. The other two themes need sharpening in material.

The only Day break comes when Natalie Nevins takes over for a brief period—first with fine clear voice on "Siboney" and then in a surprisingly good comedy bit which has her talking rapidly and endlessly about how she learned to play the flute. This builds slowly. Another number, "Spring Comes Back to Vienna," makes for a strong departure.

Day comes back for his Irish duties, "McNamara's Band" and then leaves it alone. The cast does a kind of synopsis of "Finian's Rainbow," complete with leprechaun (Don Doyle), the Starlets and all the songs. Day and Miss Nevins blend nicely and the whole thing builds to a good finale with "That Great Come-and-Get-It Day."

Running perhaps a little long on its first time out, some editing of the skits, but not the music, should leave a fast moving package.

MARGE CAMERON
Comedy
16 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Marge Cameron is a neatly-stacked, well-gowned brunet looker and for those reasons she'll probably always find the first five minutes tough. Miss Cameron is an able femme comic, with solid material and nice staging, but she doesn't look like a comic and the customers are almost unwilling to laugh until she gets across the idea that she's also funny. Using some chirping and plenty gags, she scores heaviest on caricature apings (Mrs. Roosevelt, Liberace, Presley, others). Then, after collecting palmslaps and guffaws by the bushel, she makes a too-fast switch to pathos, overacts, and gets giggles on solemn lines.

Elimination of the tearjerker stint and rearrangement of the rest of the stanza would help construct a routine that would showcase Miss Cameron's clicko ability in the comedy slot and set her as okay for clubs, disk, television, radio.

NICK DEMARCO
Comic
20 Mins.
Frolic, Revere Beach, Mass.

Nick DeMarco, around for a couple of seasons, but not yet documented, is a standup comic of the relaxed school who gets his best reactions by playing straight at the ringsiders and spotting certain tables for personal delivery. Material is updated topical and forte is longish drama tales with subtle twists. Opening with one-liners, he swings round stage milking tables with gags aimed at the distaffers. He takes a newspaper for headline jokes, some old some new, goes into a spiel on nonexistent clubs in which he has "headlined" for good rounds and winds up with satire on pop singers and an Irish song medley with Italian words. Personable and engaging he's slick in handling the ringsiders, displaying plenty savvy.

DeMarco displays nice tact in handling table chatterers putting them in his pocket with comic pathos beseeching interlaced with spontaneous gags. Looks like a nice bet for intimate class spots.

Guy.

DONNA MILLER
Songs
15 Mins.
El Morocco, Montreal

Donna Miller, making her first nitery bid in Montreal, has several rough edges as a cafe chantootsie but the right polishing and handling should make this femme an okay bet for any of the better spots. Miss Miller started with Leslie Bell's all-girl singing outfit in Toronto and then moved into television variety shows.

Piping shows training and is never monotonous but a tendency to rush all numbers and too much attention to the mechanical aids for projection get in the way of her offering. Songalog is bright and for the most part well-chosen. From a bright opener, Miss Miller turns into something of a special nature and then does a French-English interp of "Paris Skies." Voice is strong enough to ignore the mike occasionally and femme would establish a better relationship between self and the patrons if she relaxed and moved around the floor on some numbers.

Appearance is good and patter straightforward; all she needs is experience and the right showcasing.

ERIC BADICTON (2)
Balancing
9 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Eric Badicton, an expert in the field of roll balancing, seems to be a veteran of many fields but hasn't been logged in VARIETY's New Acts file. Badicton's magnum opus is a handstand on a series of tables, stacked one upon another, entire batch being balanced on the log. Otherwise, he juggles assorted items while on the roller and he also accounts for a few other assorted tricks. A comely femme assists him.

Badicton can be utilized safely in most visual situations.

Palace, N. Y.

Three Tapateers, Tanya, Ross Wyse & June Adams, Billy Shepard, De Mattiazzis, Evers & Dolorez, Marshall & Farrell, Eric Badicton, Kal Kirby House Orch; "I've Lived Before" (U-I), reviewed in VARIETY July 18, '56.

The new Palace bill has some distinguished moments with a pair of effective comedy turns and a good assortment of novelties. The layout has been well-routined by booker Danny Friendly and net result is a highly satisfactory semester.

The major comedy turn is by Pete Marshall & Tommy Farrell, a couple of nitery products who occasionally take a foray into the Palace. This duo, although leaning toward an adolescent type of comedy, seems to be hitting a mature stride. Their work is laced with a spontaneity, and the act shows signs of constant expansion within a basic routine that they've set up. The major opus is a hillbilly farce that's constructed for sophisticates, but even the Palace habitues dig them.

Ross Wyse Jr. assisted by June Adams also brightens up his particular corner with his familiar knockabout and comedy dance turn. Major song turn is by Billy Shepard, recording on the Kapp label and currently riding on "Little Blue Bonnet." Shepard seems to be developing excellently, having come here with a refurbished routine that shows variety and which results in important mittings.

On the novelty side are the De-Mattiazzis doing the mechanical doll turn to hearty results, and Evers & Dolorez, with a good tight-wire terp turn. Male shows some slick footwork on the line, and the lass mixes sex and a dance know-how by executing a dance en pointe on the strand.

In the fiddling line, Tanya gets the most from her turn with "Rumanian Rhapsody" with assists from a Gershwin medley and an overarranged "St. Louis Blues." Overall results, though, indicate that she got her message across to the audience.

Openers are the Three Tapateers, who display a class line of ensemble terps. The solo efforts of these Negro hoofers aren't up to the level of their collective works, which show imagination, good discipline and some picturesque effects. Eric Badicton is under New Acts.

The Quare Fellow

London, July 25.

Script Plays (in association with David Ross) presentation of a comedy-drama in three acts by Brendan Behan. Staged by Joan Littlewood; decor, John Bury. At Comedy Theatre, London, July 24, '56; $2.50 top.

| Holy Healey | Barry Clayton |
| Hangman | Gerry Raffles |
| His Assistant | Howard Goorney |

Originally staged by Theatre Workshop at its east-side theatre a few weeks back, "The Quare Fellow" was brought to town mainly on the strength of the notices by the national press critics. In the main, the transfer is well justified as this macabre comedy-drama, set entirely within a prison, has exceptional topicality values in view of the current controversy over capital punishment. If it can survive the summer doldrums, the production should have a healthy and profitable run.

Brendan Behan, the 33 year old Irish playwright, whose first play this is, spent some eight years in English prisons for his IRA activities. He writes, therefore, from first-hand experience, and what's more, has acute powers of observation, a facile pen and the happy knack of extracting a laugh from the grimmest of situations.

His play has one weakness—the action tends to drag in the middle. That fault could easily be corrected by a minor rewriting job, which should be done before it transfers to New York under the David Ross banner. There's likely film material in it, too.

The author has mustered a typical assortment of prisoners, including a reprieved murderer dreading his life sentence; a pervert, shunned by his fellow inmates; the petty thieves, hardened criminals and the superior embezzler. But their main topic of conversation is the fate of the quare fellow—the man in the condemned cell, due to be executed in the morning.

Aside from the convicts, the author spotlights the state of mind of the warders who are on the death watch. By contrast, there's a jovial hangman—"himself" to the prison staff, who cheerfully gets tight on the eve of the execution.

The opening act, set in the cell block, establishes the prison characters. The comedy comes mainly from the old hands who feign rheumatism so that they can swipe a swig from a bottle of methylated spirits while they're being massaged. The drama is mainly derived from the reprieved murderer who attempts suicide by hanging, rather than face a lifetime in prison.

These odd characters are shrewdly etched and the fluent dialog sets the scene for the main drama. There's not too much obvious propaganda in stating the case against hanging, although the message is clear and unmistakable. The condemned man is never seen, but his presence is always felt; and the running commentary by one of the prisoners on the procession to the execution block is one of the more macabre things of the London stage.

The acting by the regular Theatre Workshop company is on a sound, even level, but Maxwell Shaw stands out in the dual roles of a prisoner with a glib Irish tongue and a double-dealing prison official. In the all-male cast there are noteworthy performances also by Gerard Dynevor, Gerry Raffles, as the hangman, and Barry Clayton, as the embezzler. Latter also doubles. Joan Littlewood's staging is efficient.

The Long Echo

London, Aug. 2.

Laurier Lister Productions (in association with L.O.P. Ltd.) presentation of drama in three acts, by Lesley Storm. Stars Joyce Redman, Moira Lister, Denholm Elliott. Staged by Murray Macdonald. At St. James' Theatre, London, Aug. 1, '56; $2.50 top.

|---|---|
| Fay Edwards | Joyce Redman |
| Kate Waterhouse | Moira Lister |
| Alex Shanklin | Denholm Elliott |
| Sybil Edwards | Marjorie Fielding |
| Clifton Ryan | David Hutcheson |
| Mrs. Wilkins | Philippa Gill |

This meller of missing diplomats and scientists recalls the case of several years ago of the defection of two young Englishmen to the Soviet cause. The show is likely to get controversial audience reaction and should be helped by the author's reputation.

First two acts are over-talky, only marking time to the dramatic finale when the wife is cajoled into rejoining her traitor husband. The whole plot might better have been condensed into a one-acter.

Joyce Redman and Marjorie Fielding have the bulk of the emotional scenes as the respective wife and mother of a young scientist who has mysteriously disappeared behind the Iron Curtain. After five years' marriage, and then 14 months living in shameful seclusion following her husband's desertion, the wife's nerves are at breaking point as her sister urges her to divorce and remarry.

She is about to give in when a friend of her husband turns up to urge her to go to Paris for a planned reunion. The journey emerges as a trap, however, and the escorting friend returns with the news that she has gone over to the other side. Whether the play is supposed to be a plea for tolerance or an example of conflict between love and patriotism is not clear.

Moira Lister equals the firstrate performances of the other players as the apprehensive sister whose fears proved well founded, and Denholm Elliott scores with a realistic portrait of the communist tempter David Hutcheson forsakes his usual light comedy style as a potential husband. Piece is directed in leisurely pace by Murray Macdonald. Clem.

The Seagull

London, Aug. 3.

John Clements (for Associated Rediffusion Ltd.) revival of drama in four acts, by Anton Chekov, translated by David Magarshack. Stars Diana Wynyard. Staged by Michael Macowan; settings and costumes, Motley. At Saville Theatre, London, Aug. 3, '56; $2.50 top.

|---|---|
| Irina Arkadina | Diana Wynyard |
| Konstantin | Lyndon Brook |
| Peter Sorin | George Relph |
| Nina | Perlita Neilson |
| Ilya Shamrayev | David Bird |
| Boris Trigorin | Hugh Williams |
| Simone Dorn | Nicholas Hannen |
| Paulina | Kara Aldridge |
| Masha | Jill Bennett |
| Semyon Medvedenko | John Bennett |

In this new translation by David Magarshack of the Chekhov tragedy, the morbid tone remains, and the stage is still cluttered with various family members who always adorn these Russian plays. The pace at times seems deliberately slowed, accentuating the morbid passages. Third in the short season of classics which John Clements is presenting at the Saville for Associated Rediffusion, this Chekov revival will probably attract specialized audiences for the limited period scheduled.

The title role of the pathetic girl who aspires to a stage career after a lovesick neighbor writes a play for her, then elopes with a famous writer who deserts her, calls for plenty of emoting. Perlita Neilson alternately sparkles and wilts through these fateful passages with a touching air of resignation.

Lyndon Brook, as her unsuccessful suitor who shoots himself in frustration, seems to have his feet too firmly on the ground to make feasible the jealous neurosis indicated by the author. The selfish exhibitionism of the mother, the aging actress dreading the competition of youth, is superbly conveyed by Diana Wynyard.

Hugh Williams as the seducer who temporarily deserts maturity for youth, Nicholas Hannen as the doctor and George Relph as the host, give first rate performances.

Doctor in the House

London, July 31.

Jack Hylton Presentation of comedy in two acts, by Ted Willis, from the novel by Richard Gordon. Directed by Richard Bird. At Victoria Palace, London, July 30, '56; $2 top.

|---|---|
| Tony Grimsdyke | Alan White |

| Vera | Sonya Cordeau |
| Bromley | Douglas Ives |
| Sir Lancelot Spratt | Frank Thring |
| Miss Winslow | Anthea Askey |
| Matron | Elizabeth Alys |
| Janet | Jennifer Wright |

Following the universal success of the film version of Richard Gordon's book "A Doctor in the House," it was quite an idea to dramatize it, and for Jack Hylton to put it on at his usual Crazy Gang headquarters, the Victoria Palace, to run twice nightly. The producer has assembled a competent, vigorous cast, and the whole thing is put over with a gay abandon that should please the author.

Despite its boisterous gaiety, however, the show never captures the mischievous, near-adolescent charm of the budding medico so deftly conveyed in the screen edition. It remains at best a good holiday offering for this particular

Revive 1606 'Theatre'

Halifax, Aug. 7.

"Neptune's Theatre," said to be the first play written and staged in North America, will be revived next week, 350 years after its original preem. It will be done at Port Royal, N.S., sponsored by the Historical Assn. of Annapolis Royal and the Annapolis District Drama Group.

Play was written by Marc Lescabot, a Parisian lawyer who came to Port Royal with the explorer Samuel de Champlain, in front of whose home it will be performed. The piece was aimed to keep Champlain's men busy during a lull, and it was produced in 1606 to greet an exploration party on its return from an expedition into the wilds around Cape Cod.

The World's My Oyster

|---|---|
| John D. Rockingchair | Ned Wright |
| Albert Fulton Brown | Lorenzo Fuller |
| Laura | Jacqueline Barnes |
| Queen Elizabeth Victoria | Butterfly McQueen |
| King Friday | Moses LaMarr |
| Monday | Helen Ferguson |
| Windsor | Paul Hepburn |
| Island inhabitants | Helen Hayues, Plumath Brent, Jocelyn Martinez, Lew Smith, Linurte Wynn, Herman Howell |

"The World Is My Oyster" belies the professional talent and reputable off-Broadway production outfit connected with its presentation. It's an amateur league item. The story is unimaginative and poorly scripted, the performances are generally uninspired and the lyrics, for the most part, are thin. The music, however, provides an occasional lift.

The tuner, utilizing an all-Negro cast, was written by Carley Mills and Lorenzo Fuller, the latter also doubling as a lead performer. He and three other cast members, Ned Wright, Moses LaMarr and Helen Ferguson, are "Porgy and Bess" alumni. Also handling major assignments are Butterfly McQueen, who has legit, film and radio credits; Phil Hepburn, who's appeared on Broadway in a number of shows, and Jacqueline Barnes, who had been understudying the role in which she appears.

The yarn, a feeble springboard for about 14 tunes, concerns two slick New Yorkers who go after pearls on a long forgotten South Sea island. One falls for the local princess and decides to stay, and the other is forced to do the same. The vehicle takes some potshots at certain aspects of progressive civilization, but the technique is sophomoric and the result ineffectual.

The choreography by Walter Nicks and Louis Johnson and executed by six dancers, is adequate considering the limitations of the small stage. Serviceable sets and costumes were supplied respectively by Henry Buckmaster and Lew Smith. Jed Duane, founder of the Actor's Playhouse, staged the production. Jess.

MARCEL AYME VETOES TEST OF 'CLEREMBARD'

French playwright Marcel Ayme has refused to okay a U. S. stock tryout of his comedy, "Clerembard." The show was tentatively slated for production this week at the Murray Theatre, Princeton, N. J. The presentation would have employed the Norman Denny adaptation as prepared for U. S. production by scenic designer Leo Kerz and Willem van Loon.

Kerz, who's had the property under option for Broadway production for about a year, is understood to have been in favor of the Princeton test, but the author nixed it. The play was originally a hit in Paris and the Denny adaptation was a success in London.

Gets Goddard Post

Plainfield, Vt., Aug. 7.

Joseph Rosenberg, of Iowa City, winner of the 1955 Feldman Memorial Award in Playwriting, has been named as instructor in dramatics at Goddard College here.

A graduate student at the U. of N. Carolina and the State U. of Iowa, he wrote plays and staged productions.

Inside Stuff—Legit

"A Sudden Spring," currently being tried out in strawhat with Celeste Holm as star, is a revise by Elihu Winer of the Halsted Welles comedy fable with music, originally produced by Cheryl Crawford & T. Edward Hambleton, for the Experimental Theatre (sponsored by the American National Theatre & Academy), at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, N.Y., for six performances starting March 14, 1948. It is a light, imaginative yarn about an abortive romance between a circus performer and a college president. Vera Zorina played the trapeze artist in the original, with a cast including Rita Gam, Philip Bourneuf, Ernest Truex and Geoffrey Lumb. It was staged by the author.

The strawhat edition, staged by Bill Butler, broke in last week at the Pocono Playhouse, Mountainhome, Pa., and is playing this week at the Falmouth Playhouse, Coonamassett, Mass. The script is being considered for Broadway this season by Alfred de Liagre Jr. Incidental tunes are by Irving Actman, with lyrics by Ruth Hughes Aarons. The songs for the 1948 original were credited to Lorenzo Fuller.

Addendum to the career of John Henry Mears, the theatrical manager and producer, who died July 26, was his career as a globetrotter. In 1913, he set a record for circling the world, after leaving N.Y. and travelling 21,066 miles, in 35 days. In 1928, he flew a light plane with Capt. Charles Collyer to cover the same route in 23 days. Mears, who was 78, also penned lyrics for George Gershwin and Harry Tierney tunes.

The Painted Days

Augusta, Mich., Aug. 1.

Jack P. Ragotzy presentation of a new play by John Byrne, in two acts (seven scenes). Staged by Ragotzy; sets, Dusty Reeds; lighting, Richard Foose and Jack Herr; costumes, Karen Lauridsen, Vera Stough; sound, Gay Kleimenhagen. At Barn Theatre, Augusta, July 31, '56.

|---|---|
| Stacy | Betty Ebert |
| Tom Foley | Edwin Barron |
| Bright | Dusty Reeds |
| Martin Laurey | John Newton |
| Julia | Jane McArthur |
| Tim | Jon Cypher |
| Giddap O'Dea | Al Huckley |
| Dr. Mooney | Harry Dorman |
| Micko | Robert Turoff |

As a rule the reactions of first-nighters can be discounted, but the audience response to this new drama by 20th Century-Fox scripter John Byrne, could be a reliable yardstick. Broadway producers Adna Karns and Marshall Jamieson had an option on "Painted Days," but figured it was too Irish to be a good commercial bet. The script was later sold to 20th-Fox, for production in Britain next year, and the studio put Byrne on the payroll.

"Painted Days" was given minor reworking by strawhat producer-director Jack P. Ragotzy for tryout at his local Equity spot, but it's still Byrne speaking, drawing on an authentic background acquired during lengthy residence in Ireland. The author hasn't let dialect or quaintness get in the way of the interest-holding narrative about a blind girl brought to an Irish farm by her roughhewn but loving bridegroom, and her dismay when, on recovering her sight, she faces an ugly, drab world—in contrast to the vividly-painted one she'd carried in her mind.

Byrne has effectively blended realism and a poetic undertone, and creates sympathy for his interesting, lifelike characters. The drama hits a crackling climax when the bride first "sees" her husband for the first time. The ending has real suspense that hold the audience taut.

Jane McArthur gives an intense, touching performance in the rewarding role of the young wife, and resident actor, John Newton gives a solidly convincing portrayal of the down-to-earth Irish stock dealer who fears that his bride's recovery of her sight will end their marriage. Betty Ebert (Mrs. Ragotzy), as a designing vixen cousin; Dusty Reeds, as the bridegroom's stern-visaged, disapproving aunt, and Al Hinckley, as a friendly veterinarian, are genuinely helpful.

The play, with a little more tightening and pointing, should stand a good chance for bigger showcasing, despite the possible limiting effect of its Gaelic theme. Bell.

First Night

Sea Cliff, N. Y., Aug. 1.

Thomas G. Ratcliffe production of comedy by A. P. Mollison. Directed by Louis Macmillan; set by Cleon Throckmorton; special art work, Warren Pfaff; costumes, Paul Townsen; lighting, John Coolidge. At Sea Cliff Summer Theatre, Sea Cliff, N.Y., July 30-Aug. 4, '56.

|---|---|
| Lisa | Lenka Peterson |
| Prudence | Edith King |
| Louis | Jeff Harris |
| Prosper | Harry Bannister |
| Lord Fragonard | Peter Brandon |
| Countess | Beulah Garrick |
| Millades | Vincent Gardenia |
| First Sergeant | Al Spartic |
| Soldiers | John Dullaghan, Jerry Pagano |

Billed as a 13th century satire, "First Night" develops into a bedcoat of a different color before the evening is even half through. Central theme of this medieval romp is "le droit de seigneur," the legendary right of the lord of the manor to spend the wedding night with a peasant bride.

Central characters are a handsome noble who prefers reading books to the customary war-making of his class who wishes to abolish "le droit" and Lisa, an intelligent, strong-willed and attractive peasant girl who faces marriage with a loutish merchant only for the sake of her first night with the lord.

The situation is a cutie and should be productive of high moments of low comedy. But the author has made too much of Lisa and the lord, too little of the custom that gave the play its title (the script was originally titled "Lisa and the Lord" when read several years ago under the New Dramatists Committee; change was made on religious grounds). Instead of good earthy farce, "Night" becomes a romantic comedy that never quite gets off the ground.

Louis MacMillan's direction is deft and spirited, producing a lot more action than would be expected on the single set, a combination interior-exterior of a peasant cottage that adds another well-earned feather to the cap of designer Cleon Throckmorton.

Lenka Peterson is excellent as Lisa, and Peter Brandon, though occasionally thrown off stride by some of his stage business, does justice to the lord. Edith King and Harry Bannister capitalize the roles of Lisa's mother and prospective father-in-law. Beulah Garrick is sweepingly comic as the domineering countess the lord is about to marry for political reasons, and Jeff Harris is acceptable as Lisa's suitor, as clever in the ways of commerce as he is stupid in those of love.

But it is Vincent Gardenia who steals the scenes with his broadly lined characterization of a sensitive foot soldier who would rather be a cook. His consistent yock-pulling suggests that what the audience wants, what the play needs, is considerably more slapstick relief. Al Spartic also does well in the minor role of a sergeant.

Sound on the Goose

Westport, Conn., July 29.

Lucille Lortel presentation of drama by Nicholas Biel. Staged by Frank Silvera; settings, Roger Furman; assistant director, Luther James. At White Barn Theatre, Westport, Conn., July 29, '56.

Cast: Richard Silvera, Jacqueline Bertrand, Edward Groag, Billy James, Louis Gossett, Marilyn Thornton, James Alpo, William Edmondson, Lothar Rewalt, Sid Conrad, Osceola Archer, Edmund Williams, Jerry Raphael.

As an outlet for theatrical talent that might otherwise be indefinitely submerged, Lucille Lortel's White Barn Theatre is performing a worthwhile function in this strawhat hideaway. Whether or not its newest tryout, "Sound on the Goose," could survive commercial presentation is anybody's guess. It does, however, provide a better-than-adequate showcase for some good acting, writing and staging. And the physical production belies its two-performance existence.

Script is an interesting treatise on the web that entangles a German immigrant family, living at the Erie Canal Basin in pre-Civil War days, when its members inadvertently become involved in aiding slaves to escape to Canada. Situations allow for a number of tense scenes which are generally well handled, from both acting and directorial standpoints.

Aussie Having Record Legit Boom, With Broadway and London Imports

Sydney, July 31.

The Aussie legitimate scene is currently at its brightest and seems likely to continue through the lush Yuletide span at an alltime high.

J. C. Williamson Ltd., ace Aussie legit operators, have hit the box-office jackpot here with the London success, "Reluctant Debutante," starring Britishers Roger Livesey and Ursula Jeans, and with "Can-Can," with Sheila Arnaud.

The Borovansky Ballet has passed it 1000th performance in this territory under the JCW banner. Deal has just been signatured in New York for "Pajama Game" to play here at year's end.

A new Gilbert-Sullivan troupe opens Aug. 2 in Melbourne, and Frank Tait, m.d., is dickering for more U.S. and British shows for here covering the '57 span.

Garnet Carroll, top independent legit producer now abroad on major show buys, has had "Kismet" running for nine months at the Princess, Melbourne. He will bring the musical into Sydney next month at the Empire theatre in association with JCW.

Carroll, longtime partner of the late Ben Fuller, said he plans to import more New York and London successes, with the best talent available.

David N. Martin, head of the Tivoli vaudeville loop, has broken into the legit field at the Elizabethan theatre, Newtown, with "Witness for the Prosecution" and will probably have a good run. He is now keen to spot more legit shows here this year and into '57.

West German Theatre Gets $25 Million Subsidy, Employs 17,000 People

Subsidized theatre in West Germany operates on an approximate $25,000,000 annual budget. That's based on a recently released German Tourist Information Office survey of that country's legit situation.

According to the data released by the GTIO through its N.Y. rep, Stephen Goerl Associates, there were around 300 theatres in operation during the 1954-55 season. Of those 114 were permanent subsidized companies. Another 127 towns, with insufficient funds to maintain regular troupes, put on shows with guest performers, while around 60 more theatres were privately operated.

The legit employee roster for the '54-'55 stanza, as noted in the survey, was 17,000, of which 4,200 were performers. Production statistics for the season listed 1,900 plays, 1,200 operas and operettas and 656 concerts. These presentations, the GTIO stated, drew 17,-700,000 patrons.

Of the $25,000,000 theatre subsidy, about two-thirds comes from the communities, while state and federal funds account for the balance, derived largely from taxes on the state-owned gambling casinos. Raffles are also used to raise legit production coin. The b.o. tab for straight plays, incidentally, usually starts at a low of about 50c.

Theatre Ensemble Sets 'Hedda' Revival Off-B'way

Theatre Ensemble, a legit producing partnership, has been formed by Jane White, Archie Smith and Jed Horner. First venture of group will be a revival of "Hedda Gabler" at an undesignated off-Broadway theatre in October or November. The project is an outgrowth of a successful production of the Ibsen drama last May at the Kaufman Auditorium, N. Y.

Miss White will play the title role, with Smith as Eilert Lovborg, Helen Auerbach as Thea Elvsted, Osceola Archer as Aunt Julia Tesman, Estelle Hemsley as Bertha and Will Kuluva as Judge Brack. The show will be staged by Harner, with scenery by Hugh Hardy and costumes by Frank Brady.

The outfit plans the production of three new scripts later in the season.

A Doctor on the House Under New Equity Plan

Getting a doctor to make an outside-office call has become something of an achievement in New York, but should henceforth be a routine matter for members of Actors Equity. A new service for union performers working in the Broadway area has been instituted under the Health Insurance Plan to handle the situation.

Arrangement calls for doctors to visit theatres when requested to do so between the hours of 7 p.m. to midnight. No charge is involved for the actor, Equity or the producer. All the performer has to do is phone the proper number and identify himself.

'Bus' Netted 320G On $60,000 Ante

Backers of "Bus Stop" had earned a 257% profit on their $60,-000 investment as of a June 2 accounting. That covered the May 5 closing of the touring company, which followed by two weeks the fold of the Broadway production.

Income on the Robert Whitehead-Roger L. Stevens two-company venture included operating profit, stock and foreign royalties, film coin on the sale of the William Inge play to 20th-Fox for $75,000 down, plus weekly payments on profit stanzas up to a $250,000 ceiling, and other sundry revenue.

The net profit, as listed below, represents the take after deduction of director Harold Clurman's 5% share, which he got in addition to 2% of the gross on both companies. Highlights from the June 2 audit include the following:

Original capital (repaid), $60,-000.

Net profit, $337,126.

Total distributed profit, $320,000 (split 50-50 between the backers and management).

WEDGE IS A WHATSIS CLICK IN ATLANTIC CITY

Atlantic City, Aug. 7.

There may be some question whether the Wedge Summer Cabaret, presenting stripper Julie Gibson in "White Cargo," is legit, nitery or burlesque, but it's certainly show biz. The spot on the boardwalk adjoining the Ritz Carlton Hotel, just had a six-week run with the show.

Under local regulations, legit may not be presented in a frame building. So producers Buddy Ottenberg and Al Nirenberg installed a bar and added tables and chairs. Their show, the same as they played last year in Philly vaude houses and at John Kenley's strawhat at Bristol, Pa., was a hoked up version of the old Leon Gordon meller about the colonial agent and the sexy native girl.

Ottenberg and Nirenberg use a full Equity company, with Leslie Cutler as director and Ervil Hart stage manager. Besides seeking additional bookings for the balance of this season, the partners are muttering about some fairly spectacular shows for next year, including such brainstorms as Laurel and Hardy playing the two old ladies in "Arsenic and Old Lace," Menasha Skulnik in "Seven Year Itch" and Tallulah Bankhead in "Little Women." As they explain it, they're looking for "something different."

Columbus Papers Match N.Y. Show Trip Packages

Columbus, Aug. 7.

Two local dailies are offering rival all-expense show trips to New York for the early fall. The Citizen has skedded a seven-day excursion for Oct. 7-13 and the Dispatch a five-day jaunt over the long Labor Day weekend.

Former will cost $106.50 per person, including theatre tickets. The latter will be $65, but docs not include legit.

STARBUCK CLAIM SETTLED

$7,500 Payment In Dispute Over 'Fanny' Choreography

Breach of contract claim of choreographer James Starbuck against Joshua Logan and David Merrick, producers of "Fanny," has been settled for $7,500. The case had been scheduled for arbitration.

Starbuck was originally signed to do the dances for the musical, but was replaced during the tryout tour, with Helen Tamiris taking over.

Trim Distrib Of Actors Fund Tix

Distribution of tickets has been tightened for Actors Fund of America benefits. The organization is limiting allotment to actors working on Broadway to two each, including members of the company giving the benefit performance. The previous practice was to give a larger number of ducats to the performing contingent.

In cases where the demand exceeds the available number of seats, it'll be on a first-come-first-served basis. Those unable to get seats will have first call at the next benefit performance. In reverse situations where the demand isn't too heavy, more than the two-ducat minimum will be allowed.

The Fund's move stemmed from actor beefs over the unavailability of tickets for a benefit performance some weeks ago of "My Fair Lady." Over 600 performers signed a petition to the Equity council protesting the distribution of seats for the show. Approximately 400 seats had already been accounted for before the Fund began its distribution, including tix taken by the producing office and the theatre management.

In situations where a heavy demand for tickets is anticipated, the producer and theatre owner will be asked to release the bulk of their house seats for distribution by the Fund. That was done at a recent "Most Happy Fella" benefit.

Facing the Fund in the situation is the necessity of reserving enough desirable seats for each benefit to accommodate its regular clientele. That is a sizable group, which attends all benefit performances, and as such, provides a backbone of business for the whole benefit setup. That is in contrast to the tendency of working actors to patronize the benefit performances of only the smash hits.

'GINGER' SUBSID RIGHTS ACCOUNTS FOR PROFIT

"Time Out for Ginger," which had a seven-month Broadway run during the 1952-53 season, has become a delayed financial hit and a hot property on the amateur market. The Shepard Traube-Gordon Pollock (in association with Don Hershey) production recently made a $10,000 profit divvy, after repaying a $17,500 balance on its $50,000 investment last January. The subsidiary-rights income has been a key factor in the payoff.

The Ronald Alexander comedy, which toured for two seasons subsequent to its N.Y. run, picked up $18,663 from stock and amateur rights during the 15 months ending last May. Other income during that period included $3,600 from CBS-TV for its video presentation of the play and $540 from Hal Wallis for a short term option, later dropped, on the film rights.

'Saint' to Get Reprieve In Dublin and Via TV

Appearing with him in the legit version will be Michael MacLiammoir, who'll handle the part created by Paul Lukas. Redmond will make an Ireland-Hollywood hop for the Lux offering.

Tent Theatres a Hypo to Local Biz; A New Angle to an Old Situation

Tent theatres, a spreading summer legit development in recent years, are having an obvious but usually overlooked payoff aspect. That's their stimulating effect on community economics. It's an accentuation of the rule that applies to all entertainment media that draw people out of their homes, with consequent expenses in categories ranging from gasoline to gastronomy.

Regular barn theatres are similarly effective in hypoing local business, but the impact is greater in the case of the canvastops, because they generally accomodate larger audiences. Illustrating the community payoff wrinkle is the near-1,600-seat Finger Lakes Lyric Circus, located in Skaneateles, N.Y. The town has a population of approximately 2,800.

A hefty amount of coin, stemming from the theatre itself, is brought into the community each summer. The tent is currently in its fifth year of operation. Funds that make their way from the canvastop to various localites include living expenditures of the talent involved in the operation. Around $5,000 weekly is shelled out in salaries, with a large percentage of that going for boarding at private homes, food, cleaning, laundry and other essentials.

Besides the salary angle, the tent patronizes local businessmen for practically all its needs. That includes lumber for sets, printing (exclusive of ads), electrical work, etc. The local ice cream and soda pop distributors also get into the picture as do organizations utilizing the theatre for benefits, on which they clear a healthy take. Around 700 costumes for this season's shows are another item being made locally, while townspeople are employed as ushers and parking lot attendants.

The audience, which comprises localites and patrons from areas outside Skaneateles, also figures in the community payoff. With an average of 500 cars showing up at the theatre nightly, it's figured

Cancel Strawhat Test of Hecht's 'Winkleberg'

Boston, Aug. 7.

Lee Falk has cancelled a tryout of the new Ben Hecht drama, "Winkleberg," at his Boston Summer Theatre. He says he and Jerome Capp, brother of cartoonist Al Capp, will produce the play on Broadway this fall, after a tuneup tour.

The strawhat operator explains that the local break-in was called off because of Hecht's film commitments on the Coast. The play deals with a character resembling the late Greenwich Village eccentric, Maxwell Bodenheim, but is not a literal biog, Falk declares.

CBS Himself OK'd Siobhan as Joan

Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 7.

Siobhan McKenna, Irish actress who will play the title role in a revival of "Saint Joan" as the final production of the Cambridge Drama Festival, has revealed that she was once recommended for the part by Bernard Shaw himself. The actress was here last week to look over the three-level Elizabethan stage of Harvard's Sanders Theatre, where the drama will open Aug. 15.

Miss McKenna revealed that she had first translated "Joan" into Gaelic. Later she learned that Shaw had given permission for the play to be produced in Gaelic by Irish group at An Taibhdheare, on a royalty-free basis. She also was told that the author had written to Gabriel Pascal, who held the rights to his plays, advising him to take note of an Irish actress named Siobhan McKenna.

"After that, it didn't seem to take quite so much temerity to undertake the role," she says. She played it in Gaelic at An Taibhdheare and in English for four months at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, and then for six months in London, to unusual critical praise. She was invited to repeat the performance at the Paris Festival last spring, but the British Arts Council vetoed the idea of a play by an Irishman about a French woman played by an Irish woman in Paris — as an English project.

The actress reveals that she has always felt a spiritual kinship with Joan. "My name, Siobhan, is Irish for Joan," she explains. "Literally, it means 'White Spirit'."

Following the local engagement, "Saint Joan" will play a week's arena-style stand at the Playhouse in the Park, Philadelphia, then go to the Phoenix Theatre, N. Y., to open the fall season for the off-Broadway group. It will subsequently be telecast by NBC.

'BRIDGE' LOST $50,048 OF $75,000 BANKROLL

"View from the Bridge," which had a 19-week Broadway run last season, represented a $50,048 loss on a $75,000 investment. The Arthur Miller play, produced by Kermit Bloomgarden, was recently presented in expanded form at the Theatre on the Green, Wellesley, Mass. When done on Broadway, it comprised the major part of a double bill.

Included in the balance of capital on the production, but listed as an undistributable item is a $1,000 advance royalty on the British rights. Prospects of a production there, however, look dim. The play has been banned by Britain's Lord Chamberlain.

Quayle Exits Stratford

London, Aug. 7.

Anthony Quayle, co-director with Glen Byam Shaw of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon, has resigned to concentrate on his acting career. Shaw now becomes sole director.

Quayle's immediate plans include a possible stage appearance and a couple of film projects.

Dick Aldrich Sez He's Left Theatre for Keeps; Insists He Wrote 'Mrs. A'

Boston, Aug. 7.

Former Broadway and summer theatre producer Richard Aldrich has given up show business for keeps. He is quoted as revealing that in an interview with Boston Globe film-legit critic Marjorie Adams, published here last week under a Madrid dateline.

Aldrich, recently appointed director of operations for the U. S. mission to Spain, after several years on the embassy staff of Ambassador John Lodge, is quoted as saying, "My career as a producer was a very happy one. I enjoyed it. But I did not get the personal satisfaction I have had from my four years in the Navy nor in my present position."

The former producer says that he is still one of the directors of the Raymond Moore Foundation on Cape Cod, but has disposed of all his other interests. He intends ultimately to make his permanent home in East Dennis, where he has had a summer residence for many years. It is only a short distance from Dennis, the Cape Cod village where he formerly operated the Cape Playhouse.

The interview represents Aldrich as insisting that he, and not

Brit. Version of French 'Shanghai' for Edinburgh

Edinburgh, Aug. 7.

Members of the Oxford U. Theatre Group will give the first British Isles production of the Paris stage success, "Storm in Shanghai," at the Edinburgh Festival. Play is adapted from a novel by Andre Malraux. Performances will be given in a church hall because of shortage of theatre accommodation.

Each member has contributed from $15 to $150, and will get a proportionate share of the receipts. After each performance the students will change costumes to present a late-night revue, "Better Late."

Gertrude Berg in 'Cadillac' Record $18,066, Philly; Other Barn Grosses

Philadelphia, Aug. 7.

The Playhouse in the Park set a new record last week with "Solid Gold Cadillac" starring Gertrude Berg. The gross was $18,066, as compared to the former high of $16,100 set by "Picnic" last summer. And with a $2.50 top.

For the first time since Margaret Truman appeared in the Autumn Playhouse in 1954 in "Autumn Crocus," the spot was sold out in advance of last Monday's opening. The rest of the week was merely a matter of chairs and standees. The legal number of chairs permitted at the tent theatre is 110 and that figure was reached at all evening and matinees performances after the opening.

That was unprecedented. The former high advance-gross was the Truman show, but at that time the Playhouse over-all capacity was 1066 whereas now it is 1149.

Current bill is "Bus Stop," with Glenn Anders. Next week will be the Robert Q. Lewis revue, "What's the Rush," the first musical show ever offered at this municipally-operated tent. The Playhouse's final offering, the week of Sept. 3, will be the Cambridge Drama Festival production of Shaw's "Saint Joan," with Siobhan McKenna as star.

Stratford, Conn., $25.300

Stratford, Conn., Aug. 7.

The addition of "Taming of the Shrew" last Sunday (5), after several previews, helped the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre to its most festive week of the season, $25,300 for eight shows. Hereafter, a Wednesday matinee will replace the Sunday night performances.

More than 1,200 Columbia U. summer teachers college attendees attended Saturday and Sunday (4-5).

'Opera' 12G, Cambridge, Mass.

Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 7.

"Beggar's Opera," presented by the Cambridge Drama Festival at Sanders Theatre, Harvard, racked up $8,800 for the first four performances, opening July 25, and $12,000 for its second week, ending Saturday (4). Opening production was "King Henry V."

'Opera" holds through next Saturday (11). Siobhan McKenna opens Aug. 15 in "Saint Joan" in a pre-Broadway tryout. Sanders is a 1,100-seater with pew-type seats, a three-level Elizabethean stage, with newly installed air cooling.

Maggie O'Brien $12,800, Det

Detroit, Aug. 7.

Margaret O'Brien drew a fair $12,800 in "Gigi" at the 1,400-seat Northland Playhouse last week. The second week of "Guys and Dolls" grossed $18,200 at the 1,500-seat Melody Circus. The breakevens are $10,500 for Northland and $12,000 for Melody. The former has a potential capacity of $25,678 at a $3.60 top, and the latter a $41,982 potential capacity at a $4 top. Both tenters offer 25% discounts.

Current productions are "The Time of the Cuckoo," starring Luther Adler and Claire Luce, at Northland, and "Paint Your Wagon," featuring Tony Bavaar in his original Broadway role of Julio, at the Melody.

Olney, Md., Aug. 7.

Two-week stand of "Sabrina Fair" at Olney Theatre grossed a nice $12,500 for Players, Inc. First week was good for $5,500, with $7,000 in the final stanza.

"Much Ado About Nothing" in modern dress opens tonight (Tues.) at this strawhatter for a fortnight run.

Edwin Lester, head of the Frisco-Los Angeles Civic Light Opera, is negotiating to produce the road-show "My Fair Lady" on the Coast, after which it would go to Chicago for a run.

Sees Negroes in 'Faces,' But Asks About Those Mill Workers in 'Game'

Editor, VARIETY:

New York.

Getting my first look a few nights ago at "New Faces of '56," I noted that producer Leonard Sillman has again shrewdly included Negroes in the revue. Eartha Kitt was an outstanding element in Sillman's last previous "New Faces," and I was gratified to see Negroes in the present show.

It set me wondering. Why don't other producers use Negroes when circumstances warrant? If the performers involved are talented; it's bound to add diversity and balance to the show. For example, why not in "Pajama Game," which involves the employees of a pajama factory? Or does that concrete-skulled factory owner also draw the color line?

We all recognize that Washington is a backward city in certain regards, and that there are no Negroes on the Senators baseball team, so it may be logical to exclude them from the cast of "Damn Yankees," especially since the New York players don't appear on stage. Maybe similar reasoning applies to "Fanny," which is located in Marseilles; "My Fair Lady," which deals with London society, and even "Most Happy Fella," which takes place in a vineyard of the Napa Valley of California.

But only in "Mr. Wonderful," in which the audience-attracting talent and reputation of Sammy Davis Jr. have been providing employment for numerous white performers, and in Sillman's "New Faces," does the current musical theatre represent a cross-section of American life.

Sue Donlevy for $39,928 For Coast 'Hearts' Exit

Los Angeles, Aug., 4.

Carthay Productions, legit outfit which operated the Carthay Circle Theatre here last season, has filed a $39,928 breach of contract suit against Brian Donlevy. The complaint charges that the actor's abrupt bowout as star of "King of Hearts" cost the firm that sum. Donlevy withdrew the day rehearsals started, to fill a picture commitment.

"Hearts" was presented on schedule with Jerome Cowan starring but, the suit alleges, Donlevy's breach of an oral agreement created an added expense to the production.

a ghost writer, actually wrote "Gertrude Lawrence As Mrs. A.," the bestseller biography of his late actress-wife. He asserts that although Fanny Holtzmann, Miss Lawrence's attorney and friend, gathered much of the material for the book, he did the writing. Proof of that will have to come when he writes his next book on the Cape, he declares.

Aldrich was married in June of last year in Tangier, to Betty Boyd, a Louisiana-born former model. In summarizing his final break with the theatre, the story quotes him as saying, "I have a new wife, a new job, a new home and a new career."

Buff. Erlanger Doomed; City Won't Acquire It

Buffalo, Aug. 7.

The Erlanger Theatre, local legit house, has received its death warrant. Announcement last week by the Buffalo Common Council of the abandonment of its proposal to acquire the property for subleasing to private interests was the clincher. That seemingly precludes the possibility of saving Buffalo as a touring stand for legit in the foreseeable future.

At the same time, a contributor to the Foundation To Preserve The Legitimate Theatre In Western New York which was active this spring in advertising for funds with which to save the legal theatre, has inquired via the Morning's Mail column of the Courier-Express whether contributors will get their money back.

A proposal for the city to remodel the Klainhans Music Hall, at an estimated cost of $325,000, for use as a touring legit stand, appears to be cold. It had been suggested as an alternative to taking over the Erlanger.

that some of the gas used is purchased in Skaneateles. It's also realized that a number of the theatre's customers patronize the local eateries either before or after the show.

Also benefiting from the operation, are newspapers and radio and tv stations in the area. The tent takes spots on seven radio and two tv outlets, while ads are inserted in approximately 20 papers ranging from smalltown weeklies of 1,000 circulation to major dailies in the 100,000 circulation class.

This year's season, which began June 16 and ends Sept. 9, includes seven shows, with two being offered for a fortnight each. The others are on a one-week basis. That's a drop from 11 productions last year, and 12 the first three seasons. Use of the house for benefits has been growing since the policy was initiated two seasons ago, with over 20 lined up for this summer.

The canvastop also has a seasonal ticket plan that runs from a Saturday matinee low of $3.50 for all seven shows to a Thursday-Sunday night high of $19.25. The breakdown on the Saturday afternoon tab comes to 50c a production. The tent also puts out a special seasonal souvenir program, covering all shows, instead of an individual booklet for each production.

The tent is operated by Walter Davis.

Doctor in the House

house, at worst a slapstick farce over-emphasizing the sex angle at the expense of the broader, wittier situations in the original.

The three main characters lodge together with a glamorous brunette who confines her amorous attentions with wifelike devotion to the eldest, perennial student. As he has a perpetual income so long as he remains in this category, he does no work and cheerfully fails all exams.

Scenery is confined to one set, which reduces some of the funniest episodes into forced, unreal surroundings that make the humor labored instead of spontaneous as in the quickly switching technique of the screen. Apart from the couple who are as good as married, love interest is fixed on the bashful new recruit whose lovelife, according to the others, badly needs pepping up. More time is spent on achieving a temporary mate for him than on medical education.

Alan White, Philip Gilbert and Edward Woodward score equally as the irresponsible students and Frank Thring booms sarcastically as the chief surgeon. Sonya Cordeau, a welcome newcomer from Paris, is warmly appealing as the accommodating femme who finally coaxes her man to marriage. Douglas Ives offers a standard cockney characterization as a hospital orderly, while Anthea Askey and Jennifer Wright play contrasting types of amorously inclined nurses, under the forbidding eye of the battleaxe of a matron emphatically portrayed by Elizabeth Alys.

Play is well directed by Richard Bird. Clem.

"The Taming of the Shrew," as the third and final production, puts a pronounced stamp on the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre's second season and provides another fetching item to join "Measure for Measure" for the balance of the summer.

Comparatively, "Measure" is still the season's best. While "Shrew" comes off as a superior treatment of the farce standby, the impression is that director Norman Lloyd and producer John Houseman have tried too hard to give the property something extra. They have even added the ring of a cash register as Gremio itemizes his intended diary for Bianca. Such a wonderfully equipped stage and Rouben Ter-Artunian's versatile latticed setting apparently generate too many temptations to be resisted.

This "Shrew" will gladden its audiences mostly because of the excellence of the acting company. Pernell Roberts, one of the lesser players in "Measure," distinguishes himself as a dynamic, masculine Petruchio. Nina Foch's Kate, remarkably athletic in her shrew stage, metamorphosizes quite attractively.

There are superb comic performances by Fritz Weaver, for all his overdone makeup, as the old suitor Gremio; Morris Carnovsky as Petruchios' man Grumio; and the compelling Donald Harron as the winner of Bianca. In the introduction which cues the play-within-the-play, and intermittently through the proceedings, Mike Kellin does a stickout broad comedy job as Christopher Sly. Barbara Lord, a Stratford apprentice, proves an attractive and charming Bianca.

Lloyd has paced the farce swiftly, across the broad ramped stage and down the various vertical exits. His use of the wairdies who are Petruchio's servants is very effective.

Dorothy Jeakins' costumes not only succeed in showing what the well-dressed Paduan will wear, but are particularly helpful to the comic players. Elem.

Several dramatic cliches have been strung together by William Copeland in this new two-act drama. The results are sometimes interesting, but some glaring plot holes relegate it to the realm of little theatre entertainment. Playwright apparently had some idea of making it into a tv drama as well, but since it reaches a climax at the midway point with the inevitable result telegraphed, there's little hope for it there either.

Copeland's yarn combines civic graft with the suspense elements of a "Man on the Ledge" theme. It's about the big steal of a public beach by an oil firm which has greased enough palms so that the area is declared polluted. One of the three local newspapers won't touch the story because the editor has succeeded in blackjacking more advertising out of the oil firm.

Copeland never satisfactorily explains why the others aren't approached. The hero, who runs a hamburger stand at the beach, finally gets his message to the people by climbing out on a window ledge, creating a traffic jam that "stopped he city" and paving the way for the denouement.

Show is played in a combination of proscenium and central staging and skillfully directed by Paul Gurev and some good performances enhance the production. Best are Sam Buffington as the editor, Roger Pace as the hamburger hero and Jan Englund as an idealistic young reporter. Mark Lowell does a good comedy supporting job and there are also good bits from Charles Belmont as the mayor's bagman and George Reel as the mayor. Kap.

In the Best Tradition

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Something took place recently that makes me proud of being interested in the theatre.

Danny Melnick (treasurer at the Rivoli) and his wife conduct a summer camp for youngsters. It is called Gray Gables Jr. Theatrical Workshop, and is located at Kitchawan, N. Y. Sunday, the youngsters were scheduled to put on their first production, namely "Finian's Rainbow." The show was to start at 2 p. m. At 10:30 in the morning, the young man scheduled to play the male lead, namely the part of Woody Mahoney, reported sick and not able to go on. A phone call was made to Harry Stockwell. This came about by reason of the fact that Mrs. Stockwell was helping on the choreography, and her daughter was playing the role of Susan Mahoney. As you know, Stockwell had played the Mahoney role years ago in New York and on the road. Like a good trouper, he hot-footed it up to Kitchawan and saved the day by reenacting his role.

I was in the audience, and the phase that I thrilled at was not so much his response to an emergency, but rather the spirit in which he played. He gave everything he had, as if it were a regular Broadway performance. At the same time, though he was the only professional on the stage, he integrated his performance with the youngsters, so that he was right "with them," and not looking down on them. An amazing thing was his ability to recall the lines of the part, and also fit into the direction without any advance rehearsal.

An interesting sidelight is that the way in which Mrs. Stockwell became involved is that a week before, she went to the camp merely to visit her daughter. When she saw that assistance was needed in the choreography, she changed her plans and stayed the entire week to help out. J. S. Seidman.

'Soldier' Chesty $40,000 For Alfresco Week, K.C.

Kansas City, Aug. 7.

"Chocolate Soldier," seventh production of the alfresco musical season in Swope Park, turned out to be a passable draw at the Starlight Theatre. Week's run closing Sunday night (5) grossed an average $40,000. It opened especially strong and gave early signs of strength, but severe heat and humidity sapped the crowds somewhat towards the end of the stanza.

Leads included Laurel Hurley, Mitchell Gregg, Earle MacVeigh, Muriel O'Malley, Donald Clarke, Toba Sherwood and Michael Kermoyan. This one also had some of the season's outstanding ballet, with Mia Slavenska and Robert Morrow featured.

Eighth production, "Paint Your Wagon," opened last night (Mon.) with a cast including Dorothy Coulter, Edwin Steffe, Mitchell Gregg, Michael Kermoyan, Charles Nelson Reilly, James Jamieson and Anya Lee.

Peter Bull's Confessional

British stage and film actor Peter Bull has authored "To Sea in a Sieve," an account of his wartime experiences as an officer in the Royal Navy. It's published by Peter Davies, London, at $2.15.

The author's personality emerges in his writing and he frankly reveals how he capitalized on the use of his theatrical friends to pave the way for his commission.

Footnote To The Andrea Doria

Walter Lord's bestseller, "A Night To Remember" (Holt), which has gone over 100,000 copies in the trade book edition, figured as a natural sequence in the newscasts and stories about the SS Andrea Doria tragedy two weeks ago. Apart from the publisher clocking about 1,000 additional sales during that period, CBS was most enterprising in routing out the author in the middle of the night, who is on leave from the J. Walter Thompson agency, to make three appearances on telecasts attendant to the news of the collision.

Lord's leave, as a copywriter for the ad agency, is to complete his book on Pearl Harbor for Holt.

Dedications To Kanin

Garson Kanin has at least two new books dedicated to him, one being the Random House ($2.95) published version of this year's Pulitzer prize play, "The Diary of Anne Frank," dramatized by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, which he staged. Book version has a foreword by Brooks Atkinson.

Co-billed with his wife, Ruth Gordon, Cecil Beaton has dedicated to them, "in friendship and gratitude," his closeup on America and Americans, titled "I Take Great Pleasure" (John Day; $3.50). The British court photographer and scenic and costume designer has put together between hard covers some shrewd yet kindly perspective on Yank moods, manners and mores.

Pete Martin On MM

Philadelphia.

Editor, VARIETY:

My forthcoming tome, "Will Acting Spoil Marilyn Monroe?" (Doubleday $2.95); is the title I wanted the Saturday Evening Post to use, but they went for a somewhat less than inspired label, "The New Marilyn Monroe." Oddly enough, two weeks after Marilyn appeared in the Post, Look came out with a feature called "The New Marilyn Monroe," consisting mostly of pictures by Milton H. Greene. They had already gone to press with their "New Marilyn Monroe," so it was too late for them to change.

You may be interested to know that a lawyer acting for Marilyn Monroe Productions Inc. wrote firm and even threatening letters to Doubleday, apparently in an effort to stop publication of this volume of mine, and for a while he seemed to have the Doubleday legal department sleeping poorly nights. But, amusingly enough (at least I found it amusing), apparently Marilyn Monroe Productions Inc. hadn't told Marilyn Monroe about these communications, for, on May 31, she wrote me a fan letter about my Post series, which pulled the rug out from under the legal machinations of Marilyn Monroe Productions Inc. "Dear Pete," she wrote, "Thanks for the story you wrote about me. I even recognized myself. It was a pleasure to know you and am looking forward to our next meeting. When will that be? My thanks and love to you, Pete. Marilyn."

It looks now as if our next meeting will have to be postponed until she completes her honeymoon with a certain party named Miller. And also until my wife, who's ordinarily a most understanding girl, develops a broader philosophy.

If you are at all interested in some of the additional facts, the book could be the first of a new trend in brevity books. It is only about 25 pages longer than the three-part Post series I wrote, but the price is far less than is usually charged for books these days, in spite of the fact that it contains over 40 photographs, two or three of which should appeal irresistibly to any male under 80; especially one of Mrs. Miller acting as a mahout to an elephant, near the end of the volume.

At all events, I commend my latest work to your attention, and I even hope that you find it readable. I have tried to make it a fair picture of the doll, but at the same time an adult one. It's a funny thing, you start out by feeling that she ought to be soundly spanked; then you gradually come to think that she's kind of a fey, off-beat girl rather than a dumb one; and in the end, despite yourself, you begin to sympathize a little with her.

Pete Martin,
(Associate Editor, Satevepost).

Cheesecake 'Literature'

Pete Martin wants to know "Will Acting Spoil Marilyn Monroe?" (Doubleday; $2.95), an elaboration of his Satevepost series on the star, and Hillman Publications thinks that a "Big-As-Life-Pin-Up" of Jayne Mansfield is worth $1.

This is just super-cheesecake period. No words or text or nuttin'. Just a telescoped 5-foot color photo of the "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" featured femme player. It's perhaps the biggest pin-up ever sold. It's life-size and Hillman suggests on the cover (the only text employed) that "the wall mural ready to hang" might be used as a "party gag, playroom novelty, door decoration, greeting card, gift-wrap paper, framing or mounting on plywood."

Tiptop Yearbook

The American Peoples Encyclopedia Yearbook 1956, covering the events of 1955, like its predecessors under Spencer Press (Chicago) publication, is a tiptop reference work. It not only has the dates and events, circa 1955, but per annual custom a series of experts have done exhaustive treatises on virtually every phase of the American scene, from arts and sciences to fashions and show biz.

Book, under Leonard S. Davidow operation, has exclusive mailorder distribution via Sears, Roebuck in the U. S. and Simpson-Sears Ltd., in Canada.

Dr. Franklin J. Meine has been the longtime editor-in-chief (latterly reported ailing) and with managing editor Carroll Chouinard and advisory Canadian editor Dr. W. Stewart Wallace, they have done a savvy editing job in mirroring the events and personalities of 1955. It's not only a good consultation book but good reading. There's nothing like a chronicle of this calibre to point up how fast moving and fast changing are the days of our years—all of us—in these eclectic and electric times. Abel.

Father-Son Team

Henry Thomas and Dana Lee Thomas, a father-son writing team, have "50 Great Modern Lives" due via Hanover House.

Helen Hayes, Samuel Goldwyn, Marian Anderson and William S. Paley are the show biz representatives in this anthology which touches on Pres. Eisenhower, Albert Schweitzer, Helen Keller, Winston Churchill, Ralph Bunche and others.

Cowles' Address

Look editor-publisher Gardner Cowles addresses the Mid-America Periodical Distributors Assn. conclave in Chicago Sept. 27. Powwow goes from Sept. 24 and closes the day of the Cowles' speech on foreign affairs.

Convention, backed by indie mag and newspaper wholesalers, will be attended by an anticipated 1,000 circulation-distribution execs. On Sept. 23, the board of directors of the Council for Independent Distribution also meets. Bureau of Independent Publishers and Distributors convenes Sept. 24-25 in the third of the Chi meetings.

Reid Vs. Harper Test Case

A jury verdict in favor of Harper & Bros., in a $600,000 action by Ohio bookdealer Edwin M. Reid, was unanimously affirmed late last week by the U.S. Court of Appeals in N.Y. Winning publisher's law firm, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, pointed out that case was one of over 30 actions brought by Reid against several major book publishers for damages aggregating over $10,000,000 under the Robinson-Patman Act, alleging Harper had violated the act by charging him higher prices for books than it charged competitors. Initial decision was handed down by a jury, the first to be employed in a case brought under the R-P act.

Putnam contended that Reid was not a competitor of such firms as American News Co., which got Putnam volumes at lower prices. Jury decision was reached in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of N.Y. after a three-week trial. Appeal was filed when Reid's lawyers announced that District Court Judge Edmund Palmieri had erroneously charged the jury as to Harper's defense of cost justification and also that he improperly commented on the effect of a letter written by Reid which had been introduced as evidence. Appeal for Reid was handled by Thurman Arnold and Norman Diamond.

Thirty more Reid actions are still pending in U.S. District Court in Toledo—all reportedly brought by Reid on the same theory as the Harper suit.

Carlyle, a tailor who had outfitted Canadian prime ministers, other VIPs, died July 1 in the Union Mission for Men in Ottawa where he had lived for the past decade. Seven chums from the mission were the only attendants at his funeral on Aug. 1, and a spray of flowers, the only floral offering, was sent by Lillian Roth, who was in Ottawa on a Gatineau Club booking.

Sun-Times and Chicago American are sticking with the nickel price for the time being.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Aug. 7.

Watching Norman Taurog's five-by-five figure emerge from "Ice Capades" not long ago, the thought occurred that Taurog would do himself and the picture biz a lot of good if he returned to the scenes of childhood.

Nobody made better pictures of kids than Taurog. "But where can you get a Skippy today?" it might be argued.

Among the cartoons, obviously. Everything Skippy had Dennis the Menace has. In fact, Dennis has even more heart, and that's because his creator, Hank Ketcham, has more of same than Percy Crosby had.

Crosby was a little guy with Napoleonic self-appraisal. Once glowingly compared to Dickens by his publisher, Crosby hit the ceiling. "Imagine comparing me to that nobody!" he shouted.

But Ketcham had a better sense of proportion, Bob Hall, his syndicate manager, and Bill Buckley, his book publisher, attest. It shows in Ketch's work. Children of all ages love Dennis. Now actually a boy of 10, Dennis stays at 4½ in the comic strip. If he has a fifth birthday party, the next day he is 4½ again.

Born in Seattle Ketcham worked in Hollywood in the animation departments of Disney and Lanz and it shows in his polished draftsmanship. His Dennis now appears in 500 newspapers in this country and in the newspapers of more than 50 foreign lands.

Dennis The Menace—A Corporation

A staff of five are occupied with the cartoon. Ketcham himself, and his wife (whose name, as in the cartoon, is Alice) and two assistants work at a ranch near Carmel, Calif. Bob Harmon sends ideas from Orange, Calif., and Al Wiseman works on the comic book from Woodland Hills near L.A. Alice is really a brunet. "I made her a blonde," confesses Ketch. "Saves ink."

The first cartoon really cracked the curtain of the old guard. It was on March 12, 1951, that Dennis leaned out of the family car and said to a motorcycle cop, "You didn't catch us. We ran outta gas!" He had rarely slipped below that high level of humor.

In hard covers Holt has sold 400,000 to date of Dennis' books. They have one coming up in October entitled "Dennis the Menace Vs. Everybody" that will gross at least $65,000. The sales of the two-bit editions of the moppet are now in the millions.

Who Poisoned Murphy?

This clean cleanup clouter came into circulation when comics were lower than the mud baths of the Dead Sea. They had to hire a czar, Charles F. Murphy at 100G a year, cook themselves a code and kick out 551 stories as being nothing more than textbooks for the manufacture of juve delinks. Otherwise 25 publishers felt irate PTA's were going to run them out of biz on a rod. The only reprisal to date has been a comic entitled, "Who Put the Strichnine in Mrs. Murphy's Husband?" Otherwise the drop in receipts from $100,000,000 a year to $50,000,000 has not been felt too badly. At least no comic book publisher has screamed for a subsidy for plowing under every second gun-toting moppet.

It may be solacing to old crocks to refer to all this as "kid stuff" but having lost a whole generation to other forms of entertainment, the picture biz had better return to material like "The Kid" and "Skippy" and I can think of no better way to do it than to start with Dennis, Taurog of course directing.

After all, Taurog's current contributions are hardly a grade above kid stuff. Jerry Lewis's simian antics are kid stuff practised by adults and hence of more interest to anthropologists than mature filmgoers who soon tire of fathers in baby clothes drinking scotch from a nursing bottle, making monkey faces and scratching their ribs as if fleabitten. Besides Martin & Lewis are again announced as splitting up—an added reason for Taurog's jumping aboard a Huck Finn raft.

As for adult humor, if Dennis doesn't supply it, Li'l Abner does. While many of the original creators of current comic strips have been dead for years, Al Capp is so alive he was consulted and photographed as late as this summer giving advice to a rival cartoonist on how a sagging strip could regain its former heart-appeal.

Okay, Li'l Abner Then

That was in "That Certain Feeling" and Bob Hope was the misspeller. Capp suggested Hope to George Sanders as one who might save the strip from becoming as obsolete as The Yellow Kid. Producers in various fields have been playing around with Li'l Abner and his Daisy Mae for years, but none has got to exhibition either in Hollywood or on Broadway as yet. Next to Dennis, Li'l Abner is the hottest cartoon property extant.

In TV Sgt. Bilko, Lucy and even Burns & Allen are essentially cartoons. They did not start as comic strips, as did Blondie, Barney Google (now a character part in Snuffy Smith), Joe Palooka, Mutt & Jeff, Bringing Up Father (Jiggs & Maggie), Harold Teen, Polly & Her Pals, Dixie Dugan, Maizie and others too feeble to mention, but they were essentially in the cartoon syndrome.

The Seed Of 'That Uncertain Feeling'

Hope's character was announced as derived from "King of Hearts," a play by Jean Kerr and Eleanor Brooke. It seems to me it was nearer a little jeweller who supplied the heart interest to the late Sid Smith's Andy Gump—a comic strip emanating from the Chi Trib and holding a priority from there west for a generation. Another character, whose name eludes me for the moment who is reminiscent of Hope's Francis X. Dugan, was the hero of J. P. McEvoy's novel of the rise and fall of a comic strip artist in a novel of 25 years ago. It was entitled "Mister Noodle" and seemed to have supplied something to "Feeling."

It's a melancholy fact of cartoon history that when the little Chi jeweller and Sid Smith had a falling out, Andy Gump slumped to the ground as if belted on his non-existant chin. Many other cartoonists have trained acolytes who could do their strips if called on and many have carried on after the original cartoonist's death as if they were steel magnates elevated to succeed Andrew Carnegie and Charlie Schwab in the refined iron industry. But not the creators of Andy Gump. The anonymous linemen simulating the late George McManus, Robert Ripley, Ham Fisher, Clare Briggs, Billy de Beck, Edgar Rice Burroughs and John Hicks, and the more-alive-than-ever Walt Disney, are surely worthy of billing.

Cartoonists Die, Cartoons Live On

I realize that the late E. R. Burroughs couldn't draw a straight line on ruled paper, but his name still appears as the man who "draws" "Tarzan." There must be a way up for these buried talents. Tom Sims and Billy Saboly made it with Seegar's Poyeye, which they certainly didn't create anymore than Abe Lastvogel created the William Morris agency.

Of Roy Rogers, Buck Rogers, Gene Autry, The Lone Ranger, Dick Tracy, Brenda Starr, Terry and the Pirates, Moon Mullins, Superman and the Little King, there is little to say. Some of them began as picture personalities and worked up or down to cartoons. Others got themselves in a groove and seemingly could not move up or down. Soglow, Willard, Gould may only be waiting for the right offer and the right people to play their comic characters in pix. But any moppet can play Dennis and any adult can play Li'l Abner. The limitations of the Code would be no harder on them than the limitations editors throughout the land have imposed on the cartoonists for years.

The only cartoonist who seems to have escaped to freedom is Herb Block, and he of course is too hot to handle for pictures. Even Ike thinks Block is better than milk of magnesia.

The place is made for the play, and the play for the place. That's what makes "Jedermann" great theatre, and that's why people come from all over the world to see it.

Speaking of this mystical drama, the poet Max Mell said, "The Salzburg Festival began with 'Jedermann'—they have grown great together." It has been presented every year at the Salzburg Festival (except 1937-45), on bare boards set up in Cathedral Square. It is a splendid example of Max Reinhardt's genius for creating great "theatre" outside the actual walls of a hall. The natural background is unique and impressive, with its baroque facades, arcades, palace portals and, towering above it all, the early medieval fortress high on a nearby hilltop, still dominating the city it protected from invasion.

In this setting, a ceremonial trumpet fanfare announced that "Jedermann" was about to begin and with it the Salzburg Festival of 1956.

"Jedermann" was written by the Austrian poet Hugo von Hofmannsthal, who, together with Reinhardt, founded the Salzburg Festival. The play is a version of the medieval English "Everyman." All its characters are allegoric. The central character is Everyman, a rich man in the prime of life. He has a devoted mistress, many friends, and much revelry. But he is not charitable toward those less fortunate than himself. Suddenly Death appears, lays his hand upon him, and gives him one short hour to make his peace on earth and prepare himself for the journey into the realm of death. Everyman tries desperately to find someone who is willing to accompany him on this awful journey, for all forsake him—companions, servants, relatives, and even Mammon (money) whom he had believed to be his slave. Only Faith and Good Works contrive to change his misguided soul and bring him into peace with God before he descends into the grave.

Philosophically, it is easy to argue with the thesis of the play, which says that a man can sin as much as he likes during his life, as long as he repents at the end. But dramatically the work is perfect as few works are—perfect in its simple unadorned poetry, in the economy of the staging, in its cast of excellent actors, and above all in its setting. This rare blending of different elements into a harmonious dramatic whole is the essence of great theatre.

Most noteworthy in a fine cast is Will Quadflieg, that wonderful actor, in the role of Everyman. Quadflieg has long been a top name in the German-speaking theatre. But Martha Wallner (Paramour), Adrienne Gessner (Faith), Hilde Mikulicz (Good Works), Kurt Meisel (Devil), and the entire cast are all on the same high level, permitting the spectator to forget about the acting and enter fully into the illusion.

Judging by past performances, "Jedermann" should go on for many more years, as a monument to the genius of Reinhardt and Hofmannstahl. It is the one truly unique element in the Salzburg Festival. Pims.

Belafonte Top Draw At Levinsohn, 1956

Six-week season of the 1956 Stadium Concerts, held at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y., wound up last Saturday (28) to a total attendance of 27,000 persons. Turnout for the 28 events was some 4,000 ahead of the 1955 tally. Forty-nine soloists appeared with the Stadium Symphony Orch, which had 12 conductors this year.

Top biz of the season was registered June 28 when Harry Belafonte pulled 25,000 payees. Figure was only 2,000 less than the Stadium's alltime attendance mark, set by the 1951 appearance of Ezio Pinza. Some 30 concerts in all were originally slated for the 1956 program, but two were cancelled to make room for postponed performances of previous nights.

Ellenville's 2d Year Cuts Deficit; Dream of Shed, New Works, TV

By JAMES L. CONNERS

Ellenville, Aug. 7.

The Empire State Music Festival, in its second season under canvas in this pitcuresque Catskill Mt. village, played to approximately 64,000 people during a four-week season of 16 performances, General Manager Frank Forest told this VARIETY reporter. This was 4,000 greater than the total for the premiere year, when the schedule spanned five weeks and 25 performances.

Because of last summer's tempestuous August weather (including the tail end of a hurricane), the management decided to stage the 1956 affair in July to hold weekly performances to four.

Forest, former opera and radio singer, declared: "It was too late for arrangements to be made this year but in 1957 we'll extend to five, and possibly six weeks. We did not have a single rain of consequence this summer."

Deficit Cut 1/3

The 1955 deficit for the Festival was $75,000; the 1956, $50,000. The original expectation was that five years would be required to reach the break-even point. Forest now forsees the end of red ink in four seasons. He revealed the Festival is "a $150,000 operation; The Symphony of the Air (the core), costs $60,000."

Ellenville has two immediate promotional ideas in negotiation. One, a television spectacular commitment from NBC or CBS to permit more new works on a tv payoff. Two, to get hotels in area to take blocks of tickets.

There were two new works this year: (1) the world premiere of a dance drama after Eugene O'Neil's "Emperor Jones," with music composed and conducted by Heitor Villa-Lobos, and with choreography by Jose Limon; (2) the first American presentation of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with new music by Carl Orff, conducting by Leopold Stokowski, and Broadway players headed by Basil Rathbone and Red Buttons. Both attractions drew 6,000-plus crowds.

The third top puller was the opener of "Carmen" with Gloria Lane, Frank Guarrera and Giulio, and conducted by Tibor Kozma. About 4,000 attended.

Long-Range

The greatest need for the Festival is, says Forest, "More patrons, throughout the State of New York, because this can't be just a local operation, not with 6,000-capacity."

Tanglewood Music Festival (60 miles away) started under canvas and took eight seasons to become entrenched and adequately sheltered. Empire Festival has 120 acres in which to expand, including a music shed, school and other facilities.

Pending the construction of a shed, the Festival will make several changes in the present setup—with community-county cooperation. These include the digging of an orchestra pit and a regrading to achieve a slight pitch on the tent floor.

The orchestra, on the level with the audience, tends to cut down the sound of the singers and to reduce the resonance of the males (possibly the semi-open-air arrangement is another factor). The conductor also is visually distracting—Kozma certainly was, in spots, at the performance caught.

Festival ended Sunday afternoon (29), with Igor Markevitch on the podium.

Festival is scaled $1.50 to $5.

Staff: directors, Forest, Jerome Hershon and Jascha S. Rushkin; executive producer, Basil Langton; promotion manager, Hershon; company manager, Morry Efron; press representative, Margaret Hartigan; house manager, Richard A. Mooney (Miss Hartigan's husband and Stadium Concerts manager for 20 years); treasurer, Ida Goldsmith; production stage manager, David Pardoll; orchestra manager, Philip Sklar; national press representatives, Nat and Irving Dorfman.

LATIN CONCERT ECONOMICS

1) VISA COSTS: $100 PER PERSON
2) MILEAGE: MURDEROUS ON COMPANIES
3) CURRENCY: THE BROKERAGE CAN BREAK YOU
4) MANAGERS: BEWARE THEIR MANANA

(This is the second of several articles dealing with the concert business in Latin America.)

By PAUL PIMSLEUR

Booking concert dates in Latin America is a tough way to make a living. The distances raise transportation costs so high that touring a group attraction is highly risky Government requirements and restrictions are replete with archaic stumbling blocks. Our good neighbor republics are about as easy to get into as Lindy's on Saturday night. Bureaucracy snags the artist at every turn, calling for large doses of South American savvy and a liberal hand.

Almost every PanAmerican nation requires a business visa to work there. To obtain the visa, strings have to be yanked at various ministries in the country itself. Then, when the artist goes to pick up his visa, he'd better be armed with a pile of certificates attesting his health, bank account, police record, and the fact that he was really born. Figure visa costs for Latin America at about $100 per person.

If it sounds tough to get into a country, it's often just as tough to get out. The sacred right to scram needs an okay from the tax authorities, saying artist has paid taxes (often high), and from police, saying he hasn't made any revolutions while there.

Latin America including Mexico, the Caribbean Islands (Cuba, Puerto Rico, etc.), adds up to over 20 countries. Almost all book concert artists. The fees and playing time vary with the state of cultural development, but altogether there are enough concert playdates for a tour of up to five months. If an artist is successful, he can change his repertory and repeat in a year or two. Some go back again and again.

The leading Latin management, as detailed in a previous article, is Conciertos Daniel out of Havana, run by lively founder-president Ernesto de Quesada. He books artists direct with New York and Europe.

The concert capital of South America is Buenos Aires, with about half a dozen managements and more booking opportunities than any other city in Latin America. Biggest is Conciertos Daniel, founded in 1917 and now run by Alfonso de Quesada, son of the founder-president in Havana. His office is responsible for bringing about 35 foreign artists yearly to South America, and specializes in providing conductors and soloists for the opera, symphony orch and radio.

Other Bookers

Another old, established firm is Conciertos Iriberri. Both Daniel and Iriberri have agents in other countries, the closest ties being with the neighboring lands—Uruguay, Brazil and Chile. Conciertos Gerard is a new, peppy outfit which would like to give the others some competition. Other managements, like Barry and Laferrere, handle mainly local artists. Conciertos Omar present a well-known recitalist occasionally. Daniel, Iriberri and Gerard each has its own subscription series in Buenos Aires.

What's just been mentioned is about all there is in the way of direct booking by Latin America managements of American or European artists.

Brazil, the giant of Latin America, is far behind in this respect and gets almost all its artists from Quesada in Havana or from the Buenos Aires managements. Leading independent booker in Brazil is Guglielmo Viggiani, who books big shows direct with New York, but doesn't do much in the way of concerts attractions. Sao Paulo manager Hermann Frischler, leading Brazil agent for concert artists, books an artist occasionally on the basis of personal contact, but gets most of his talent from the Argentine managers.

A tour of Latin America usually begins in the north, either in Cuba or in Mexico, then moves on to the Caribbean Islands (Puerto Rico, Jamaica, Curacao, Dominican Republic), then into Central America, playing Guatemala City and perhaps Managua (Nicaragua) and Panama. Then the tour proceeds down the west coast of South America, typically going from Panama to Caracas (and other Venezuelan towns), then to Bogota and vicinity, from there to Quito (Ecuador) and then to Lima (Peru). After that comes Santiago (Chile), then Buenos Aires. From there, the homeward trek goes to Montevideo (Uruguay), then to Brazil with its many dates (Porto Alegre, Sao Paulo, Rio de Janiero, Belo Horizonte, Salvador, Recife, etc.)

If the artist is to return to Europe, his tour will probably end in Recife, only half a day by air from Paris. If the artists' fee rules out smaller towns, he'll probably be on the road some three months. If he includes the smaller places, it may run to five.

Soloists' Haven

Most favorable attractions for Latin American concert dates are individual soloists or small group attractions. The cost of transporting a big group, like an orchestra or a ballet, by air, is almost prohibitive, though Quesada has done it on more than one occasion.

The South American shekels waver and quaver. In the past year, for example, the value of the Argentine Peso has dropped by half. Since most internationally-known artists demand part or all payment in dollars, that means it's about twice as hard to make ends meet in the key Argentine dates. Since artists are contracted months in advance, the manager may find that the calculations he made when buying the artist are shot full of holes by the time the dates are played.

Most stable currency in Latin America is found in the countries closest to the U.S.A. The Guatemalan Quetzal, for example, is one-to-one with the dollar. Ditto in Cuba, Honduras, Salvador, Panama, and, of course, Puerto Rico. The best coin in South America right now is in Venezuela, where the Bolivar is about 3.30 to the dollar. Considerable instability exists for the all-important Argentine Peso and Brazilian Cruzeiro. The Chilean Peso was down to 800 for a buck, is now back around 500. Uruguay has good money.

There have been attempts over the years to unlock Quesada's full-Nelson in the Caribbean and Central America, they've been killed by the mileage and the other difficulties. The wear and tear of dealing with Latins, especially when they're spread out thousands of miles apart, has made most would-be competition decide to open a dry-cleaning store instead.

Bid For Gold

two hours. As for the books, why must a bestseller be put on the screen in 90 minutes? We've been doing this for years and chances are we rubbed out some good story points just for the sake of brevity."

In line with that latter point, it's understood that Columbia's picturization of "Andersonville" will run about four hours.

Re Admissions

As for the boxoffice tariff, there's increasing comment on the general economics surrounding picture-going, mainly affecting the downtown runs. For many a family the trek to the theatre has become a production in itself, considering the expense of baby-sitter, parking and dinner. Not to be excluded is the investment of time. Some in the business feel that if the film is "big" enough, whether the ducat costs $2 or $2.50 won't matter. A night on the town has become a considerable budgetary item in view of the list of expenses, and actually the cost of the theatre in many cases is proportionately down.

Switching from the "epic" to the "provocative," Hollywood indeed is taking on the type of subject that was shunned in bygone years. Soldiers returning from Korea and facing charges of Communist collaboration — that the subject of "Time Limit," which Richard Widmark is to make under the banner of his indie company.

The Julian Blaustein-Daniel Taradash combo has "Storm Center" awaiting release, this concerning a librarian's refusal to remove a Communist book. Their next will be about desegregation in the Air Force.

James Mason's "Bigger Than Life" centers on the harmful effects of the overuse of cortisone. And agent Ingo Preminger is offering—and United Artists is listening to—a proposed biopic on James Dean which, of course, could be controversial. It apparently has the father's okay.

These are but a few of the more recent examples of how film producers are changing their ways. The inclination to handle only "safe" material is doing a fade.

Dandy July

(WB), "Ladykillers" (Cont) and "Toy Tiger" (U) are the other runner-up films.

"Pardners" (Par) appears to be the strongest newcomer to just get started as the month of July was nearing its close. It showed enough to cop fifth in that final session, with the new Martin-Lewis comedy appearing to catch on in initial playdates. "Proud and Profane," from the same company which has been playing extended-run in some three or four keys in recent weeks, looks to be ready to take off shortly.

Horror combo of "Creeping Unknown" and "Black Sleep," from Universal, checked in with several fancy engagements late in the month. "Mme. Butterfly" (IFE) also registered some strong arty theatre dates.

"Earth vs. Flying Saucers" (Col) is being rated as somewhat of a sleeper because it has been doing such uniformly stout to sock trade in nearly all locations where playing.

are, but it would be downright stupid" declared the producer.

WB and Stevens will handle "Giant" in a straight merchandising manner period.

Stevens stresses that no attempt be made to touch upon anything "macabre or ghoulish," as certain young fans writing to Warner studio apparently would enjoy. Dean, one of a number of stars in picture, will be handled in the advertising only as an important player and film will be exploited on its merits only, rather than going in for individuals.

Virtually no mention was made of the actor's death, in any of the 800 to 900 preview cards turned in at the film's four sneak previews, according to Stevens.

recently existed in regard to the BFPF's future, and justifies producers continuing with "future plans." The Rank Organisation intended to "proceed actively with the preparation of the 1957 program which will be as substantial as in 1956."

London Times, in a leading article on Friday (3) commented: "The fundamental question has to be asked again, whether films should be specially protected, and if so for how long? The most persuasive answer is simply that American films can be dumped. They have a large home market, and other favorable circumstances, and can, it is argued, recover most of their high production costs on home sales . . . The situation on which this classic argument is based deserves re-examination, because the American market for films has shrunk much more than the British. According to the last figures the rate of attendances at American cinemas was only twice that in the United Kingdom, and the American industry would challenge the theory that dumping is practicable or practised."

Eden Roc's 17½G for Berle Presages Hot Talent Bids by Miami B'ch Hotels

Miami Beach, Aug. 14.

The Miami Beach hotels are readying to pick up the battle for name attractions right where the Florida night clubs left off. The battle has started with a coup pulled by the Eden Roc, which has signed Milton Berle for a reported $17,500 weekly for January, and with all hotels now starting to shop around for winter availabilities.

The $17,500 price is an indication that money will be no object this season. The price rivals those which were being paid by the niteries before the bulk of them gave up. There have been higher prices shelled out in the Miami Beach area, including $22,000 for Danny Kaye, and Maurice Chevalier also got a higher stipend, for a week, but the Lip, during his engagement, was paid each night. The Eden Roc price for Berle is believed to be the highest ever for a local hostelry.

The Fontainebleau has bought Tony Martin for Feb. 19 to March 11. He's been at that hotel previously.

The upgraded prices for talent, at least for the Eden Roc, comes at a time when the competition will be fiercer. They are attempting to tie up top names to avert being labeled "last year's hotel" a fate which usually befalls a major inn when a newie is built. The use of top names is designed to provide

'Peepie' Creeps In

First official recognition for some of the electronic lexicography emanating from the political conventions came yesterday (Tues.) from Thorndyke-Barnhart, the dictionary division of Doubleday & Co., which called NBC-TV for a definition of the "creepie-peepie" for use in its next edition.

"Creepie" is the network's new RCA battery-powered four-pound camera and 15-pound battery pack which enables the cameraman to transmit from the hand-held camera without use of cables. It was unveiled at the conventions.

York Sues NBC For $3,000,000 On Nix of M&L

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

York Pictures filed a $3,000,000 breach of contract suit against NBC in Federal Court charging that the network repudiated a contract it had with the indie firm for services of Martin & Lewis. Comedy team is under contract to York. Comics also are partners in firm, along with Paramount and others.

Indicated suit is based on NBC having believed publicity anent splitup of team and not bothering to check. Instead, action alleges, NBC notified York it wouldn't comply with contract.

York pact with NBC calls for four programs annually starring Martin & Lewis at $250,000 per program. Suit asks $3,000,000 for violation of three-year pact plus 7% interest.

Near-Riot in Houston As Police Nix Dancing By Negroes at R&R'er

Houston, Aug. 14.

A riot among 400 whites and 1,000 Negroes was narrowly averted here Sunday (12) night after disagreement over just which part of the audience—white or Negro—would be allowed to dance at a rock 'n' roll session put on by Fats Domino. Thirty policemen were called to disperse the angry, champing crowd of several thousand persons, many of whom gathered at the boxoffice and demanded their money back.

Houston City Auditorium was packed with teenagers in segregated sections when youngsters from both groups flipped into the aisles, made their way to the dance floor and started bopping. At this point a Negro policeman stepped in front of the Domino ensemble, grabbed a microphone and directed the dancers back to their seats. The crush for refunds began when a second policeman—white—announced that the dance arrangements had been changed, that only whites would be allowed on the floor. This was unusual because in the past when Negro units per-

EX-MET TALENT MANS INDIANA U. FACULTY

Bloomington, Ind., Aug. 14.

Charles Kullman, lately with the Metropolitan Opera, has been contracted for one academic year at Indiana U. here under the designation of Resident Tenor. Title is equivalent to a visiting professorship.

Kullman will instruct university music students and personally participate in campus operatic productions.

Other Met Opera members now on Indiana U. faculty include Frank St. Leger, former conductor, and singers Anna Kaska, Dorothy E. Manski, Agnes Davis and Myron Zaylor.

CAMPAIGN TUNES OVER THE YEARS

By JIM WALSH

The economics of the music business have finally caught up to the traditional campaign song. Once a powerful political weapon, as well as a prolific moneymaker for its authors and publishers, the latterday electronic-era campaign song has faded, with occasional exceptions, into near oblivion. Topical songs don't pay off anymore, and can anything be more topical than a song which is useless once the campaign is over and the votes counted?

This year's songs take the form of a music-and-lyrics rewrite for the GOP and a new set of lyrics for a standard for the Dems. The Republican theme is Irving Berlin's "Ike for Four More Years," an encore and in the same idiom (also almost same tune) as his 1952 "I Like Ike," which Berlin will preem personally at the GOP Convention next week. The Democrats set new lyrics to "The Yellow Rose of Texas," and there are a few independently patterned originals like the Anne Croswell-Ed Scott "Believe in Stevenson," being published by Mode Music.

Similarly, there's an abortive attempt being made to transmute the old music hall song, "H-a-double-R-i-g-a-n" into a theme for New York's Gov. W. Averell Harriman whom ex-President Harry S.

'Marty' Fame Ups 'Party' By 400G

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

One picture can transform unknown personnel into "name" stature and because of this transformation the cost of making a picture with the same talent goes up $400,000. At least, that's the way it is with the Hecht-Lancaster organization in the case of "Marty" versus the upcoming "Bachelor Party."

"Marty" was brought in at a negative cost of $343,000, with scripter Paddy Chayefsky receiving $10,000 plus 5% of the ownership, and director Delbert Mann being paid $10,000 plus a subsequent bonus of 2½% of the film. At the time, they were unknown in the world of feature production.

As for "Party," which is to roll in New York shortly, Chayefsky will be paid $125,000 for the script and Mann around $50,000 for the directorial job. They're "names" now.

The budget for "Party" will be about $750,000, this including production salaries for Burt Lancaster, Harold Hecht and producer James Hill.

Solons Making Chi Safe for Demos By Putting Heat on Strips 'n' Clips

Chicago, Aug. 14.

In a series of crackdowns last week, Mayor Richard Daley and the police closed one Loop bar and raided a strip joint, both for "soliciting" of drinks and other divertissements by female employees. In addition, Captain Thomas Alcook, commander of the First (Loop) District police station, issued orders placing eight downtown niteries under police surveillance during the Democratic convention.

Insiders believe the sudden flurry of police activity, confined exclusively to the downtown area most frequented by conventioneers, can be traced to the Democratic city administration's desire to put its best foot forward with the core of the Demo party on hand this week for the national convention.

Mayor Daley last week closed the Brass Rail, a Randolph St. bar featuring musical entertainment (dixieland combos or modern jazz). Assistant corporation counsel Harry Isenberg said the action was taken because women had been soliciting drinks there and because a police officer had been solicited by a prostie in a check on the tavern July 3. A year ago, a visiting fireman was robbed of $8,000 in cash and property at the Brass Rail, Isenberg said, but the spot was not prosecuted because the victim could not make identifications.

In a parallel action, a Madison St. strippery, the L&L Cafe, was raided by police last week, for alleged tavern law violations and soliciting of drinks by femme employees. Two detectives from the

Berlin's Ike Encore

Ellin and Irving Berlin leave Friday (17) for San Francisco and the GOP convention, by official invitation, where he will personally sing his 1956 Republican campaign song, "Ike For Four More Years," and finale with his "God Bless America," for which the U.S. Government voted him a special Medal of Honor. Berlin authored "I Like Ike" for the 1952 "Call Me Madam" musical, from which it snowballed as a semi-official campaign song. New ditty runs:

Four More Years, Four More Years,
Give us what we'd like,
What we'd like is Ike
For Four More Years—three cheers
With Ike for Four More Years.

Loew's Gets 25% Of KTTV's Stock In Backlog Swap

Metro, in its first move to acquire tv station ownership, has concluded a library-cash deal with KTTV, Los Angeles, under which Metro gains a 25% stock interest in the indie. It is the first station which has relinquished stock interest for a feature film library.

The deal, subject to FCC approval, reportedly involves $5,000,000, taking into consideration the value of Metro's feature film library and the sum to be paid by Metro for the stock interest. Neither side would comment officially on the sum paid by Loew's.

Under the deal, KTTV gets unlimited runs for seven years for the entire library of about 725

THIS WEEK'S FOOTNOTE: WHERE ARE THE STARS?

In an effort to introduce new faces of proven boxoffice appeal, the film companies are desperately in search of a star-making formula. With the possible exceptions of Marlon Brando, Marilyn Monroe, Grace Kelly and the late James Dean, the industry has been unable to develop "names" having the glamor appeal of stars now in the twilight of their careers.

Reasons for this failure have been numerous — running the gamut from the war to exhibitors' uncooperativeness. In any case, the magic ingredient that skyrock-

When the N.E. Rains Come, Audiences Change Seats (And Also Theatres)

Boston, Aug. 14.

Legitgoers occasionally catch part of one show and then hop to a different theatre for a looksee at a portion of another. Rarely, though, does a show switch theatres on an audience during a single performance. That, however, was the case last week at the Tuesday night opening of "Androcles and the Lion" at the Theatre-on-the-Green, Wellesley, Mass.

The Group 20 Players production was hit by rain between the second and third acts, causing the performance to shift from its outdoor amphitheatre locale to an indoor theatre in back of the al fresco site. Duplicate sets are kept in the indoor spot and the switch from one stage to the other takes about 10 minutes.

The mid-performance transfer has occured previously, but this was the first time it happened at an opening and also the first time this season.

Yanks' Quick Looksee and Scram Giving European Hoteliers Jitters

Geneva, Aug. 14.

European hotelkeepers have the hop, skip and scram jim-jams.

There are more tourists than ever in Europe these days—and even more are scheduled for next year—but the bonifaces claim they are getting none of the gravy because the transportation peddlers, working hand in hand with the travel agents, are developing a new type of international grasshoppers, tourists who say hello, grab a quick look once-over-lightly, and hop on another plane for another gander at new territory.

One bitter hotelkeeper said this morning, "If this continues, Americans soon will have seen more and recognized less of the world's charms than . . ." And he waved his arms in disgust—perhaps because he didn't know how to finish the sentence.

There is nothing new in tourist tours, of course. But, with the rapid development of air travel it has become increasingly a big factor in world tourism, especially in the past few years. It is now possible for Americans to see virtually all the world—well, say half of it—in a couple of weeks. The airplane companies love it, of course, and are bending backwards in their efforts to split up mileage in dozens of different ways. Also, the big battle to lower transAtlantic air passage fees was partially won by the Americans last month and will mean more such travel in the future.

This morning a group of 40 arrived here from Cleveland, fully equipped with cameras, fountain pens and zippered wallets. Three days ago they left their homes in and near the Ohio city. They stopped in New York just long enough to catch their breaths, made an overnight ocean hop landing in Paris, where they spent two hectic days. They are in Geneva for one day, will spend a

Live TV Link Between U. S. and Venezuela Possible, Sez DuMont

Live television between the U. S. and a country as far south as Venezuela is "entirely possible," Dr. Allen B. DuMont, chairman of DuMont labs, declared. The electronics expert has just returned from a survey of South and Central American tv setups.

He said that a U. S. signal could reach Venezuela by setting up "forward scatter" facilities between Florida and Cuba. Signal could then be transmitted on present facilities to Santiago. "The blank spot at the present time is the island of Haiti," he said. "However, if a receiving station and beam transmitter were established on the 9,000-foot mountain near Port-au-Prince, I believe that usable signals could be received in Venezuela." (Nation now has seven tv stations).

PARADING BROADWAY AS TOA BALLYHOO

As part of its convention at the N. Y. Coliseum Sept. 20-24, Theatre Owners of America is hopeful of staging gigantic film parade along Broadway with top-name motion picture stars participating. This was one of the suggestions offered by TOA leaders to film company representatives at a luncheon meeting yesterday (Tues.) in New York.

Not only is TOA seeking the full participation of the film companies for this event, but it is also hopeful of obtaining financial assistance for the expense of bringing the stars east. TOA feels that the success or failure of the parade depends on the availability of stars. TOA has indicated that once given the greenlight by the film companies, it would undertake by itself the task of sending reps to the Coast to line up the stars.

The exhibitor association is also seeking film company participation for the setting up a "Motion Picture Showplace" on the fourth floor of Coliseum. This would include all types of exhibits as well as displays featuring the upcoming product of all the companies.

Yesterday's luncheon session stemmed from TOA prexy Myron Blank's appeal to the Motion Picture Assn. of America for production-distribution company participation in the convention.

6 Singers, 2 Suitcases Of Scenery Take 'Opera' To Edinburgh Festival

After Dinner Opera Co., comprising six members and two suitcases of scenery and equipment, sails Friday (17) on the United States to participate in the Edinburgh Festival of Music & Art. It's the first time for a group of its dimensions to be invited to an international fest.

Chamber opera outfit will perform three modern American works over a two-week run beginning Aug. 24, these being "The Pot of Fat," by Theodore Chanler; "In a Garden," Gertrude Stein and Meyer Kupferman, and "Sweet Betsy from Pike," Mark Bucci.

Members of ADOC trekking to Edinburgh are Jeanne Bueauvais, soprano; Norman Myrvik, tenor; Francis Barnard, bass-baritone; Lucile Burnham, who will conduct and accompany at the piano; Beth Leibowitz, stage manager and Richard Flusser, who doubles as stage director and business manager.

Since regular scenery would have been a problem, the organization, which has been producing and promoting serious opera since 1949, devised a "portable theatre." Carried in the two cases are aluminum pipes, fish nets, silk and lighting equipment.

Reintroduces Capitalism

Mike Todd apparently is an American phenomonon the Russians never anticipated, according to a traveller recently returned from Moscow.

As a guest of the Soviet government, Todd was assigned an interpretor, a 20-year-old girl who was more than just a little confused by Todd's free-spending methods. Todd invited eight fellow Americans to dinner. When the check arrived, the femme interpretor pulled out the rubles to pay the bill. Despite the Soviet's no-tipping rule, Todd grabbed a handful of rubles from the girl's hand and tossed them on the table for the waiter.

Martha Raye On Critical List

Miami Beach, Aug. 14.

Martha Raye is in critical condition in St. Francis Hospital here after she attempted to commit suicide by taking an overdose of sleeping pills, according to local police.

The comedienne, who has been in Miami since late last month, is reported to have been despondent for several months. She came to Miami to establish residence in order to obtain a divorce from her fifth husband, dancer Ed Begley, but had been denied a decree on Friday (10) on the grounds that she had established only "a paper residence" in Florida.

During the waiting period Miss Raye was performing at the Beachcomber. The nitery closed last week. The nitery-tv performer was found unconscious in her bedroom at 3 a.m. by her maid, an empty bottle of sleeping pills by her side.

Miss Raye, whose private life has been dotted with "hard-luck," had also taken hard the death several years ago of her mother, with whom she had been very close. She also had been troubled by the $500,000 alienation of affections suit filed by the wife of a cop in Westport, Conn., where Miss Raye has a home.

A top-rated tv performer for the past five years, Miss Raye recently signed a new 15-year contract with NBC. She was due to return to tv in the fall, but had not reached an agreement with network whether she would do a regular weekly program or appear on a limited number of spectaculars. She had expressed a desire for a lighter schedule.

You Think the World's Got Troubles? Here's What Dior Has Stirred Up!

By LUCETTE CARON

Paris, Aug. 14.

Dior's five long daytime dresses provided the shock and real news of the Paris openings.

Half-way through a non-revolutionary collection, they suddenly appeared in quick succession as though tossed in by careless afterthought. Only moments later did the audience realize that fashion history had been made. The change of pace, least expected provided the drama. What was the big idea?

When cornered by excited fashionites, Dior said with studied innocence that he had nothing special in mind; I thought some women might like them." Nothing special, perhaps, but these seemingly unimportant little dresses may well cause a complete upset and bring us back to the 1912 just-above-the-ankle period.

An explosion of contradictory opinions shook the house. Carmel Snow of Harper's Bazaar "Why didn't he show more of them?" . . . A manufacturer: "Nothing but a publicity stunt . . . what American woman wants to hide her legs?" . . . Another: "Not practical" . . . Mrs. (Nieman-Marcus of Dallas": I'll wear the long wool ankle-length for evening" . . . David Nemerov of Russeks: "Perhaps a bit premature, but a future great" . . . Russell Carpenter of I. Magnin: "Hollywood will go for it" . . . Dior, as usual, has given 7th Ave. plenty to worry about.

The flat look is out. A new rounder look emphasizes the shape.

Radio-TV Vs. 'Ink Journalists'

VARIETY, in all immodesty, has become pleasantly innured to plugs for the paper on screen, tv, in the public prints and even editorials, but the Aug. 6 full-length editorial in the Detroit Free Press is reprinted for more than one reason.

No. 1, it's a nice plug for us—and who doesnt' love it?—but No. 2 is the convincer because, as the caption on the editorial so well puts it: "'Ink Journalists' Do It, When Reporting Means Digging."

The editorial follows:

"For those who can be in front of television sets at the proper time, there is no denying that on such a story as the Andrea Doria's sinking the TV camera can do a magnificent job of reporting.

"Such occasional feats notwithstanding, 'electronic journalism' is found badly wanting in a recent issue of VARIETY, the entertainment industry's old and famous publication.

"VARIETY, in a story datelined Chicago, used Illinois' Hodge case scandal to illuminate what it was getting at. The same thing could apply here [Detroit] in connection with the Ecorse revelations—or wherever else investigative reporting has turned up stories about breach of the public trust which otherwise would have stayed buried.

"We agree with VARIETY when it states that:

"'The secondstring role played by the local radio-television newsmen in covering the most explosive Illinois political story of the decade has raised some questions as to the seemingly inherent limitations of the electronic form of journalism.'

"It can be argued in defense of the radio and television newsmen, of course, that since they operate under Government licenses they have to be rather delicate in approaching anything that might offend the wrong bureaucrat.

"Newspapers, which don't need any bureaucrat's permission to operate, have complete freedom to ferret out betrayals of the public trust without misgivings as to where the chips may fall.

"This is the reason, perhaps too seldom appreciated by the public which the press protects in such situations as the one created by Ecorse grafters, why the press incessantly fights against all attempts to restrict its ability to get at facts.

"VARIETY concedes that once the Hodge case was rolling, the radio and TV covered the story in detail, and because of the speed of their tools scored some beats. But, it adds:

"'. . . in the early, most dramatic stages of the unfolding story, radio and TV were merely relaying the details grubbed out with much more effort and ingenuity by the Windy City newspapers.'

(Expanding on this observation, VARIETY's writer said:

"'What troubles this veteran newspaper man is that it is exposes like the Hodge case that underscore the fact that there are other fundamental facets to the newsgathering process than merely aiming a mike or a camera . . . radio and telenews men have contributed very few of the kind of investigatory scoops that win Pulitzer prizes for the newspapers.'

"Even in its shows such as 'Meet the Press' and 'Press Conference,' as VARIETY points out, television relies for its often excellent presentations on substantial assistance from newspaper and magazine men who participate in the broadcasts.

"We recognize the limitations under which radio and TV so often operate in the news field—not the least of which is lack of news-gathering manpower as compared with the newspaper.

"And no one with an eye for dramatic news presentation could fail to applaud radio and TV in some of their performances where aiming a mike or camera largely suffices to tell the story.

"But, to quote VARIETY again, 'It is in this area of investigation (such stories as the Hodge thefts and wide-open Ecorse) it's conceded that the radio-TV newshawks trail behind their daily press brethren.'

"The trailing in this field is indisputable. The reasons for it are several, with some seemingly beyond the ability of electronic journalism to remove them.

"It is on the ink journalists, therefore, that the public must still rest most of its faith when it comes to learning where the passing parade started and where it is heading. The mike and the camera picks up only the part of it going by at the moment—which while often highly dramatic is also very frequently inconclusive."

Showman Trapped in 'Diversification'

Remembers to Quote Old 'Variety' Crack, 'Every Man Has 2 Businesses, His Own and Show Biz'

In recent years industrial "diversification" has engulfed many a theatrical enterpriser who has found himself surrounded by new colleagues from lines of endeavor remote to show biz. One old theatrical vet recently listened as a series of financial reports were read to the Board of Directors of a "diversification" group. There was no uproar until he, the showman, reported on the theatrical "department."

Suddenly the showman found himself on the defensive because it quickly became apparent that his intra-corporation colleagues were all "experts" on one common plane—show business. None dared to criticize or expertize on one another's specialized businesses which had come under the common corporate umbrella, but when it got around to the amusement end of it each had some pet ideas.

The showman finally resorted to the only defensive attitude that suggested itself, under the circumstances, by quoting "something I read long ago in VARIETY," said he, "and that is that everybody has his own business and show business. Well, it so happens I have only one business I know of—show business—and even the most veteran showmen know that there are no infallible 'experts' in the industry in which I was cradled."

What struck the showman was that ironically, he found himself, wittingly or unwittingly, on the defensive adding that "even though I, too, could have some opinions on some of our allied diversified industries, I didn't dare to challenge the experience and skill of the executives in charge of these branches. But they had no compunction telling 'try this' and 'try that' when, if they knew anything, they'd show we had either tried it, thought about it, or discarded it, as not practical for our particular operation."

FOREIGN CAR BUG BITES 'INTERLUDE' CAST

Frankfurt, Aug. 14.

If there's any new international craze among the American cast and crews making films in Europe these days, it's the foreign car buying kick. Almost everyone associated with UI's "Interlude" which just wound up filming at Geiselgasteig, has been bitten.

SEARCH GRIMLY FOR COMEDY

Closing of Exchanges for Saving Continuing, Paramount Quits Oklahoma City & New Haven

The exchange-closing fever is spreading as distributors continue on the prowl for ways and means to cut unnecessary expenses.

Paramount has pulled out of both Oklahoma City and New Haven, although continuing what the company terms a "sales function" in both cities. Accounting work is absorbed by nearby branches and the physical handling of prints is licensed out to an independent operator, such as National Film Service.

Republic, RKO and United Artists previously streamlined their operations in New Haven and expectedly all other distribs will follow suit shortly. The need for a branch outlet in this Connecticut town, incidentally, never has been established although at one time it made economic good sense.

Connecticut legislature years ago enacted into law a bill imposing a tax on money taken out of the state by companies which did not maintain sales offices in the area. Film companies found it was less expensive to run offices in New Haven than pay the tax and this they did. The tax measure subsequently was repealed but the distribs continued with their N. H. outlets despite widespread opinion that the territory could be covered from both Boston and New York.

Fear of exhibitor reprisals resulted in continuance of N. H. as a "key city." In line with this, Par shuttered in Portland, Ore., some years ago but quickly reopened as northwest theatremen began to favor the product from Par's rivals.

To what extent theatremen will react similarly in the present days of economic stress hasn't yet been fully determined. But the fear of such adverse reaction apparently is keeping several distributors from closing in certain areas.

Both Par and Metro, it's reported, are actively investigating the soundness of darkening branches in other cities but no action has been taken as yet. Par is now onceovering Omaha as its next candidate for the so-called streamlining.

Critic-Baiting

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.

The de luxe St. Louis Park subsequent-run neighborhood house, playing "The Catered Affair" in the earliest 28-day slot, is using most unusual copy in its newspaper ads for the picture.

When "Affair" had its downtown first-run, Minneapolis Morning Tribune columnist Will Jones commented unfavorably on it.

In its Morning Tribune and other newspaper ads, the St. Louis Park states: "Will Jones notwithstanding, if you do not enjoy this show your money will be refunded."

Film Economics Stir Much Gab In Wall Street

Wall Street has become "deal happy" so far as the motion picture and theatre companies are concerned. The amusement industry stocks are stirring unusually heavy conversation among New York's financial district professionals. And they seem interested only in possible mergers, liquidations, sales to television or other moves that could elevate trading prices.

There's not too much support of outfits which are following a steady course—that is, making and licensing film product for conventional exhibition. This is perhaps best shown in the Paramount activity on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Par common dropped $1.21½ last Wednesday (10), closing at $31.50, which was close to the year's low. Over 20,000 shares exchanged hands.

Par sources are of the firm conviction that this lack of trader confidence in the company is due to its absence of any "deals." One company official commented that "Wall Street is refusing to recognize the obvious." His reference was to the upcoming releases of "War and Peace" and "Ten Commandments." These, Par believes, will substantially increase Par earnings, but Wall St. evidently is taking a wait-and-see stand.

Reteaming of Ex-Pards In View; Krasna Talks Deal with Wald at 20th

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Possibility of a reunion, for at least one picture, between Jerry Wald and Norman Krasna, was under discussion here as Wald began operation under his new contract as an independent producer at 20th-Fox. Wald checked in Monday (13), four days after signing contract with Spyros Skouras and Buddy Adler.

He's had discussions with Krasna, his former partner in Wald-Krasna Productions, anent latter writing, directing at least one film for new setup. Deal hinges on Wald's finding right property but Krasna is definitely interested. He's currently reading galley proofs of one book Wald has under consideration, and also studying a second property.

Wald completed his deal with 20th after some six weeks of negotiation and about 10 days in advance of the deadline given him by Columbia prexy Harry Cohn early in July. At that time, Cohn told Wald he was free to negotiate anywhere in the industry for a period of six weeks after which, if no deal had been set, Wald was to return to his post as Executive Producer at Columbia and finish out his contract which had about two years to run.

With the inking of the 20th-Fox pact, Wald's departure from Columbia became automatic.

Independent setup which Wald is now putting together at 20th is in line with the general trend of

KRAMER IN SPAIN: ON TIME, ON BUDGET

Madrid, Aug. 14.

Stanley Kramer is bringing in his spectacular, "The Pride and the Passion" (UA), this week on time and, most important of all, on budget. Film had a year of prep before beginning last April. Finished negative cost will be about $3,100,000, and it is expected to have over two hours runnning time. Kramer feels it would have cost as much in the U.S. Its practically full-location schedule made it impossible to do it anywhere but in its original locale, namely Spain. Film was done in Technicolor and VistaVision.

Story of a band guerillas carting a gigantic cannon from one end of Spain to the other, to use it against the Napoleonic invaders in 1810, comes from an original novel by C. S. Forester called, "The Gun." Forester expressed complete agreement, with changes in the film version on a recent visit here.

TYPE NOT DEAD, JUST DIFFICULT

By MIKE KAPLAN

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Comedy production in Hollywood is getting to be like Mark Twain's weather—everybody talks about doing it, but no one does. And while there are a dozen theories on why the comedy blockbuster has disappeared from production schedules, most producers frankly admit there are only two real reasons:

Lack of material.
Lack of critical response.

It's no secret that many producers and directors feel the disappearance of the comedies, such as those formerly made by Frank Capra or Leo McCarey, has left a huge hole in Hollywood's output. Few of them, however, are as candid as George Stevens in pinpointing a possible reason. Stevens says frankly that these films "do not hold the rewards that dramatic films do."

Any comedy, Stevens points out, is difficult to make. And "a good comedy with significance is more difficult to make than a dramatic picture and they do not get the response from critics as do the other types of film. It has been my observation that a lesser dramatic film will receive more attention from critics than comedies."

On the other hand, George Sidney opines that it's strictly a question of material. Sidney doesn't believe that comedy runs in cycles, but is, instead, "always with us because people like to laugh and they like to go to the theatre where they know they can laugh with a couple of thousand other people."

Good comedy, Sidney adds, has always made money and will always have an important place on the screen—but production is limited by the material.

Similar opinion is held by Charles Schnee, Metro exec producer who reports mournfully that he has been "looking for a comedy for a long time, but haven't found one." Schnee, like others in the production end, believes this lack of material is due largely to the fact that the world still is in a state of tension and flux and writers find it hard to "poke fun at the world today. And when

Looking Ahead to Banking Brakes, United Artists Will Float Stock; Public Issue Seen For Next Year

By GENE ARNEEL

United Artists is now giving active consideration to a public stock issue as a means of widening the company's financial base. Definite action along these lines will be taken toward the end of this year, it's expected.

Prompting the move is the money squeeze now in effect throughout the country. Federal Reserve Bank is clamping down on loans being provided by individual banks for the reason these accounts are exceeding deposits. UA hasn't had any difficulty in raising capital so far and, as a matter of fact, financing for its entire lineup this year is already set.

UA execs are concerned about the future, for a tightening of money availability obviously could hamper its increasingly elaborate production schedule. Company provides the financing for all independent producers on its roster.

Stock issuance will assure freedom of movement on the fiscal front and could, of course, give the five owners—Arthur B. Krim, Robert S. Benjamin, William J. Heine-

'King & I' to Date

"The King and I," 20th-Fox's CinemaScope 55 entry, has racked up an estimated gross of $4,500,000 so far.

Picture, in national release less than seven weeks, has only played 64 first domestic and Canadian engagements. Audience total in the 64 dates is said to have hit 5,500,000 people. In addition, the film has chalked 295 weeks of extra playing time.

United Artists Mulls Lease Of Oldies to Video

United Artists appears next in line with deals for channeling pictures to television. Company is now investigating the video market to determine money potential but no negotiations have been opened as yet and no decisions made anent which pictures will go to the telecasters.

Company is thinking in road terms about licensing (not selling) a limited number of indie-made productions, perhaps 13, or 26, or 52. Group will be relatively new, having been made since the Arthur B. Krim-Robert S. Benjamin regime took over in early 1951. This means special arrangements will be required with the American Federation of Musicians and the various guilds.

Upon the movein of Krim, Benjamin, et al., all UA contracts with producers were rewritten to provide for the company to have tv distribution rights as well as for standard theatrical release. Thus, there can be no problem with the film-makers over deals with telecasters at this time.

UA long since divested itself of rights to all product made before the Krim-Benjamin took the helm.

Semenenko's Warners Moving to Fifth Ave. Quarters by Late 1957

Warner Bros. is the latest film company to join the trend to New York's eastside. The film company, under the new Serge Semenenko regime, will shift its homeoffice headquarters to Fifth Ave. in late 1957 moving into the new Tishman-owned building nowbeing erected at 53d St. and Fifth Ave. WB has contracted for two floors in the new building in which Semenenko or close associates have an interest.

Hot Weather Fails to Bop Biz; 'Society' No. 1, 'King' 2d, 'Duchin' 3d, 'Boats' 4th

Hot weather in many sectors of the nation does not appear to be slowing up the fast biz pace of recent weeks in current session. In fact, the launching of several new pix actually is perking up trade in some key cities.

New champ at the wickets will be "High Society" (M-G) although it is playing in only nine keys thus far, according to VARIETY correspondents in some 23 representative key cities. Musical version of "Philadelphia Story" with a different locale is soaring to $200,000, a record non-holiday week at the N. Y. Music Hall. And it may hit an alltime high at $200,500 or over.

"King and I" (20th) is capturing second position after four consecutive weeks as leader. "Duchin Story" (Col), second a week ago, is winding up in third spot.

"Away All Boats" (U) will be fourth, with a batch of new bookings helping it to climb from sixth place of last round. "Proud and Profane" (Par), just getting around, will finish fifth, with a promise of being heard from additionally in the future.

"7 Wonders of World" (Indie) is winding up sixth after being in fifth spot last round. "Moby Dick" (WB) is dipping from third to seventh. "Somebody Up There Likes Me" (M-G) is edging up to eighth place while "Pardners" (Par) is finishing ninth. It was fourth last stanza.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) is capturing 10th position, with "Trapeze" (UA) taking over 11th spot, although showing in only four keys covered by VARIETY currently. "Oklahoma" (Magna) rounds out the Top 12 list.

Bulk of newcomers are playing only scattered playdates, exhibs preferring to bring in new product closer to the Labor Day holiday week. "Satellite in Sky" (WB) hints some promise, being good in Louisville, okay in L. A., Boston, Washington but is disappointing in Toronto and Philly.

"Run For Sun" (UA) is rated solid in Denver. "Walk Proud Land" (U) looms fast in Frisco. "Bigger Thas Life" (20th), fair in N. Y., is okay in Boston.

"7 Men From Now" (WB), good in Detroit, shapes nifty in Indianapolis. "Queen of Babylon" (20th) looks okay in Cleveland. "Rebel in Town" (UA) is light is Portland.

"Godzilla" (Indie), wow in K. C., shapes good in Toronto. "Glory" (RKO) is rated neat in Chi. "Ambassador's Daughter" (UA) continues torrid in third Chi week. "Francis in Haunted House" (U) look good in same key.

ALEX HARRISON: LITTLE EXHIBS' VITAL BUT SALES ECONOMIES ALSO A MUST

By FRED HIFT

As part of its effort to help the "little man" in exhibition, 20th-Fox is going in more and more for full-year deals, even in competitive situations where theatres are agreeable to splitting the product, says Alex Harrison, 20th's general sales manager.

Declaring himself fully conscious of the problem of the small operator, Harrison said he was convinced of the importance of the little theatres throughout the country. "We must help them if for no other reason than that we owe them a debt," Harrison declared. "Call me sentimental, if you like, but these exhibitors must be made to feel they are part of the business."

Harrison made his remarks at a time when conviction is growing in the industry that, in the not too distant future, television and other competition will force a shrinkage of exhibition, with greater concentration on the comparative handful of top money-earning situations. (One sales topper last week even estimated, privately, of course, that the U.S.—and the distributors—could get along very nicely on between 9,000 and 11,000 theatres under present conditions.)

Harrison said the system of splitting the product in competitive situations wasn't as widely practiced as it might be, but he thought more of this would be done in the future.

Reducing Overhead

This ties in with the company's thinking re the reduction of distribution costs since, obviously, if a theatre takes a company's full year's product, there's no need for regular calls by salesmen. Harrison conceded that 20th, like all other companies, was studying means of reducing the distribution overhead.

"There's no magic to this thing," he said. "It's foolish to simply talk in terms of closing branches but because you might lose more business that way than you save in expenses. Also, as long as there's no annual contract, I think a salesman should call on the exhibitor. That's part of making him feel he's part of the industry. We still need the little man to give us the margin over the negative cost of pictures. If we can keep him healthy, we're going to be healthy."

It's been argued that, with 75% of the income on an average picture being derived from only around 2,500 situations, the industry would be wiser to concentrate the selling on those theatres and devise the cheapest possible method of dealing with the rest. It's been said, in fact, that—taking in the selling cost—thousands of situations actually cost the distributors money via low returns.

Lack of Trade Data

Harrison complained about the lack of statistics in the industry which, he said, was hampering current market studies. "There's a real blind spot there," he said. "Other industries know exactly the kind of business they are doing. In the film business, not even the Motion Picture Assn. of America or COMPO know the pertinent statistics. All we know is what we get from the papers, and you know how figures get tossed around."

The management survey proposed by the MPAA "would certainly be worth a trial," said Harrison.

The 20th sales topper expressed some doubts on the published Sindlinger figures putting attendance last week at 85,000,000, which would be close to a record high. "We can't act properly unless we have the correct information in our hands," Harrison opined.

"Convenience" in terms of making the product available to patrons was stressed by Harrison who said he was strongly in favor of a change in the distribution pattern as it relates to the population move to the suburbs. "Our big city distribution has its provincial aspects," he said. "We aren't doing everything possible to make it as convenient as possible for people to see the new films. I would be in favor of opening up areas near certain key cities to competition and letting theatres play day-and-date with downtown."

Harrison stressed that, in advocating such a policy, he was putting limitations not only on the type of film that would be suitable, but also to the cities. "In some of the key spots there's nothing wrong at all with concentrating on downtown for all it's worth," he said. At the same time he pointed to Los Angeles, where the release pattern is extremely fluid.

While business at the moment is very good, with "The King and I" particularly cleaning up, Harrison refused to be pinned down on the prospects for the fall, when the big tv shows return to the air. He did think the advent of color-tv could hurt badly. However, he pointed out that some strong product was due to reach the theatres at that time. Included, incidentally, is 20th's own "Bus Stop," for which the company has high expectations.

Harrison acknowledged that the business at the moment seemed to be riding on the blockbuster whose grosses were bailing out the lesser product. The clear implication was that this wasn't a healthy situation. It's understood that, both at 20th and at other companies, the number of films that don't recoup their investment is what execs term "too high."

Because double-featuring continues in so many areas, and shows no signs of a letup, Harrison said 20th would continue acquiring outside 2-D films. "If we can buy them on reasonable terms and make even a little money on them, we're performing a service both for ourselves and for the exhibitors," he said. 20th has no intention of grabbing up imports unless they lend themselves to wide showing.

'Trapeze' Swings Toward $7,000,000 For U.S. & Canada

"Trapeze," first of the summer's blockbusters to go into release, has now played a sufficient number of dates to allow for an estimate of gross. The Hecht-Lancaster production will rake in at least $7,000,000 in rentals from United States and Canadian theatres.

This means the film is the biggest money-maker of all product distributed by United Artists in its history, taking the crown previously held by Stanley Kramer's "Not As A Stranger."

Foreign market prospects are equally bright although the H-L entry has played only in Japan and England. Distribution money in England is figured at over $850,000, whereas generally regarded as a good gross for a single picture in this country is only half of that amount.

FRONT PAGE REVIVAL OF SUEZ CANAL FILM

The Suez Canal crisis has given new vitality to a 27-minute color documentary dealing with the middle east waterway. Filmed last year by Louis de Rochemont, the featurette, titled "Suez," had played only one date—at the N. Y. Sutton—prior to Egypt's confiscation of the canal.

As a result of the front page activity, de Rochemont Associates, which is releasing the film, is receiving a batch of new bookings for the subject. For example, Balaban & Katz's Chicago Theatre has booked it for tomorrow (Thurs.) to coincide with opening of the London parley on the Suez crisis.

Film, shot on location, tells the story of the great engineering feat and recounts Ferdinand de Lesseps' battle in over coming all sorts of opposition to the building of the 100-mile waterway. Animation by the British cartoon firm, Halas & Batechelor, and mobile photography of old prints supplements the live action sequences.

Dino De Laurentiis, producer of "War and Peace," due in tomorrow (Wed.) on the United States for the Aug. 21 premiere of the film at the Capitol.

CROSBY-SIEGEL ENCORE

Repeat Terms of 'High Society' In 2d for M-G

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Bing Crosby and Sol Siegel are partnering on the next Crosby starrer for Metro, tentatively titled "Man on Fire." This repeats production partnership started on "High Society," also a Metro release.

"Society" was joint venture of Siegel unit and Crosby Productions. Crosby provided about 25% of coin for "Society," costarring with Grace Kelly and Frank Sinatra, additionally receiving about $200,000 salary plus 5% global gross for acting chore.

Siegel, who also put up coin as well as producing, holds 25%; Metro, which put up balance coin on pic budgeted over $2,000,000, distributes, owns rest of film.

"Fire" deal calls for same arrangements.

Those WB Sell-Off Values Loom Big

By ABEL GREEN

Wall Streeters who have looked to Loew's Inc. as a long-pull bull item—and the opinion still holds with many, once divorcement is achieved—have suddenly become real bullish on Warner Bros. as the Serge Semenenko-Charles Allen-David Baird-Jack L. Warner control takes shape.

It is no secret that the Semenenko-Allen now control sees a fancy dollar-value realization in WB assets. The reported program will soon see a fast sell and lease-back in much realty. The conversion into cash of the accumulated realty values of WB holdings all over the world has staggering book-value estimates.

WB studio space, the WB ranch, theatres, exchanges, office buildings and the like are viewed as a rich tap source for WB conversion. Then there are the film residuals, accumulative in value over the years as the post-1948 product becomes available to tv, for example.

Warner's Music Publishing Holding Corp. (Harms, Remick, Witmark, etc.) is an exceedingly rich arm, with its clockwork $1,500,000 ASCAP annual revenue which would make it worth $15,000,000 (10 times annual earnings, according to music industry estimates) but regarded as being worth nearer $30,000,000 by the new control.

Under these circumstances, that would not be liquidated, especially in light of its importanee as an arm of the WB studio production program now that J. L. Warner is both prez of the company and the production topper. Warner has expressed himself favoring stock incentives to "desirable" talent in stepping up the production front.

Among the initial steps in the unloading of excess Warner Bros. properties, with a view to converting as much into cash as possible, will be the company's British holdings. Charles Allen, of the Wall St. investment banking house bearing his name, is currently in London for that express purpose.

WB owns 37½% of Associated British Pictures Corp., Ltd., production and theatre company in the British Isles. It is Allen, Serge Semenenko, new prexy Jack L. Warner & Co.'s idea to sell as much excess theatre realty and other holdings as possible and lease-back for operation where desirable. ABPC owns 400 picture houses in Britain and Warners own a theatre in London and two in Latin America.

Allied 13¾c Divvy

Los Angeles, Aug. 14.

Allied Artists board of directors voted a quarterly dividend of 13¾ cents per share on the firm's 5½% cumulative convertible preferred stock.

Divvy is payable Sept. 15 to record of Aug. 31.

32 Features Start

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Some 32 films are slated for lensing here and abroad in next five weeks, heftiest activity by major and indie producers for this period in some five years.

20th leads majors with nine films slated to roll; Columbia has six; Metro, RKO, Universal two each; Allied, Paramount, Republic, one each.

Of 32, ten will be filmed abroad.

Rembusch Sues Majors, 1st Runs

Indianapolis, Aug. 14.

Eight distributors and five Indianopolis firstrun theatres were sued for damages amounting to $3,840,000 by Syndicate Theaters Inc. circuit in federal court here last week.

Trueman Rembusch, secretary-treasurer of Syndicate and National Allied leader, charges monopolistic operation of local first-runs and discrimination against Syndicate's house at Franklin, about 20 miles from Indianapolis.

Distributors named in suit are Loew's, RKO, Paramount, Columbia, United Artists, Warners and Universal.

Rembusch charged top films are withheld from Franklin "40 to 90 days or longer," that Syndicate has to take "large groups of old and stale films" to get what it wants and has to charge admission prices equal to Indianapolis. He claimed several distributors had tightened sales terms since he testified before Senate Small Business Committee last spring.

Suit was filed under Sherman Antitrust Act. It asks injunction as well as damages.

Paramount News As Is: Audit Shows No Deficit

As the result of an updated audit, Paramount has decided to continue with the production and twice-weekly release of Paramount News, at least for the time being. Par found the reel to be operating in the black, although only minor distribution fees are charged against it.

Another factor is the scheduled Aug. 31 bowout of Warner Pathe. Announcement by Warners that its rooster is to be silenced has the surviving reels scrambling for the Pathe accounts.

Par, like Universal, 20th-Fox and Metro, is angling to move in territories vacated by Pathe in the hope that additional business thus picked up will serve as a cushion against possible future losses of its own outlets.

Par began investigation of its newsreel operation a couple of months ago with the intent of calling it quits if it were strictly a deficit subsidiary.

Shorts, Cartoons Sale Up Par's 2d Quarter to $1.57

Paramount had an estimated consolidated net of $3,279,000, or $1.57 per share, for the second quarter of 1956, the profit including $1.12 per share realized through company's peddling of shorts and cartoons to television. Same period of 1955 brought a profit of $2,307,000, or $1.05 per share.

Consolidated net for first six months of current year amounted to an estimated $5,001,000, equal to $2.40 per share on 2,086,000 shares outstanding at June 30. This includes the equivalent of $1.28 per share from the tv sales.

Earnings for the first half of 1955 (Par operates on a calendar basis) were listed at $5,165,000, or $2.36 per share) on the 2,189,000 shares then outstanding. Over the past year the corporation bought in over 100,000 shares of its common issue on the open market.

Meanwhile, the Par board declared the regular 50c quarterly dividend, payable Sept. 14 to holders of record on Sept. 4.

Kansas City Holds Its Traditional Prejudice Against Daylight Time

Kansas City, Aug. 14.

Daylight Savings Time proved a poor candidate at the polls and a proposal to install it in Kansas City lost in last week's election by an 8 to 3 margin. Up for the voters' choice was a charter amendment which would have required the city council to adopt DST ordinance each year.

DST has been a perennial candidate since wartime, it's last run here. Each time it goes down either by popular vote, or by council vote as it did last March. The vote there, however, was only 5 to 4 against.

This time the antis marshalled their forces, including the drive-in theatres who bought display space and radio and television spots to campaign against the proposed move. Citizens here had the unusual spectacle of radio and tv stations pulling for the change to DST, while they took commercial spots calling for votes against. Starlight Theatre, the Swope Park outdoor musical theatre and others lined up forces against the move. A big block to DST came from organized labor, which has steadfastly opposed out here.

Sneak (Puff) Previews Pretty Silly?

H'wood Clings to 'Reaction Cards' Though Often Filled in By Wives and Rooters of Participants

Seems as how there's no more tired or ineffectual a device to probe the public's state of mind about any given picture than the "reaction card." But the practice persists of inviting laymen's written comment concerning a film immediately following its sneak preview in a theatre.

This is reported by "Don't use my name . . . but" sources. They want anonymity. Possible repercussions, you know.

Particularly meaningless are the vox pop scribblings picked up after allegedly unheralded showings of new product in New York and on the Coast. According to the masked informants, the word too often is leaked about what production is to be unveiled, time and place. Those showing up and obliging with fine praiseology about the epic they have just experienced are too often company employes, agents and friends and relatives of the producer, director, the writers, players, etc.

Partisans all. The author's wife comments in glowing terms about the basic story. The scriptor's spouse states the screenplay made it a great picture. The stages were dressed gorgeously, says the designer's rooter. As for the pace, well, that was unerring, according to the director's cheerleader. The femme lead inspired the entire production, insists her admirer. The male star submerged himself into the part and was truly profound, sez his attaboy-er.

Get away from the "professional" audiences in Gotham and L. A. and the reactions, as expressed in the solicited verdicts, are reliable in only varying degrees, it's felt. Just about every Dean Martin-Jerry Lewis comedy advance-shown in the hinterlands has been panned by the amateur reviewers who, with pencil in hand, often go blase and lose perspective. Every M & L entry so far has been a good money-maker.

On the other hand, William Wyler's "Desperate Hours" drew raves from the non-pros. It proved one of the big disappointments at the boxoffice.

DEVIL-HINDMOST VIEW SPREADS

Issue involving the sale of pictures to Russia is focussing the spotlight once again on the question of American film company unity in dealing with foreign governments, particularly in the monopoly countries.

Involved is the broader maxim of "in unity is strength," recited these days by the Motion Picture Export Assn., and violated on no few recent occasions. "Let's not be beastly to one another" was the topic of an exhortation and a charge in New York last week on the part of MPEA prexy Eric Johnston.

Pointing out that American prestige abroad today is at its lowest ebb in many a year, Johnston urged the companies to act in unison. He also charged point blank that some of the U. S. distributors were contributing to the prevailing impression overseas that the American industry was rife with dissension and could not be counted on ever to act as a group.

However, when prodded for specifics, he declined to name the companies he had in mind. Johnston said he would privately contact the outfits himself.

Reference was to various incidents which, if they continue, are seen undermining the effectiveness of the MPEA which greatly depends on a unified company approach.

It's known that there's been unhappiness among some of the distributors re the situation in Spain and Denmark, where the MPEA maintains an import boycott. Latter is supposed to create a situation that would force these countries to come to terms.

However, some of the companies have been moving towards continued activity in these markets, such as releasing added 16m prints, etc. Also, Johnston appears nettled by the 20th-Fox position vis-a-vis international film festivals and the virtual ultimatum presented to the association by United Artists re the sale of films to the Communists.

Gals' Convention Sept. 28

Charlotte, Aug. 14.

Annual convention of the Assn. of the Women of the Motion Picture Industry will be held in Atlanta Sept. 28-30. Planning to attend the conclave are members of the local chapter who met here last week.

Elected delegates were Mrs. Viola Wister (Howco) and Mrs. Mildred Warren (20th-Fox).

Looks As If Yank Films Go USSR; Metro and UA Probably on Own

There is every reason to believe that the vast majority of the American film companies will vote to deal with the Russians and their satellites via the medium of the Motion Picture Export Assn.

Only notable exceptions are likely to be United Artists, which has already said it prefers to go its own way, and Metro, which has also indicated it leans to a solo act.

Committee has been appointed to study the situation, specifically the manner under which a pool arrangement would work. Reps on the group are UA's Arnold Picker, Wolfe Cohen of Warner Bros, and Morton A. Spring, first v.p. of Loew's International.

With the example of Yugoslavia at hand, most of the companies feel that it's wise to deal with the monopoly states as a unit. MPEA functioned precisely that way during and immediately after the war. All films were pooled and the revenue from its areas were divvied up regardless of whose company's pix were actually chosen for distribution.

It's indicated that a switch on that formula may be sought by the committee inasmuch as some feel the payoff doesn't seem fair. Foreign execs say that, even if UA and Metro should decide to act on their own, this wouldn't be sufficient to break up the entire MPEA front.

Furthermore, MPEA affords a much better control of the product being released and may save future recriminations re the type of film chosen for showing behind the Curtain.

In Yugoslavia, it was again primarily Metro which caused the MPEA splitup by deciding to sell on its own. MPEA coalition held together for a little while longer but couldn't be sustained. It's said, however, that the distribs' subsequent experience with the Yugoslav film monopoly has caused them to regret the abandoning of the MPEA operation.

That the companies will decide to start film dealings with the Reds, who are eager for U.S. films, is beyond a doubt, particularly in the light of UA's stance. Picker has told the other companies that he'll start selling after Aug. 31 regardless of what MPEA decides to do.

The MPEA franchise on the Iron Curtain territories terminates Aug. 31. It is expected that it will be extended, at least for a limited period. At the same time, it's recalled that 20th-Fox prexy Spyros P. Skouras still plans to go to Russia this fall and may wish to retain a free hand. 20th so far has given no indications that it wishes to tackle the Communist countries on its own.

American execs are generally skeptical about the prospects of any profitable deals with the Reds, but say that it's necessary to trade with them for two reasons: 1. Films are still this country's best ambassadors abroad, and would be particularly so behind the Iron Curtain. 2. Any expansion of the world market must be encouraged.

From the remarks of Eric Johnston at the MPEA executive meeting in N.Y. last week, it was gleaned that he wasn't unduly hopeful for any lucrative deal with the Soviets. Johnston reported on his talks with the Soviet Ambassador in Washington. The Russians have been putting the accent on "swap" arrangements, which have no appeal to the Americans.

Rep Also to Solo

Board of the Export Assn. at a N. Y. meeting yesterday (Tues.) entered into lively discussion on selling pictures to Russia and the satellites but put off the decisions until another session called for Friday (17).

However, it was made clear that both United Artists and Republic intend to deal directly with the Reds.

'BALCONY SEATS ONLY'

Hollywood Par's Downstairs Reseated for "War & Peace"

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Hollywood Paramount cancelled matinee performances this week to launch a $50,000 renovation project in advance of the world premiere of Paramount's "War and Peace," which opens Aug. 23. Next week, in the days before the premiere, house will operate with a "balcony only" policy to permit installation of new seats and flooring in the orchestra section.

"Peace" has been set for a minimum four month booking on a exclusive "world premiere" basis.

NEWSREELS ALSO-RAN AT DEM CONVENTION

Washington, Aug. 14.

The reduced prestige of the theatre newsreels was never more clearly observable than at the Democratic convention. Once the center of attention at any big news story, the dwindling corps of newsreel staffers for the big companies is a sad commentary on the cruel onslaughts of electronic progress.

Sole exception to this is Fox Movietone, which early saw the handwriting on the nation's screens and joined the enemy via its own television set-up. Tony Muto, 20th's Washington rep, is on hand with a bigger staff than ever, thanks to the newsreel tie-in with UP. Concentrating on spot news for telefilm, and features for the slow-moving theatrical newsreel, Movietone has 24 men, divided into legit crews, covering the town. In addition they have contracted with Cinema Processing Labs for fast developing, and maintain a dark room at the Amphitheatre.

Warner Pathe, for whom the bell tolls next week, is covering sans audio with a skeleton staff. Paramount, Universal and News of the Day are on the job with skill and know-how, as in the past, but in a losing battle with the immediacy of tv.

Sole bright spot was pre-convention scoop of Charles Shutt, of News of the Day, who wangled from Adlai Stevenson the civil rights plank statement. But even this had its bitter side, for it was the tv boys who stepped right up and used it first.

YES-MEN CON TYRO PIC PRODUCERS INTO BAD MISSTEPS SEZ HORNBLOW

Hollywood's "yes-men" are working a new side of the street and it's much to the detriment of the film colony. They're goading the double and triple threat men in production into accepting scripts which aren't complete and/or applauding the first rushes which actually should tip the fact that changes are needed. They're telling the producer-director or writer-producer-director that a particular project looks great in its early stages but it eventually runs into nccessary rewrites and costly schedule upsets because of insufficient preparation.

And why do the "yes-men" perform this way. The same reason obtains as it has with the claques who have surrounded certain top film-makers and studio execs over the years. They feel they're there to cheer the boss; everything he does is great. Criticism is a one-way ticket to unemployment.

The foregoing is one of the downbeat asides to the upsurge in independent production and is presented here as one man's opinion—the man being veteran producer Arthur Hornblow Jr.

Hornblow's particular beef concerns the former writers and directors who now are pursuing indie paths and have added "producer" to their titles but actually don't understand, he says, the meaning of the job. The claques are fine for their morale at the start of work on a property. But half-way through the shooting it's found that there's not enough script written out. Re those claques. "this is 'yesmanism' in its worst form," submits Hornblow.

"Trouble with the wunder kind type of Hollywood operator is that absence of knowledge of the producer's function," according to Hornblow. "The producer," he states, "is manager, editor and critic. He must be able to seek out the right story, eliminate its flaws in the scenario, assemble and guide the performers and collaborate with the director. He must check temperamental outbursts. He must give the entire project a harmonious flow.

"The combination director-producer, with some exceptions, or the writer-producer-director simply cannot function adequately in the multiple capacity. The result is, with the claques as an adverse factor, the wunder kind is going overboard on shooting time and the full potential is not being drawn from screen properties."

For years on the Metro lot as a contract film-maker, Hornblower thinks it's fine that producers, going indie, are now sharing in the profits. But an organization such as M-G had its plusses because of its long history of emphasis on the role of producer, he believes.

Hornblow was in New York this week en route to London where he'll produce an adaptation of the legiter, "Witness For the Prosecution." Follows this with "Solomon and Sheba," the latter probably in the Todd-AO process. Both in partnership with Edward Small and for release by United Artists.

Thrillarama Adventure

Still another widescreen technique. Can be theatre-installed in 17 hours. But first film marred by seam and fade. Device inferior to photography, narration and music.

Houston, Aug. 9.

New wide screen depth perception process presented by Thillarama Production Inc. of Dallas (Albert H. Reynolds, Dowlen Russell). Photographed under contract by Raphael G. Wolff Studios Inc. of Hollywood. Presented at Metropolitan Theatre, Houston, Aug. 9, 1956. Running time, 96 MINS.

The latest of the widescreen techniques is far from being a perfected device. Thrillarama's biggest advantage to the theatre operator is its relative simplicity. It utilizes two standard cameras to produce a three-times-the-usual size picture on a curved screen.

But a disconcerting and annoying seam results when the two films are brought together on the screen. The synchronization of the two strips of film is not nearly perfect and the result is a great deal of split-level imagery.

The places and events filmed for the inaugural footage are interesting and well chosen. They vary from underwater ballet in Weeki Wachee Springs in Florida to a precision drill team of cowgirl clad coeds to a Marine training maneuver.

The color photography is often good but has a tendency in spots to wash out. This doesn't happen to the whole curved screen but mainly in an area close to the seam.

The segment on the Leathernecks was very well received and in light of the recent McKeon courts martial might lend itself to the best exploitation possibilities. Forst.

The Solid Gold Cadillac

Comedy caper from the stage hit. Judy Holliday, Paul Douglas and bright b.o.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Columbia release of Fred Kohlmar production. Stars Judy Holliday, Paul Douglas; features Fred Clark, John Williams, Hiram Sherman, Neva Patterson, Ralphe Dumke, Ray Collins, Arthur O'Connell. Directed by Richard Quine. Screenplay, Abe Burrows; from play by George S. Kaufman, Howard Teichmann, produced on stage by Max Gordon; camera, Charles Lang; editor, Charles Nelson; music, Cyril J. Mockridge, conducted by Lionel Newman. Previewed July 26, '56. Running time, 99 MINS.

Original Broadway script was changed to fit an older stage actress, Josephine Hull, and is now changed back in the Columbia film version as a vehicle for a younger comedienne, Judy Holliday. The satire on minority stockholder gadfly treatment of vested interests and pompous executives makes for hilarity and the boxoffice prospects are bright.

In this version, the heroine of George S. Kaufman-Howard Teichmann play gets not only the Cadillac, but a man.

Script is by Abe Burrows. As the dizzy blonde with some native, and naive, common sense, Miss Holliday is a delight. The man's Paul Douglas, who does much to make the comedy click under Richard Quine's direction, even against such competition as a femme role tailored to Miss Holliday's particular talent.

Fred Kohlmar's production achieves a plushy look without the use of color or bigscreen assists. There is a flash of color at the tale's wrapup to show off that creampuff auto of the title, but the comedy is such that no one will miss a dye job elsewhere. Charles Lang's photography, the gowns by Jean Louis, and the art direction and set decorations do their share in contributing to the physical polish.

Laugh springboard is in playing the little against the big and making the small dog the winner. In this case, it's a broad treatment of big corporation board members who get their comeuppance from a femme who owns only 10 shares of common in the company. Slickly caricaturing the stuffed shirts are Fred Clark, John Williams, Hiram Sherman, Ralph Dumke and Ray Collins, each of whom registers strongly in the laugh line.

Along with slicing up big business, plot takes a poke at government, too, through the character done so well by Douglas. He's the company's ex-prexy, resigned to take a dollar-a-year post in Washington, but who ends up carrying the ball for Miss Holliday in her campaign to represent the small stockholders of the corporation in question.

Abetting the laughs are Arthur O'Connell, mild-manner office manager, and Neva Patterson, the shy secretary to the mischief-creating Miss Holliday. Others in the cast are able, too.

Film has a narration by George Burns, although it serves no particular purpose as far as the comedy is concerned. In the stage original the late Fred Allen officiated similarly.

Score was cleffed by Cyril J. Mockridge, with Lionel Newman conducting, and is an aid. There'll probably be some sales help from the often-spun Pearl Bailey disk of a tune wearing the picture's title, although it's not in the aotual footage. Brog.

Bus Stop
(C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Marilyn Monroe in rowdy film treatment of the stage comedy; surefire b.o.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

20th-Fox release of Buddy Adler production. Stars Marilyn Monroe; introduces Don Murray; features Arthur O'Connell, Betty Field, Eileen Heckart, Robert Bray, Hope Lange, Hans Conried, Casey Adams. Directed by Joshua Logan. Screenplay, George Axelrod; based on play by William Inge; camera (De Luxe Color), Milton Krasner; editor, William Reynolds; music, Alfred Newman, Cyril Mockridge; song, Ken Darby, sung by The Four Lads. Previewed Aug. 10, '56. Running time, 94 MINS.

William Inge's rowdy play about a cowboy and a lady (sic) gets a raucous screen treatment in this Buddy Adler production for 20th-Fox. The results, and particularly from the casting of Marilyn Monroe after her long film holdout, look like surefire boxoffice.

Pic is Miss Monroe's first since "Seven Year Itch," a b.o. success, and this return shot is headed in the same general direction at the wickets. Both the scripter and director, George Axelrod and Joshua Logan, respectively, were brought from the legit field to get the Inge comedy on film and, with a few minor exceptions, bring the chore off resoundingly.

The production, besides returning Miss Monroe, also serves to introduce a fresh new male face to film audiences in the person of Don Murray. He is the exuberant young cowhand who comes to the city to win some rodeo money and learn about women. Audiences will like him and should await his next film start, possibly in role that doesn't require quite as much broadness of playing, with interest.

The Monroe fans will find her s.a. not so positive, but still potent, in her "Bus Stop" character, but this goes with the type of well-used saloon singer and wouldbe actress she portrays. The glamour has been bleached out with extremely light, and not too becoming, makeup, but the personality is still there. Performancewise, Miss Monroe comes off acceptably, even though failing to maintain any kind of consistency in the Southern accent required of the role.

Murray is a 21-year-old Montana rancher who comes to Phoenix for the rodeo, meets and kisses his first girl and literally kidnaps her. The girl, a "chantoosie" in a cheap restaurant patronized by rodeo performers, is reluctant about marriage, but by the time Murray ropes her, shouts at her, and gets beat up for her, she gives in, both because love has set in, as well as physical exhaustion.

Adler has given the two top players some terrific support. Arthur O'Connell milks everything from his spot as Murray's friend and watchdog and Betty Field clicks big as the amorous operator of the roadside bus stop. Another scoring strongly is Eileen Heckart, Miss Monroe's friend. Particularly good is Robert Bray, driver of the bus who likes to eye a shapely leg or pat a friendly dame. It's his character that keys the plot wrapup when he whips Murray during an enforced stop as the bus stop. Among others seen to advantage are Hope Lange, Hans Conried, Casey Adams and Henry Slate.

Phoenix footage includes quite a bit of rodeo contesting, giving an action note to the plot very effectively. Scenes in the restaurant where Miss Monroe works and further color, as do those rolling bus shots caught by the CinemaScope cameras of Milton Krasner in De Luxe Color. Brog.

James Mason in dramatic study of dangers of wonder drug, cortisone. Well-done.

James Mason has picked a powerful subject for his first 20th-Fox production and delivers it with quite a bit of dramatic distinction in carrying out the supervisory duties and as the male lead subjected to a miracle drug experiment. "Bigger Than Life" exposes the good and bad in cortisone, showing it to have the potential to work great curative wonders, or to destroy physically and mentally a wrongful user. There's a certain amount of controversial material in such a subject and any pro and con that develops might be helpful at the boxoffice.

A great deal of care is taken in the forceful, realistically drafted screenplay by Cyril Hume and Richard Mailbaum to give both sides of the case, while at the same time telling a gripping, dramatic story of people that become very real under Nicholas Ray's wonderworking direction. The performances are standout under his guidance, with Barbara Rush earning particular praise for her work as Mason's troubled wife. It's an extremely moving portrayal of great depth and shading.

Mason is exceptionally fine as the modestly-circumstanced grade school teacher who undergoes a series of experiments with cortisone in the hope he can be cured of a usually fatal disease. At first the experiments progress promisingly, but he begins to overdose himself and some startling personality changes occur, building a morbid kind of suspense to the smashingly dramatic climax in which the teacher is prevented from carrying out his intention of killing his son, his wife and himself. A hopefully happy ending put a believable tag on the absorbing 95 minutes.

Christopher Olsen scores with his tremendously effective study of Mason's young son. There's no touch of moppet precociousness in his playing. Walter Matthau registers strongly as the family friend who prevents a tragic end to the story, while Robert Simon and Roland Winters are good as doctors. Rusty Lane, school principal; Kipp Hamilton, a flirty teacher; Rachel Stephens, a nurse; Lewis Charles, Gus Schilling and others lend the melodrama very good support.

The CinemaScope lensing in De Luxe Color by Joe MacDonald leads the list of a number of standout assists, which include editing by Louis Loeffler, sound by W. D. Flick and Harry M. Leonard, art direction and set decorations by Lyle R. Wheeler and Jack Martin Smith, and Walter M. Scott and Stuart A. Reiss, respectively. David Raksin's score, conducted by Lionel Newman, figures importantly. Brog.

The Queen of Babylon
(ITALIAN-COLOR)

Sexy spectacle starring Rhonda Fleming, Ricardo Montalban; good exploitation entry.

20th-Fox release of Pantheon Film (Nat Wachsberger) production. Stars Rhonda Fleming, Ricardo Montalban. Directed by Carlo Ludovico Bragalla. Screenplay Ennio de Concini, Gluseppe Mangione, Bragaglia from story by Marla Bory; camera (Ferraniacolor), Gabor Pogany; music, Renzo Rossellini. Tradeshown N.Y., Aug. 9, '56. Running time, 109 MINS.

| Semiramis | Rhonda Fleming |
| Amal | Ricardo Montalban |
| Assur | Roldano Lupi |
| Sibari | Carlo Ninchi |
| Lysia | Tamara Lees |

Sex, scanty costumes and action are the prime ingredients of this Italian-made spectacle of pre-Biblical times. There are minor faults in the lavish Pantheon Film production but these can be overcome by an aggressive campaign for the story abounds with exploitable angles. Also an asset marqueewise are stars Rhonda Fleming and Ricardo Montalban.

Picture isn't sufficiently polished to merit much attention in the downtown deluxers, but it should mop up in subsequent runs and drive-ins if effectively sold. Dubbing of the original Italian is but fair and the dialog is occasionally stilted. While a film of this nature would have registered better pictorially in widescreen, nevertheless the movement and lusty atmosphere of ancient Babylon are adequately captured by use of the standard aspect ratio.

The Maria Bory yarn, which three scripters adapted for the screen, affords Miss Fleming a field day as far as displaying her ample proportions is concerned. For this is the legend of the Queen of Babylon to whom history attributes "every kind of extravagance and vice." Before her ascension to the throne, she was a lowly goatherder whose wants were few and tastes were simple.

But rapid changes came about when Ricardo Montalban, a dashing Chaldean warrior, took refuge in her hut from the pursuing legions of Roldano Lupi who portrays the tyrranical King of Assyria. Initially, the flaming-tressed Miss Fleming is conscripted into the ranks of the royal concubines. But she disdains both Lupi and his nefarious prime minister, Carlo Ninchi. It goes without saying that eventually Montalban overcomes adversity to install her upon the throne.

Most of Miss Fleming's contribution is confined to demonstrating her charms with a minimum of attire. To lensman Gabor Pogany's credit his Ferraniacolor camera hardly misses a contour. Montalban's performance is reminiscent of Douglas Fairbanks Sr. in his heyday for he vanquishes "hunger-crazed" crocodiles and assumes proportions of a one-man army as he swings on chandeliers, etc.

Less impressive is the thesping of Lupi and Ninchi. Former is rather colorless as the wicked king while Ninchi tends to overplay his role of the scheming royal henchman. Tamara Lees has her points as a jealous concubine who first informs upon Miss Fleming but aids her at the denouement. While things are a bit unwieldly at times, direction of Carlo Ludovico Bragaglia manages to cram copious action, femininity and suspense in the 109 minutes of footage. Score of Renzo Rossellini sets the proper mood and producer Nat Wachsberger has supplied topdrawer physical values. Print is by Technicolor.

20th-Fox, incidentally, is distributing only in the U.S. and Canada. Elsewhere in the world the film by local franchise holders. Made a couple of years ago, it originally was tagged "La Cortigiana di Babilonia" (The Courtesan of Babylon). It was also known as "Semiramis." Reportedly, the version released abroad has femme cast members wearing less than they do in the U.S. print. Gilb.

The First Traveling Saleslady
(COLOR—SONGS)

Ginger Rogers in hokey feminist period comedy, aided by Carol Channing and supporting tv names. Requires heavy selling.

RKO release of Arthur Lubin production, directed by Lubin. Stars Ginger Rogers, Barry Nelson, Carol Channing, David Brian, James Arness; features Clint Eastwood Robert Simon, Frank Wilcox, Daniel M. White, Harry Cheshire, John Eldredge. Screenplay, Stephen Longstreet and Devery Freeman; camera (Technicolor), William Snyder; song, Irving Gertz and Hal Levy. Tradeshown N.Y. Aug. 13, '56. Running time, 92 MINS.

| Pete | Robert Hinkle |
| Dowling | Jack Rice |

| Theodore Roosevelt | Edward Cassidy |
| Schlessinger | Fred Essler |
| The Laneers | |

The first production to roll off the RKO lot under the O'Neil-O'Shea-Dozier banner is a lightweight affair that will require hard selling. It brings back Ginger Rogers in a comedy role and a host of familiar faces from tv, as well as Carol Channing essaying her first picture role. Results are disappointing, for the period comedy is cliche-ridden and the plot lines artificial and telegraphed.

The feminist angle may win some of the distaff side of the audience, but it is hard to see how this Arthur Lubin production can lift itself above the routine programmer niche.

Miss Rogers, who remains a pretty dish, does not help matters in her projection of the first-saleslady role, adopting a nasal twang as a voice characteristic. The comedy, dealing with Miss Rogers' tribulations in selling what ordinarily would be incongruous items —corsets and barbed wire—veers close to out-and-out burlesque. Scenes are replete with stock Injuns, stock western characters and situations, and numerous visual gags. Even "Teddy Roosevelt," played by Edward Cassidy, and the Prince of Wales are brought in out of left field. Producer-director Arthur Lubin, who did the "Francis" series, adopted the same bald strokes for this one, with similar hokey effects.

The broad story lines finds Miss Rogers in the period of the Gay Nineties trying to retrieve her bankrupt corset business by branching out into barbed wire selling down Texas way. Every man who tried before had been strung up by the free range advocates. She's aided by her sidekick legiter Carol Channing who, during the course of the events, belts out one number, "A Corset Can Do a Lot for a Lady," for moderate results. Irving Gertz did the music, with lyrics by Hal Levy.

The featured males are associated with tv: Barry Nelson, of "My Favorite Husband" telefilm series, plays a transcontinental autoist who finally wins Miss Rogers; David Brian, of "Mr. District Attorney," is the steel tycoon; and James Arness, of "Gunsmoke," is the Texas baron, a heavy with a heart. The players acquit themselves competently, considering the vehicle, scripted by Stephen Longstreet and Devery Freeman.

The Technicolor enriches the Gay Nineties sets and throws life on the screen, when the locale moves to Texas. The production budget appears on the modest side. The title song, "The First Traveling Saleslady," sung by The Lancers at the intro and curtain adequately sets the mood. Horo.

Gun-running in Mexico back in 1916 sets up a round of adventurous action for this United Artists release. It has the kind of fanciful movement, lush settings via its on-the-spot lensing below the border in CinemaScope and De Luxe Color, and marquee names that mean a good playoff in the regular market.

Robert Mitchum is a likeable not always understandable, sort of hero-heavy in the Earl Felton plot who likes war because it gives him a chance to make some money gunrunning, besides finding amusement in his profession. While the yarn is a dime thriller, it also presented with some above-average touches here and there, plus some extremely frank birds-and-bees byplay between Mitchum and the heroine, Ursula Thiess, that adds spice to the action. Film has its slow spots, mostly due to occasionally draggy direction by Richard Fleischer and a need of tighter editing. For its market, though, the flaws are minor.

In addition to Mitchum, the male end of the cast draws notable help from the presence of Gilbert Roland, leader of the rebels for whom the gun-runner is trying to obtain arms, for money naturally, by hijacking a shipment being brought in by Zachary Scott for the Regulares. It takes some doing, and quite a bit of bloodshed, before the rebels get the arms. Windup finds Mitchum taking, instead of the money he likes, Miss Thiess, the unhappy wife of Scott w..o be-

Nothing So Rare In Hollywood As a Good Feminine Comic

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Shortage of first-rate comediennes—now at an all-time low—stymies the making of many good comedies, resulting in an imbalance of heavy dramas coming out of Hollywood, declares Columbia director Richard Quine.

"Top comediennes are the uranium of the motion picture business," says Quine, who directed "The Solid Gold Cadillac," Judy Holliday-Paul Douglas co-starrer. "They're not only as valuable to the entire industry, but are as rare and hard to find.

"They were always few and far between, but we did have a fair supply. There were Constance Talmadge, Mary Pickford, Mabel Normand, Marie Dressler, Carole Lombard, Jean Arthur, Irene Dunne, Claudette Colbert and a few others.

"They were right there on top, gifted with that indefinable universal quality—a kind of wistful appeal—that made them human beings as well as comics.

"Explore the field today and you come up with only two genuine, high-assay comediennes—June Allyson and Judy Holliday. These two wonderful performers have the ability to shuttle from laughter in tears, the indispensable ingredient of truly great comedy."

Quine maintains that there are two kinds of feminine funmakers: those you laugh at and those you laugh with. "Those you laugh with," he says, "have a humanness and humor so fundamentally international that they can be understood as easily by audiences in Marrakech as by those in Manhattan.

"Unhappily for all of us, June Allyson makes too few comedies. I recently saw her in Columbia's 'You Can't Run Away From It,' with Jack Lemmon, and I could have cried. Cried because she doesn't give up serious pictures and devote herself to comedy. The town is full of gals who can do the straight stuff, but we're starved for comediennes. There oughta be a law.

"But thank Heaven for Judy Holliday; she has no ambition to do 'The Brothers Karamanzov.' There is one of the classic comediennes of all time. To paraphrase, she is the eternal 'little woman, what now?' Her brow-beaten but ultimately triumphant Billie Dawn in 'Born Yesterday' won her an Academy Award, zoomed her overnight as a boxoffice champ, and will long endure as a text-book for aspiring female comics."

Quine's preoccupation with comedy stems from a career steeped in the most difficult of histrionic arts. He played the juvenile lead in the Broadway production of "My Sister Eileen" and subsequently directed the Col musical version starring Jack Lemmon, Janet Leigh and Betty Garrett.

"Eccentric comediennes work from the outside, utilizing odd props and costumes, and bizarre mugging," Quine further elaborates. "Under this heading come Martha Raye, Betty Hutton, Joan Davis and Judy Canova. Theirs is the technique of the wild antic; the end result, the belly-laugh. And good and great it is, too, and we can't spare them either.

"On the other hand, Judy Holliday works from the inside, natural, unforced, her fun issuing from character. Her characters are understandable and identifiable, within the ken of audiences anywhere. But we're even about to lose Judy for much too long a time: on completing her current picture, 'Full of Life,' she left for New York to do a play, 'The Bells Are Ringing'; if it's a hit, she'll be absent from Hollywood for two years.

"Glamour girls are a dime a dozen in these Hollywoods," concludes Quine, "and the studios keep looking for 'em and signing 'em up. But nothing is being done about finding potential comediennes and training them. We need some of that 'uranium' desperately."

Comedy Search

writers can't find anything to poke fun at, comedy dries up."

Truth, Jack Rose, adds, is the essence of a successful film comedy. "It's those comedies that are artificially contrived," he contends, "that fall by the wayside."

Edmund Grainger, who has just completed "Bundle of Joy" at RKO, feels the industry should make definite attempts to go after comedy blockbusters. Naturally, he feels "Bundle" is such a property. But Grainger believes that more films in this vein are needed by the industry, since they have "tremendous impact at the boxoffice."

"Comedies," says Grainger, "are here to stay. Situation comedies are best; they're more popular than out-and-out comedy and have a bigger appeal."

Twin Cities 'A' Houses Suffer On 90c Rule

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.

Because they're going to cut their prices more than the savings involved for them, Twin Cities' theatres now affected by the 10% federal admission tax will be worse off financially in consequence of its elimination up to and including 90c unless, of course, the lower antes stimulate patronage.

All Minneapolis and St. Paul loop first-run "A" houses now charging $1 after 5 p.m. will go to 90c at a sacrifice of 1c per ticket. Matinee prices, now 85c, will drop to 75c, giving the theatres 2c less per admission than currently.

Neighborhood subsequent - run exhibitors figure they'll be even bigger losers as a result of the development. Those in the earliest 28-day availability slot now get 85c or 75c. If, in order to maintain the present prices' spread between downtown and uptown, which they anticipate will be necessary for their boxoffice health, it'll mean cuts to 70c and 60c, respectively.

It's conceded that the subsequent runs in the later clearance slots will have to drop their prices proportionately. And even though they'll also reduce their prices, the outlying exhibitors are fearing that the downtown cuts will divert some of their present trade away from them without creating any new customers.

From time to time the downtown theatres have been boosting their scales from $1 to $1.25 top for certain pictures like, for example, "The King and I," currently. The $1.25 admission will not be altered in such cases and even may be raised, it's indicated.

The Minneapolis loop "A" first-runs that'll be slashing from their present regular $1 top comprise two each Paramount and RKO houses and two independent theatres.

It's generally believed in trade circles that out-of-town houses now having 65c to 75c scales will pocket the tax saving. Also, Twin Cities' area drivein theatres with 75c admission aren't going to lower their prices.

United Paramount here recently insituted free parking for its St. Paul loop "A" theatres' patrons and plans to do similarly in Minneapolis. Gratis theatre customers' parking was inaugurated by the independent Minneapolis and St. Paul World theatres more than a year ago.

Also, Paramount has just cut theatre admission prices in half at their $1 houses for people of 65 years of age and over and started a 50c bargain admission in such theatres up to 1 p.m.

EXHIBS PAID FOR 40-80 SEC. PLUGS

Despite competition from television for the advertisers' dollar, the theatrical ad film business continues to thrive and contributes an estimated $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year to the American exhibition take.

Film commercials, running anywhere from 40 to 80 seconds, are being placed today in 16,000 U. S. houses. The theatres are being paid to run the plugs, which are paid for either by local merchants or by large national advertisers.

According to Claude Lee of Motion Picture Advertising Service in New York (headquarters are in New Orleans), American advertiser interest is now beginning to extend to abroad and tentative talks are in progress looking to the introduction of the sponsored trailers in European houses.

Canada and South America already are well covered by the industry, he said. There are five ad film outfits in the field and they are estimated to roll up a combined annual gross of around $20,000,000.

Neither tv nor the drop of overall attendance at the theatres have particularly affected the sponsors' enthusiasm for their theatre programs, Lee said. "In the theatres they know they have a captive audience, and that counts a lot," he added. As for tv, he said it affected advertisers only for the first year or so. "After that, they come back to us," he noted.

None in N. Y.

One area in the country where the ad shorties aren't accepted is metropolitan New York, where the local pitch can't be worked. "There are too many outlets for goods too close together to make it worth while," Lee observed. Same holds true in the downtown areas of some other keys.

Ad film programs are sold on a local basis either for a period of 13 or 26 weeks, preferably the latter. Merchant has a choice of a series of plugs prepared either by individual companies or by the big advertisers. Nationally, the showings are worked on a dealer-manufacturer co-op plan, or else paid for by the manufacturer alone. Theatres are paid on a formula that takes into account their average weekly attendance, situation, run, etc., etc.

The ad films, many of which are now in color, cost anywhere from $400 to $2,000 and involve a choice of live or animation. Several of the trailers are also being used on tv by the advertisers.

Lee said he found a growing interest among advertisers in theatre promotion, and he noted that acceptance of the films by 16,000 houses meant that some 2,000 more situations were playing the trailers now than did some years

Increased Flow of 'B' Indie Films No Cure for Biz—Say 'A' Distribs

How's Business?

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.

With the boxoffice on the upgrade in the territory, shuttered theatres are being reopened at an increasing pace. Towns where they've just been re-lighted are Barnsville and Winthrop, Minn.; Augusta, Wis., and Finley, N. D.

At Rib Lake, Wis., the theatre has been closed and at South St. Paul, Minn., owner Ralph Green has notified the community that unless better support is forthcoming for his showhouse it'll shutter.

Grassroot Fans Cool to Same Ol' Tired Film Faces

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

The teenagers and young married couples who comprise most of today's feature audiences don't want the previous generation's favorites, but their own. This is the observation of film and telepix producer George Fox, just back from a seven-week tour of 27 tv stations in medium-sized midwest and southern cities.

Fox made his tour in connection with a tv series project he has in mind, but spent considerable time quizzing exhibitors on public taste, in every city where he stopped. Additionally, Fox spent evenings in the lobbies of the theatres, questioning the public on its preferences, in connection with several feature properties he is prepping for production.

"It would deflate some star's egos, to find out how little their names mean to the public," Fox observed. "The exhibitors want good casts, but not necessarily headed by so-called 'big' names.

"Why doesn't Hollywood talk to the exhibitors and the public in the theatre lobbies? All producers have to do is to take one trip a year and it would be impossible to make a failure. The results of my trip were so revealing I plan to repeat it every spring and fall, to hit 10 or 12 towns, and make my own survey. The way things are now, the producer only knows how well his picture will go over after he makes it, and sees the gross figures.

"The public wants new faces; not necessarily amateurs, but good, fresh faces. And they don't have to be young faces. Look at Ernest Borgnine.

"The strictly horror-monster pix are on the down wane. So is sci-

Benefit to the industry from the growing number of "B" quickies being fed into the market to still the smaller operators' cry for more product is being questioned by some executives who feel that this type product hurts rather than helps in the long run.

At the same time, it's freely admitted that, with the major studios impatient with the bread-and-butter pix, the small houses have to grab what they can if they want to stay in business.

What has happened, say these industryites, is that the process of adjustment to new conditions in the business so far has been restricted to production alone, with both distribution and exhibition doing business as before.

There is a considerably large group in the industry which thinks that production is merely a step ahead of the game; that other branches will inevitably have to follow suit under the impact of outside competition and other negative factors.

Meanwhile, with the majors concentrating on the big money pictures, the market is wide open and hungry for the former, regular flow of product which is now being filled by the quickies. Argument isn't that they can't make money—because they certainly can show a good profit on a low investment—but rather that, being of indifferent quality, such pictures are apt to hasten the demise of an already wobbly section of exhibition.

Apart from that, some observers question the wisdom of major studios like Metro turning out quickie nine-day wonders in an effort to cut economic corners. "The theatres can only compete with television if they offer superior entertainment," was one comment. "You can't compete by trying to undercut tv."

Duals

More than ever, producers and distributors would like to see the elimination of the double feature programs, which demand a non-existent supply of film. But here the exhibitors again are caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. They may ease their lot by dropping the double bill. At the same time, they argue, this isn't the time to give the customers less for their money. And audience mentality seems to be geared to getting two for the money.

To make things worse, exhibs

Economy Saws Off Two Exec Jobs

Irving Sochin and Harry Fellerman Victims Of Overhead Pruning at Universal in New York

Universal is the latest of the major film companies to embark on an economy program. The victim of the cost-saving drive is Irving Sochin, shorts subjects sales manager, whose job was eliminated last week. Shorts department and newsreel, which Sochin headed, will continue, however. The sales functions will be taken over by the regular sales force.

In another shift aimed at economy, the post of head of the special films department, held by Harry Fellerman, was also eliminated. Fellerman was returned to his former position as assistant to New York branch manager Joe Rosen. Fellerman, for several years, had been charged with the task of selling the J. Arthur Rank films released through Universal and other pictures requiring the art house treatment. Number of pictures falling in this category has declined considerably at U, cueing the end of the special department and resulting in Fellerman's shift. It's understood, however, that when U acquires a special film, Fellerman will double from his branch post in the selling effort.

Sochin, who has been with U for nine years, was offered an out-of-town branch post, but declined to uproot his family to make the change. He joined U in Cincinnati and came to N.Y. as a special Rank representative at U. He assumed the short subjects sales post five years ago after serving one year as an assistant to sales chief Charles Feldman.

GENERAL ANILINE UP 51% OVER YEAR AGO

Net earnings of General Aniline & Film Corp. for the first six months of 1956 represented a 51% increase over the corresponding period of 1955, prexy John Hilldring disclosed last week. Net income after taxes was $2,626,000 which was equal to $3.29 per common A share. For the similar 1955 period, net income was $1,744,000 or $2.19 per common A share.

Net sales climbed to $63,299,000 compared to $58,678,000 for the comparable 1955 stretch. Factor in the improvement, Hilldring said, was a high volume in the company's Ansco Division which manufactures professional and amateur motion picture film.

Terry Turner to Gander RKO Upcomers on Coast

Terry Turner, exploitation exec on the parent RKO Teleradio payroll, will leave New York for the Coast this week to onceover new RKO features and confab with production chief William Dozier and other execs at the studio.

Last film from RKO for which he beat the drums was "The Conqueror," a few months ago. Suggestion has been made that Turner may be set to work on the RKO theatrical and exclusively in the future.

His trek to the Coast was "suggested" by Daniel T. O'Shea, president of the film operation, it was said.

Lull (Meaning Howard Hughes) Now A Hum as RKO Plant Jumps

By FRANK SCULLY

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Hollywood these days is like a half-filled toy balloon. You squeeze it down here and it inflates over there. Right now it is popping up at RKO Radio, which for five years was deader than the cemetery next door to it.

The spectacle of one man's junk heap becoming another man's Comstock Lode is what makes the capitalist system an unpredictable mystery to believers in rigged economics.

While the overall picture of the primary biz of Hollywood seems lower than the Salton Sea, here and there joints are jumping and none jumping more than the Gower Street plant of RKO Radio.

They have so many productions pencilled in that producers have to queue up and wait for stages to be cleared. A little delay here and there, a few days shooting over schedule, and the next producer can't start. Not unless he has an oat opera and it can all be shot at St. George, Utah.

For a place that was in mothballs for years the RKO expanse looks fine. The paint is not bad and the pavement is in good condition too. I saw a catwalker sleeping above a set where Diana Dors was rubbing suntan lotion on the parts of her figure undraped by a snug-fitting one-piece black bathing suit, but I suspect he was a Rip Van Winkle left over from the former Howard Hughes regime. As for the rest of the people on the lot, they were busier than Gobel's dirty bird dogs.

1,900 On RKO Payroll

The statisticians of Messrs. Daniel T. O'Shea and William Dozier claim RKO Radio has 1,900 persons on the payroll, the largest number on the lot in 11 years. Many of them are from television and lots of them are from pictures —stars who hopped over to tv and now are hopping back to pictures.

If the older majors hadn't unloaded a lot of their contracted talent a few years ago, RKO Radio, talent-wise, would not be in the position it is today. This is what made it so easy for them to leap into production with the frenzy of squirrels at a peanut fiesta. The town was loaded with layoffs.

Many of them are pre-tested box-office names, stars like Kim Hunter, Rod Steiger, Jane Powell, Ginger Rogers, Joan Fontaine, Robert Ryan, Anita Ekberg, Glynis Johns, Debbie Reynolds, Red Skelton, Dana Andrews, Adolphe Menjou, Tommy Noonan and Jessie Royce Landis. Others are expected to pull their fireside audiences from one medium to this older form of entertainment — attractions like Eddie Fisher, George Gobel, Barry Nelson, Robert H. Harris, Bill Goodwin, David Brian, Carol Channing, Vivian Blaine and Janet Blair.

They have tapped young talent too. They are starring James MacArthur, Helen Hayes' 18-year-old son, in "The Young Stranger" and supporting him with such stars as Kim Hunter, James Daly and Marian Seldes, who played the daughter of Gladys Cooper in the Broadway run of "The Chalk Garden." John Frankheimer of CBS-TV's "Climax" directs "Stranger." They even went to Pittsburgh and signed Janet Norris, a 15-year-old star of Playhouse Musicals, to a seven-year deal. Before that they contracted Venetia Stevenson, daughter of Robert Stevenson and Anna Lee.

Strength In Depth, Too

This mixture of seasoned picture stars, tv stars and young talent is backed by solid directors like Norman Taurog, Mitch Leisen, Irving Rapper, Norman McLeod, Fritz Lang, Arthur Lubin and John Farrow. Farrow is an old hand around the lot but the others have given Hollywood strength in depth elsewhere for years. For "The Girl Most Likely" starring Jane Powell and Carol Channing Dozier has even tapped Gower Champion to direct the dances.

Among producers they have Edmund Grainger, William Bloom, Sam Wiesenthal, Stanley Rubin, Arthur Lubin, Stuart Millar and Paul Gregory. Gregory has been signed to produce five pictures in three years, his first being Norman Mailer's "The Naked and the Dead."

While Hollywood was drooping on the Vine, Gregory was out on the road sprinkling culture in the sticks via Charles Laughton, Charles Boyer, Agnes Moorehead and Sir Cedric Hardwicke. He knows how to sell a product and where it can be sold. As producers go, he is young. But not in selling experience.

Kanter Upped to Director

Foremost among newcomers is Hal Kanter, presently directing George Gobel and Diana Dors in "I Married a Woman." You couldn't get a duller simple declarative sentence than that for a title, but what Kanter will do to Goodman Ace's script is expected to be the sleeper comedy of the year. It is Kanter's first directorial job after two years as producer of the Gobel show, not to stress is years around the Par lot as a top comedy writer. His choice as director seems as reckless as cornering U. S. Steel.

The only gamble RKO Radio is taking is whether it can halt a stampede of rival producers to dump all their properties into the hands of an advancing television army and take to the hills. Having come in the main from the tv camp, the RKO toppers must believe they can play both sides of the street and make money on the sunny side as well as the shady side.

Obviously there is plenty of money back of the lot. Of course, there was plenty of dough back of it under Howard Hughes but he went into a deep freeze, whereas the rubber barons back of Messrs. O'Shea and Dozier have taken the band off their roll and are shooting the works.

At the present time no major studio has more pictures shooting. Most have less. As opposed to RKO's "Bundle of Joy," "Run of the Arrow," "The Day They Gave Babies Away," "The Young Stranger," "Brave Tomorrow" and "I Married a Woman," Col has "Fire Down Below," "End As a Man," "Seven Waves Away," "The Missing Witness," "The Captives" and "Utah Blaine." Par, always busy, tv or no tv competish, has "The Rainmaker," three biopix, "The Buster Keaton Story," "The Jim Pearsall Story," "Beau James," and "Flamenca" being shot in Spain.

Universal, always the busy unencumbered bee, has six pix in production too, most of them with b.o. names, notably "Quantez" with Fred MacMurray, "The Eyes of Father Tomasino" with Tony Curtis, and "Joe Butterfly," with Audie Murphy.

Metro has little around its enormous lot except some finishing touches to "Raintree County," which they are touting as tops, and "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Something of Value" is being shot in Africa and "The Little Hut" is away from the big lot too. As July lap-dissolved into August Metro began John Ford's "The Wings of Eagles," Edwin Knopf's production of "The Vintage" and Armand Deutsch's version of "Slander." But the Loew bunch were bucked up most of all by the $900,000 sale to CBS of "The Wizard of Oz" for four showings. It was figured that a few more "sales" like that and Hollywood would be having television in its subsidiary pocket.

All Quiet On Western Front

Except for "Anastasia" being shot in London, 20th Century-Fox is as quiet as a nun's face. Warners isn't much more active, having only "The Old Man and the Sea" ploughing its way through Caribbean waters and Alan Ladd on location with "Buffalo Grass."

But the real thriller-diller is the mimp of RKO. This lot had been dead so long, gravestone people were driving by wondering if the owners would accept bids. But it's as lively as a rock 'n' roll riot right now.

Richard M. Hall, secretary-controller of Chakeres Theatres, has been named secretary of the Dayton Control of the Controllers Institute of America.

UA Stock Issue

man, Max E. Youngstein and Arnold Picker—an actual payoff for their successful five years of accomplishment. They took a company that was on the verge of expiring and the resuscitation job they did is now a matter of history.

It's to be noted, too, that the profits that first trickled in and then mounted always were poured back into more production. The owners-managers took only modest salaries.

UA at present is in fine shape and this, of course, makes the stock flotation nicely timed. Company will gross about $65,000,000 this year, meaning a nifty profit. There'll be litle difficulty in aligning with underwriters, and the public buyers will be in line it's felt.

Rumors about the public issue have been around, and some word was out concerning television deals (separate story). These in turn were twisted beyond recognition as misinformed "informants" came up with the conclusion that the company was being sold and/or UA and another outfit were to be peddled jointly to private investors and then merged. All untrue.

Details of the stock offering, such as capital yield and how many shares at what price, have yet to be ironed out.

'Interlude' Cast

through Europe with Edgar Bergen, who came over to keep Frances Bergen company (its her first film role). The husbands got the car and kept each other company touring Germany, France, Spain and Scandinavia, while the wives worked on the film near Munich.

Keith Andes, who plays second lead in the film, bought a Mercedes and took off during a few free days. He wound up on the border of Czechoslovakia, and tried to argue the startled guards into letting him in for a look under the Iron Curtain. Although technically American tourists are now permitted in Czech-land, it's only with a visa, obtained after a visit of from one month to six, depending on the Czech double-check system. The guard called officials in Prague, who agreed to arrange a visa if given a little notice, and Andes returned to Munich sans the peek.

Director Douglas Sirk purchased a Ghia, and cameraman Bill Daniels got himself a Porsche.

All the cast plans to tour Europe in the new car fleet now that the shooting's over. The Powells are en route to Rome, with their two children, to visit the Brazzis (Rossano Brazzi co-stars in the film)—and just to keep the record straight bought himself a new Alfa-Romeo.

'B' Indie Films

have found that it's very difficult to pair a new film and a reissue. "You can make money with a complete reissue bill if it's good," said one theatreman. "But coupling an old release with a new one never pays off."

The distribs, for a score of reasons, wouldn't object in the least to dropping the "B"s from their skeds. At the same time, they feel that a. the small houses need 'em, and b. if they can produce or buy them very cheaply, a profit can be made.

At 20th-Fox, for instance, Robert Lippert is current lensing the first of six black-and-white CinemaScope films which are being turned out on a budget of $100,000 each. It's the type of action product which 20th can also put to good use in the foreign market.

There is an argument that holds that these cheapies actually represent a return to "basic" screen values, i.e., the simple and attractive principle of "the chase" and may be appreciated precisely because of it. But, in the light of past experience with "small" pictures, and particularly those in the middle cost range, many would disagree and argue instead that the cheapies are a throwback that'll kill off a potential audience sector in the sticks.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Number of Wall Street houses expressed private disagreement over the past week with the optimistic analysis of the picture business made by Arnold Bernhard & Co., investment advisers. This outfit, through its Value Line sizeup of the industry, had some qualifying comments to make but still concluded with the stated expectation of a "rapidly rising trend of earnings and dividends . . . and, in turn, high prices for their stocks." Recommended as good buys were National Theatres, Paramount, Stanley Warner, Technicolor, 20th-Fox and Universal.

A check of brokers shows that for the most part they think upped dividends and stock quotations could result from capital gains deals of some sort but the industry is going through a transition period and it's too early to tell about operating income.

Standard and Poor's estimates earnings for 1956 along these lines: motion picture companies to remain unchanged; theatres to drop, but less than 10%.

Afraid of complaints from employes resulting from the labor burden of switching lenses, exhibitors are bemoaning 20th-Fox's decision to drop the issuance of 2-D trailers of Cinema-Scope pictures. From now on, all 20th trailers for C-Scope films will be in CinemaScope. This is the second time that 20th has decided on this policy. It's previous decision last year was rescinded after a chorus of exhib beefs.

Theatremen are now convinced that 20th will stick to its new policy and are offering suggestions on how to cope with the situation. It has been suggested that (1) where possible, book a C-Scope short and attach the trailer to it, (2) attach the trailer to a 2-D cartoon since many exhibs now run their cartoons with an anamorphic lens attached, (3) attach the trailer to head a 2-D subject and make the changeover to the second projector after the trailer is shown. Then change lenses for the film remaining in the first machine.

Film advertising is more and more becoming like the paper-back books with their accent on unsubtle sex, commented an observer from the legit theatre. Bearing him out are the Warner ads for "Bad Seed," which speak of the "most terrifying rock-bottom a woman ever hit for love." Art work has a gal coming through a doorway and dressed in a transparent negligee. Escapes us what all this has to do with the picture. And that leggy shot of Deborah Kerr being given the wolf glance by William Holden might help sell tickets for "Proud and the Profane." But, like the man said, it sure looks like the paper-backs.

Frank Nugent took a look at Boston's city hall, the council chamber and surrounding terrain this week in connection with Columbia's screen version of "The Last Hurrah." City exec Walter Milliken showed Nugent, who adapted "Mr. Roberts" for films, around. The film to be made, based on the book written by Edwin O'Connor, from Woonsocket, R.I., and a former Boston Post writer, may or may not identify Boston as the locale. Central figure, "Frank Skeffington" has never been admitted by the author to be word portrait of James M. Curley.

Tragic sinking of the "Andrea Doria" puts the upcoming Copa Production, "Seven Waves Away," on the top of the list as the most topical picture of the year. Tyrone Power starrer deals with the sinking of a modern luxury liner. Original screenplay by director-writer Richard Sale tells the story of the 27 survivors of the ocean tragedy. Ironically, when Power, Sale and producer Ted Richmond launched the film there was some Hollywood skepticism over the story line, feeling being that it couldn't be made credible in an age of radar and other safety devices.

Improvement in picture quality and clarity through reduction in film buckling can be achieved by use of a curved gate projection mechanism, Motion Picture Research Council's Theatre Projection Committee reported after several weeks of studying the new device. While not a new invention, curved gate has been perfected so that it holds the film in a curved position in the aperture while the picture is being projected, committee reported. Curvature gives the film added stiffness to withstand the intense heat and light of the projector, reducing buckling and insuring a much sharper image on the screen.

Joseph Iverson, operator of Iverson's Ranch, long a location site for oaters, has launched a campaign for film industry assistance in diverting a planned Los Angeles county horseback trail. Trail, to extend from San Diego to Santa Barbara, would go through the Iverson property if present plans are followed. Iverson has asked producers and directors to sign a petition asking for a change in the route since the trail, running through the location site, would ruin the ranch for film work.

Allied Artists is renting out studio space for the first time in its history, taking advantage of a big backlog and a summer production lull. First to take advantage of the situation is the Bishop-Hittleman production, "Buckskin Lady," for United Artists release. In the past, AA has made space available to producers who were working on AA releases but soundstages and facilities will henceforth be open to anyone, at least until the studio resumes its own production program and needs the space.

The gross revenue of Canada's 46 motion picture producing companies in 1955 is reported to total $2,456,000. The 1954 gross total was $2,106,000, according to the federal statistics bureau. In 1955 (1954 figures in parenthesis), these companies made one theatrical feature (2); 46 theatrical shorts (50); 338 telefilms (335) and 352 non-theatrical films (363).

Harry M. Warner, former president of Warner Bros., now holds only 28,700 shares of the company's common stock, 13,700 of these being in a trust in which he's the beneficiary. In the deal switching control to the Serge Semenenko group, Warner peddled 90,550 shares. He'll also divest part of his remaining shares shortly under the company's stock tender program.

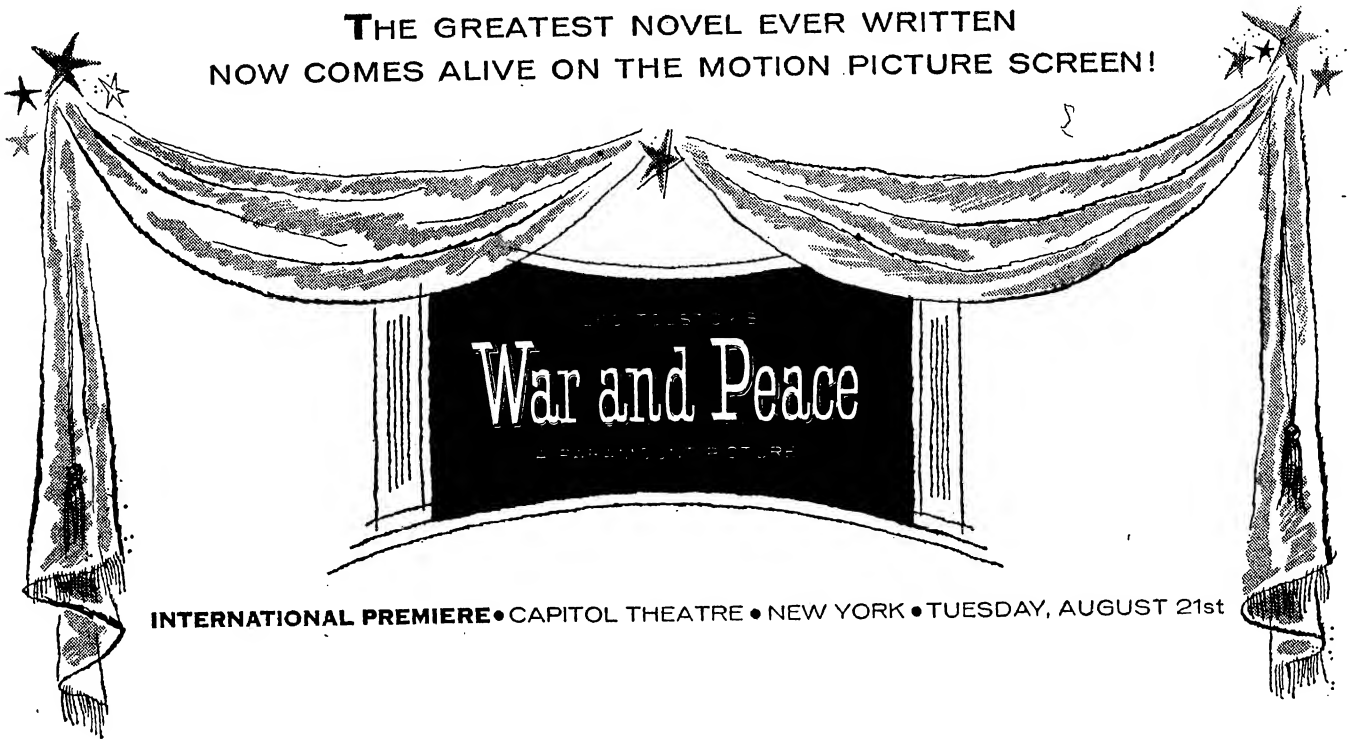
ence fiction as pure fantasy. The public is demanding more science than fiction.

"Westerns are still tops, but need more meat, not just shooting and chase. Gene Autry still packs them in, which is a paradox. The public wants new faces, but still likes Autry."

Fox intends to put three features before the cameras this coming year, based on his findings. "They're not going to be colossals, but they won't be shoddy either." Fox revealed that all three will cost approximately $1,000,000, with the first going before the cameras next spring.

As for his tv findings, the major one Fox emphasizes is that the big shows with the top national ratings mhay only draw 5.6 or 6.5 Nielsens in the smaller towns, in opposition to some local shows.

"The local affiliates are unhappy with the network programming heads, who don't take local peculiarities in consideration. For instance, the time slot. What may be a good time in New York may not be so hot in other areas. Local tastes are entirely disregarded in N. Y. and Hollywood."



I have seen the completed film of WAR AND PEACE and I am happy to tell the motion picture industry sincerely that in all my long experience in show business, I honestly can think of only four or five other pictures qualified to rank with it.

WAR AND PEACE has never been excelled in its magnitude of scope, its timely epic theme, its spectacular drama of colorful nations embattled in war and enmeshed in the romance, tragédy and comedy of peace, the gripping private lives of the appealing leading characters, the wonderful performance of all the inspired players, the magnificent quality of its production, direction and breath-taking Technicolor VistaVision photography.

To its gifted stars—Audrey Hepburn, Henry Fonda, Mel Ferrer, Vittorio Gassman, Anita Ekberg, Herbert Lom, Oscar Homolka, John Mills and the rest—I take off my hat. To its dauntless producer, Dino DeLaurentiis, and director, King Vidor, and all the other production talent who created this masterpiece, I extend my warmest congratulations.

I am proud of our industry for this achievement and proud that Paramount is privileged to distribute WAR AND PEACE to the international screen.

Influx of Demo convention hangers-on is helping firstrun biz here some, but bulk of coin for what are mostly strong holdovers is coming from localites.

"Away All Boats" shapes a torrid $34,000 for opening week at the State-Lake, being helped by imaginative, in-depth drumbeating. "Earth Vs. Flying Saucers" and "Werewolf" combo should do a sock $22,000 in first Roosevelt week.

'Boats' Fast 14G In Fair L'ville

Louisville, Aug. 14.

"Away All Boats" is proving a real winner with a smash session at the Rialto this week. Take is fairly good here generally in spite of fact that Downtown Shoppers Days (10-11) hurt the firstruns. Mary Ann is good with "Satellite in Sky" and "Stranger at Door." Dual bill of "Fastest Gun Alive" and "Nightmare" looms modest at Loew's. "Pardners" at the Kentucky is fair.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 55-85)—"Pardners" (Par) (3d wk). Maintaining nice $5,000 pace. Last week, $6,000.

'Concho' Crisp $16,000, St. L.; 'Profane' Big 17G

St. Louis, Aug. 14.

Biz is nice this frame with mercury still flirting with the 100-degree mark. "Proud and Profane" and "Johnny Concho" are running about even for total coin laurels but later is actually making the better showing since playing a smaller house. "Seven Wonders of World" continues fancy in 16th round at the Ambassador. "Away All Boats" still was solid in second stanza at the huge Fox.

TO RECORD 200G 1ST B'WAY WEEK

Arrival of hot, sweltering weather starting last Friday (10) and dearth of new product will cut down on the total business for Broadway firstrun theatre this session, but do not appear hampering the b.o. blockbusters. Hot, clear weekend packed the shore resorts.

"High Society" with stageshow at the Music Hall stands head and shoulders above all competition this week. It is heading for a new non-holiday high of $200,000 on initial stanza ending today (Wed.) and may smash the old record of $200,325, hung up by "Glass Slipper" in an Easter holiday week. "Society" registered the biggest opening day biz ever at the Hall last Thursday. It also was the greatest weekday for a non-holiday on fourshow basis. The next highest money mark at the Hall was made by "Rose Marie," which got $198,930, also on an Easter week.

"Proud Ones" with vaudeville looks fancy $19,000 at the Palace. Second round of "Autumn Leaves" is holding with socko $30,000 at the Astor.

Elsewhere, it's mainly extended-run with "King and I" plus stage-bill easily the champ in this category. This combo is heading for a mighty $90,000 in current (7th) stanza at the Roxy, and stays on—likely through Labor Day. "Bigger Than Life" shapes mild $12,000 in second Victoria session.

"Pardners" landed a good $15,000 in third frame at Mayfair. "Earth Vs. Flying Saucers" was down to mild $25,000 in second round at Paramount, where Frank Sinatra comes in to head stageshow starting today. "Johnny Concho," Sinatra's initial indie production (he stars in it, too) accompanies the stage layout.

"Moby Dick" is holding with stout $37,700 in sixth stanzas, daydating at Criterion and Sutton. Pic continues at both houses. "Fastest Gun Alive" still is fast with $9,500 in fifth frame at the Globe.

"Somebody Up There Likes Me" shapes good $13,500 in sixth (final) week at the State. "Away All Boats" replaces tomorrow (Thurs.). "Trapeze" looms sluggish $14,000 for 10th round at the Capitol, and now is in its final (11th) week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Autumn Leaves" (Col) (3d wk). First holdover week ended last night (Tues.) held with fancy $30,000. Initial week was smash $37,000, way over hopes.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.50)—"Secrets of Reef" (Indie) (4th wk). Third round ended Monday (13) was sturdy $8,100. Second week was $9,000.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Trapeze" (UA) (11th-final wk). The frame ended Monday (13) was sluggish $14,000. Ninth week was $15,500. "War and Peace" (Par) opens Aug. 21.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.30)—"Moby Dick" (WB) (7th wk). Sixth week ended last night (Tues.) was smooth $26,500. Fifth was $28,500.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Riffi" (UMPO) (11th wk). The 10th frame ended last night (Tues.) held at great $11,200 after $11,500 for ninth.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Fastest Gun Alive" (M-G) (5th wk). Present round finishing today (Wed.) is heading for hep $9,500. Fourth was $10,500.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)—"Private's Progress" (DCA) (4th wk). Third session ended Monday (13) pushed to wow $16,000 after $15,000 for second week.

Biz continues at high level here this stanza, considering that two top draws are longrun holdovers. "King and I" won a fifth week at Indiana, unprecedented in recent years, and is holding up well. So is "Moby Dick" in fourth stanza at Keith's. However, this week's sock grosser is the new entry, "High Society," which is terrific and doing biggest first stanza in two years at Loew's.

Cleveland, Aug. 14.

"Eddy Duchin Story" at the Allen and "High Society" at the Stillman are running neck-and-neck for greatest coin totals here this session. # And Now The

Importance of Trailers

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

THERE are times when the value of the most basic tool the exhibitor has with which to advertise, namely trailers, is overlooked. It is understandable that all methods to bring more patrons to the theatres must be explored. However, in the process the importance of present means should not be diminished. Strange as it may seem, instances are reported where theatres do not show trailers of forthcoming attractions either as an economy move or as a means of shortening a long program.

It would be difficult to think of a more false economy measure or a worse way to shorten a show. The audience in a theatre is composed of persons ready, willing and able to attend another program. The trailer is a concrete way of bringing the next programs forcefully to the attention of this "captive audience." All other forms of advertising must compete for the viewer's attention.

Every survey made has brought out the basic influence of trailers in creating attendance. Recently Sindlinger & Co. completed a detailed study of clients in and around Oklahoma City. The period covered 84 weeks ending June 9, 1956. It was found that the trailer was the primary influence in bringing $342 of every $1,000 of admissions at the first runs and an even greater proportion for the subsequent-run theatres. Also noteworthy is that over 28 per cent of those influenced to attend are in the so-called "infrequent movie-goers" class. The survey also found that nearly 85 per cent of patrons who returned for the next program can recall material they saw in the trailer. This indicates the strong impact made by trailers on patrons.

BOXOFFICE

There is no better way of telling patrons—and showing them—what the theatre has to offer than via its own screen. And the medium for this, of course, is the coming attraction trailer. Long a known and accepted fact, but sometimes thoughtlessly underestimated, Sindlinger & Co. has provided conclusive proof of the high potency of theatre trailers in the results of a survey made in Oklahoma City and surrounding county for theatres in that area.

We doubt if any other medium can prove that more than one-third of its viewers or readers are influenced thereby to "buy". But that's the case in the instance of theatre trailers. Out of 1,000 people who attended a first-run Oklahoma City theatre during one week, 342 were influenced by the trailer to buy tickets for the theatre's program the following week. A high percentage of infrequent patrons—nearly 29 per cent—named the trailer as the "motivating" factor. The impact of the trailer was given further emphasis by the revelation that 85 per cent of the returned patrons could tell about something they saw in the previous week's trailer.

Theatremen—and the industry at large—should never underestimate the power of their own medium; and they should make greater use of it, for selling the institution of the theatre as well as its product.

THE UNSUNG SHOWMANSHIP HEROES

HARRISON'S REPORTS

An interesting report in regard to the value of theatre trailers has been issued by Sindlinger and Co., the research analysis organization, which made a comprehensive survey for a group of theatre clients in Oklahoma City and County, covering a period of 84 weeks ending June 9, 1956.

The following pertinent information is disclosed in the report:

1. During the 84-week period, the theatre trailer has been the primary influence behind $342 of every $1,000 expended for admissions at first-run theatres in Oklahoma City.
2. A follow-up report yet to be issued will demonstrate that the theatre trailer in all other Oklahoma City and County theatres, excluding first-runs, runs about 12 per cent higher as an influencing factor than it does among first-run audiences.
3. Of the total patronage influenced primarily by the theatre trailer, 28.6 per cent are infrequent movie-goers.
4. Of the 47 per cent that return to the same first-run theatre in Oklahoma City for the next program, 84.7 per cent can "play back" something they remember from the coming attraction they saw during their prior visit, while 72.8 per cent say that the trailer was an influence in "wanting to see the picture."

These findings are indeed impressive and they point to the fact that a coming attraction trailer, which can be shown by the average theatre for less than the price of one admission ticket daily, ranks as the most valuable advertising medium available to the exhibitor because it returns the greatest volume of ticket sales for each dollar expended.

As most exhibitors have found out from experience, the trailer is an indispensible arm of theatre advertising, a sort of magnet that draws the public because of its promise of entertainment. It is a fundamental part of successful theatre management and should be exhibited with continuity and regularity.

Basic Showmanship Weapon

THE Independent FILM JOURNAL

A comprehensive statistical analysis by Sindlinger & Co. in behalf of a group of theatre clients in Oklahoma City, covering a period of 84 weeks ending June 9, 1956, reveals that the theatre trailer is the primary influence behind $348 out of every $1,000 expended for admissions at first-run theatres in Oklahoma City.

A follow-up report yet to be issued, Sindlinger states, will prove that trailers are even more potent as an influencing factor among subsequent run audiences.

These are truly impressive figures and should be carefully weighed by all exhibitors in relation to their total advertising budgets. From these facts, it is rather obvious that trailers lead all other advertising media in returning the greatest volume of ticket sales per dollar expenditure.

For too long a period of time, the trailer has been taken for granted just as we accept the other most basic, and precious, aspects of our business and family life. The last authoritative statistics on the subject were contained in a 1947 survey of the Woman's Home Companion, which revealed that of the factors influencing attendance, trailers drew 31 percent of the patrons.

It is right that exhibitors be reminded from time to time of the value of the showmanship tools at their command—and, make no mistake about it, the trailer is still the basic weapon in the showmanship arsenal.

Editors Say:

THAT LI'L OLE TRAILER

VARIETY

That Sindlinger (research system) finding in Oklahoma City and County, as reported in this family journal of learning last week, on the continuing potency and impact of the "little ole movie trailer," is one of the few time-honored showmanship techniques that seemingly holds up.

There are manifestations of variations on the theme, as for example the excellent trailerizing done on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TVer in behalf of "High Society" (Metro-Crosby-Sinatra-Grace Kelly). But within its native habitat, the "coming next week" whetter of the film appetite is still an effective come-on, be it in the nabe or deluxer theatre.

The impact would appear to have appreciated, comparing the Woman's Home Companion survey in 1947, where 31-out-of-100 were influenced returnees to the boxoffice by "coming next week" trailers, as against Sindlinger's 34.2%. Now let's make sure that they keep coming back to quality product of the want-to-see calibre.

Trailers Exploitation

By CHAS. A. ALICOATE

THE Film DAILY

NOT TOO LONG AGO research-analyst Al Sindlinger reported, with facts and figures, that movie attendance was definitely on the rise, which was good news. Sindlinger & Co.'s most recent survey, conducted over an 84 week period, now reports that among residents of Oklahoma County who returned to the same theatre for the "next change," 84.7 per cent of them "play back" something they remembered from the coming attraction trailer viewed during their prior visit; and that 72.5 per cent say that the trailer was an influence in their wanting to see this picture.

In other words, during the 84 weeks over 1,000 people who reside in Oklahoma County and attended a first-run Oklahoma City theatre, 34.2 per cent was motivated by the theatre trailer, or — stated another way — during the 84 weeks, Sindlinger & Co.'s interviewing in Oklahoma County, Oklahoma, shows that for every $1,000 in gross at the first-run theatres, $348.00 came from expenditures which were motivated by the coming attraction trailer.

Which brings us to the point that we have always had the tools and know-how for a successful operation, but it seems that while production is definitely on the upturn, the good old ideas of merchandising and exploitation seem to be on a holiday. Where are the campaigns of yesteryear designed to interest first the exhibitor and then the patron of the picture? We are not unmindful of the fact that it's pretty hard to "get hot" when conditions generally are none too bright, but exploitation is such an integral part of this industry that we dislike seeing it dozing when it should be up and doing its stuff.

THE VALUE OF A TRAILER

Any experienced exhibitor knows that nothing has greater effect on attendance than the advance trailer shown in theatres. It, more than anything else, keeps them coming back.

Old Reliable

SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW

For years and years on end, theatremen have rated the advance trailer their most reliable promotion piece. Indeed, the trailer has been "old reliable" for selling the upcoming show in the book of experienced exhibitors. But the strange thing is that in recent times there has been little evidence of that showmanship for the novelty presentation of the trailer which formerly was used with no little frequency.

Recently, a survey by the Sindlinger company indicated that the trailer's impact for bringing people back for the next attraction accounts for more than one-third of the paid customers. Surely that kind of selling performance merits far better that what is often encountered at theatres where trailers for two or even more double-bill shows are spliced up for one uninterrupted "pitch".

The industry periodically gets excited about "dissipation" of product (and there's plenty of that in some of the double-billing we've seen). But now, in view of this recent survey of the trailer's effectiveness for selling tickets, it seems time for theatremen to make the most of a very good thing by using imagination and a sense of timing in presentation of their "previews" of upcoming attractions.

The Value of Trailers

Film BULLETIN

A recent report by Sindlinger covering 84 weeks of attendance at first-run theatres in Oklahoma County, Okla., points up the importance of trailers as a selling medium. The researchers found, for instance, that 342 out of every 1000 people attending the theatres surveyed were motivated primarily by the trailer to return for the next attraction.

Another significant factor in the report was that of all those who returned to the theatre for the next program, regardless of motivation, almost 85 per cent could "play back" something they remembered from the trailer they had seen on the previous visit.

These figures add verification—if any were needed—that it is impossible to place too much emphasis on the value of trailers to sell pictures. But is this powerful selling medium being utilized to its greatest potential? We believe not.

Trailers should be used to exploit not only movies, but movie-going as well. The audio-visual factors give it incomparable potency in hooking its captive audience. Its strong impact and retentive qualities were evidenced by the "play back" experiment. Yet our industry does little to capitalize this indisputably high-powered medium to sell the theatre as an entertainment institution.

We urge National Screen Service, or COMPO, or the film studios to undertake production of a series of institutional trailers. Perhaps Walt Disney's creative cartoonists would lend themselves to such a constructive public relations task. We suggest not merely slogans, but packing the kind of entertainment punch that goes onto the picture-selling trailer. Let's institutionalize theatre-going via this effective instrument of exploitation.

Arg. Cinemas Stoned When C'Scope Pulled by Distributors; Exhibs, Too, Balk at Govt. 35% Cut in Scale

Buenos Aires, Aug. 14.

Patrons stoned firstrun cinemas here last week in a tense situation touched off by the 35% slash in admission scales for widescreen product as decreed by the Argentine Minister of Commerce, Rodolfo Martinez. He had actually wanted the cut to go into effect Aug. 3, but decided to put the decree into effect starting Aug. 6 because there were so many advance sales at the old price covering Aug. 4-5 (Saturday-Sunday) shows.

Distributors retaliated to the price-slash ukase by withdrawing widescreen pix. Sudden changes of bills and no shows in some houses apparently aroused the public. Exhibitors threatened to close their theatres when the widescreen product was withdrawn. Parties involved in the dispute are in constant huddles and may appeal to President Aramburu.

While reports had been current for some time about the admission cut, the sudden decree took the whole film industry by surprise since negotiations still were in progress. Instead of 10 pesos (about 32c), the scale for dimensional pix (in force since September last year), the minister ruled that the price should be a uniform 6.50 pesos (around 21c), including tax. The cut was explained on the ground that the higher prices allowed for the widescreen product was supposed to compensate for the cost of installing new type screens and projection equipment. His theory was that this created a disadvantage for unusual flat-screen product.

The minister reputedly believed that the new widescreen systems became general, with more and more cinemas adopting the higher scale, and that exhibs profits grew out of all proportion.

Exhibs, distribs and producers held continuous sessions last Saturday (4) discussing measures to counteract the price-slash action. One explanation for the action is that improvement in the quotation of the Argentine peso, in relation to the dollar, actually reduced the cost of installing the new systems —hence would make them more universal.

Long lines for the cinemas showing widescreen pix Saturday (4) bore mute witness to the fact that public did not find the 32c price too high. Also, local producers, who are just starting to turn out dimensional pix themselves to get the higher admission, are as much incensed as the exhibs. They long had urged a general lifting of admittance scales.

The dearth of cinemas in Argentina is notorious in view of the size of population, and it has been difficult for exhibs to build up reserves for new houses when not even allowed reasonable profits. Throughout the Peron dictatorship, prices at the cinemas were kept artificially low and most exhibs took a beating.

In view of the lip-service paid here now to free enterprises, this price cut is viewed as all the more surprising. It was decreed in the fact of almost unanimous recommendation against any slash by all interested parties. It was pleaded that the trade be allowed to decide such matters without state interference. It's pointed out that other forms of biz are allowed freedom—so why not the film business.

BRIDIE'S 'BOLFRY' FOR LONDON REVIVAL AUG. 29

London, Aug. 14.

A revival of James Bridie's "Mr. Bolfry" opens at the Aldwych Aug. 29 after a month's provincial run. Alastair Sim, who played in the original production in 1943, produces as well as plays the title role. Duncan Macrae portrays the complacently pious minister of a Scottish country parish.

Others in the cast are Eileen Moore, George Cole and Owen Holder. "Man Alive," the Robertson Hare farce, completes its Aldwych run Aug. 25.

Logan, Goetz Scout Sife for Japan Pic

Tokyo, Aug. 7.

Josh Logan and William Goetz have left Japan for the U. S. after a threeweek location scouting tour of Japan for the Warner Bros. production of James Michener's novel "Sayonara." Logan will direct the Goetz production which will be shot here this fall. Also leaving with the pair was Warner talent director S. J. Baiano who had interviewed Japanese candidates for the top femme role.

At a farewell press confab, Logan said Michener's novel has been adapted and expanded greatly by writer Paul Osborn in order to include more of Japan's theatrical world. While Michener's novel confined itself to the world of the Takarazuka Girls Opera Co., the film will include kabuki, the puppet drama and the traditional and classic Noh drama.

Brit. Cinemas Not Hit by Tele

London, Aug. 14.

In its first attempt to assess the effect of commercial tv on cinema boxoffice admissions, the Board of Trade in its quarterly statistical report says that the position for theatres does not appear to have been tangibly affected during this year's first quarter.

However, the Boards adds that the conclusions which can be drawn from the breakdown are limited since corresponding figures are not available for earlier periods. From January to March, gross takings at $61,815,600 were nearly 6% down on those for the corresponding quarter in 1955, and admissions for the same period fell 24,000,000 to 285,000,000 compared with the previous year's 309,000,000, a drop of nearly 8%. Returns for the period of review were compiled from 4,437 theatres comprising a total of 4,090,000 seats.

The worst affected area, the BOT deduces from the figures, was London and the south where the fall-off was greater than average, 11%. Receipts dropped 9.2%.

20th Sets New Plan For 'King' in London

London, Aug. 14.

A revolutionary pattern devised by 20th-Fox for releasing "King and I" here will make the picture available simultaneously at 25 theatres especially selected over a widespread suburban area on a minimum basis of a two-week run. This innovation, beginning Oct. 8, temporarily replaces the present system (considered to be unsatisfactory) whereby films are shown in three local zones at consecutive periods.

By this system, 20th-Fox gets at least 25 weeks of extra playing time with a consequent cut in the number of color prints which, for "King," cost about $840 each. A second general release for the London area is scheduled for the week beginning Nov. 12 when the pic will be made available on the normla pattern in northwest, northeast and South London.

Jimmy Pattinson, managing director of 20th-Fox, hinted that this could be the forerunner of a future release scheme, but at the moment it would apply only to "King."

Disney at Blackpool

Blackpool, Aug. 7.

A half-mile stretch of the upcoming fall season of Blackpool Illuminations will be devoted to Walt Disney characters.

Annual season of Illuminations, regarded as among the biggest in the world, gives a fillip to Blackpool's season of show biz, with 12 live shows running to the end of September.

Modern Cinema Rated 'Bad Risk' by Scots

Glasgow, Aug. 7.

Because of high costs a modern cinema is a "bad risk" in the new Scot town of East Kilbride, population 17,000. Center is likely to be cinema-less.

Sir Patrick Dollan, chairman of the town's development company, said no cinema companies in Britain were willing to build until costs had been cut. That, coupled with fact that half the population has tv sets, makes the new town a bad cinema risk, he said.

Code Chief Shurlock In Europe on Censorship Junket, Closeup View

Frankfurt, Aug. 7.

Geoffrey Shurlock, administrator of the MPAA's Production Code, is currently here on his trip through Europe studying censorship problems encountered by American films. In Wiesbaden, he was permitted a private showing of the hour-long series of censored clips from foreign films (including American) which were cut out of recent pictures to be shown in West Germany.

Commenting on the problem of censoring American pix in Germany, France and England, Shurlock said: "Regarding the cuts made here in Germany, I feel the censors were a little more generous with the films than the filmmakers are in Hollywood today. Several of the brutal scenes in gangster pictures were also cut in showings in the U.S.

"Most of the censored clips I saw from American films here in Germany were from films made up to five years ago. I feel that the German Censorship Board was justified in all the cuts they made, and wouldn't care to defend what they eliminated. But the producers in America today are reducing violence in films, and the censors in Europe have told me that with the new U.S. films, fewer cuts are required. Theatre-goers must find some shock value in the films to enhance the entertainment. The feeling is, that in America, the trend is to use violence and brutality to give shock value, with the high point in a western or gangster film usually being a rough hand-to-hand fight."

Shurlock felt that the European producers substitute sex for violence to give a pic that necessary shock value. He said European censors are kinder to sex and love scenes than in America, and that Europeans are stricter regarding violence.

Few Cuts For Sexy Angle

"German censors told me that they make almost no cuts of American films for being too sexy," Shurlock said. "Of about 200 dance scenes from American musicals, only two had to be cut out as too suggestive for West German audiences—and I agreed with the censors on both cuts. American producers today are aware of the importance of winning the European market. So we are cutting scenes of brutality, as much to win European approval, as we are to win okays in the U.S."

"A phase of censorship that we must keep in mind for Europe, is that it is a rather common practice to censor films as 'for adults only,' and not allow in anyone under 16. We rarely ban pictures for young people in the U.S. Here, I have found that American-made pictures which children are permitted to see in the U.S. have this particular 'for adults only' restriction in Europe. This cuts seriously into the theatre-going population."

After a quick stop in Sweden and a week's work studying censorship in England, Shurlock plans to fly to New York early next week.

Vera Lynn Wins BBC Pact

Vera Lynn has been signed up on an exclusive two-year contract for BBC radio and television which will iron out complications arising from overlapping commitments. For the past four years, she has broadcast a Sunday evening series with Radio Luxembourg and has just completed another series for indie tv.

Her BBC kickoff under the new pact begins with a radio series on Aug. 23, followed by a number of BBC-TV shows in October.

Gov't Aid Booms Italo Legit

O'Neill's 'Long Journey,' Williams' 'Cat' Among U.S. Plays Set for Production

Rome, Aug. 7.

The temporary renewal of government aid for the Italian theatre has spurred previously lagging plans for next legit season, with the result than an encouraging roster of planned productions and tours is currently being built up.

Of the several planned local presentations of Yank works, perhaps the most interesting is the production of "Long Day's Journey into Night" as announced (presumably pending final approval by Eugene O'Neill's widow) by the Ricci-Magni Company. The O'Neill postumer, whose only production to date has been in Stockholm, Sweden, would be acted by an Italian company headed by Renzo Ricci and Eva Magni.

"Cat On A Hot Tin Roof," which was to be staged last season but never arrived, is again on the roster of the Stoppa-Morelli Co. with pic-legit thespers Eleonora Rossi-Drago and Marcello Mastroianni billed for the Tennessee Williams opus. Two other U. S. plays, Michael Gazzo's "Hatful of Rain" and Clifford Odets' "The Big Knife," are to be presented by the Anna Proclemer-Giorgio Albertazzi Co., which also plans to show "The Governess," by Vitagliano Brancati.

Next season, Eduardo DeFilippo plans to stage his new play, "Examinations Never End," as well as some revivals while his brother's company (Peppino DeFilippo), currently on a South American tour, plans a series of Moliere and Plautus, as well as a new play written by Peppino DeFilippo, "Eucli-one 1957."

Vittorio Gassmann plans to act in and direct an "Othello" and introduce Jean Anouilh's "Ornifle" to the Italian public. He will play Othello and Tago on alternate nights. His company, headed by Anna Maria Ferrero, opens at the Qurino in Rome in October. A new group, topped by Olga Villi and Gabriele Ferzetti, will revive Molnar's "Liliom" and stage new Italian plays.

A Roussin play, new for Italy, will be presented by the Laura Adani, Carlo Ninchi-Luigi Cimara Co. Among other groups currently forming for fall presentations are the Andreina Pagnani Co., with a revival of Colette's "Cheri"; the DeLullo, Falk-Guarnieri-Valli Co., with an all-Italian program of new plays; the Lilla Brignone Co., with Strindberg's "Miss Julie"; Elsa Merlini Co. at Rome's Teatro delle Arti; the Tedeschi-Bonucci-Mondolfo-Barzizza Co.; the Calindri-Volonghi-Zoppelli Co. and the Nino Taranto Co.

In addition, the Little Theatres of Turin, Milan (Sant 'Erasmo), Naples (Scarpettina) and others are already drawing up varied plans for a full season, with details still to be set.

4th U.S. Company Set To Do Pic in Havana

Havana, Aug. 7.

The fourth U.S. film company to come to Cuba this year is scheduled to enter production this week. Dudley Pictures is set to shoot "The Fever Tree," based on the novel, "The Passionate Prisoner," by Janet Green. "Tree" is to be a full-length, English-language feature. Male lead may be John Cassavetes, with Raymond Burr to play a supporting role.

So far this year, the following Hollywood companies have filmed in Cuba: WB did "Old Man and Sea"; United Artists did "The Big Boodle"; and Sam Goldwyn Jr. filmed "The Sharkfighters." Dudley Pictures, a Beverly Hills firm, set up a Cuban subsidiary last year to film features in Cuba for worldwide distribution.

Jap Film Exports Soar 19% Over '55

Tokyo, Aug. 7.

During the first six months this year, Japan exported a total of 602 feature films, 205 newsreels and 33 shorts. In the first two categories the figure for this year represents a 19% and 6% increase respectively over the same period for 1955.

Income from these exports under the flat sales system alone came to $603,855, an increase of 38.4% over last year's first six months. Figures on percentage deals were not available.

These figures were released last week by the Japan Motion Picture Federation. Report stated that 85 foreign films were released in Japan from January through June, 4.5% less than the corresponding period of 1955. Films from the U. S. accounted for 65% of this total with 55 films. France was second with nine films.

Most of the features exported by Japan went to Okinawa (270), with Hawaii second with 152 imports. Communist China took 12 Japanese films during the period. In addition to its own product, Japan re-exported a total of 305 foreign-made films to Okinawa, Korea and Formosa among other places.

Thirteen of the Japanese films exported during the six months were tinters. During all of 1955, Japan produced only four tinters.

Mason Mulls Producer, Actor Roles in London

London, Aug. 14.

Here primarily for a vacation, James Mason, actor-turned-producer, revealed plans for upcoming productions he hopes to arrange in the capacity of studio producer under the 20th-Fox banner. His two-year contract permits him to produce and/or direct one picture and act in another every year for two years with an option for renewal.

Mason hopes to have on-the-spot discussions with 20th-Fox regarding possible British production of "Jane Eyre." The name part will probably be taken by an unknown actress since Audrey Hepburn would have been first choice but she's being mulled by Paramount for "House in Mist," which has an identical theme as the Bronte novel. Reason he would like to undertake production here is linked with advantage of authentic background and sets. The matter of filling supporting roles caused him to remark "Many American voices are intolerable to the English public, but they make a nicer noise than the mincing sound of inadequate English accents."

He anticipates a starring role in Zanuck's production "Island in the Sun" based on Alec Waugh's book. Shooting begins in October.

BRITISH EXHIB SEES TV FILMS PAYING NO TAX

Manchester, Aug. 7.

Dennis Walls, local exhibitor, has called on all interests in show biz to make a forceful plea to the British government on the need to cut the entertainment tax. He wants the combined aid in this fight from the live theatres, football, cricket, boxing, speedways, horse racing, greyhound racing, amateur drama groups plus the Variety Artistes Federation.

Interests affected by the tax and tv represent "an enormous latent power," according to Walls. Exhibs are victims of gross injustice, he alleges, because films used for tv do not pay a tax or levy, and if in Sunday programs do not pay a charity contribution.

Films on tv were not subject to same amount of censorship as when shown at cinemas, he says.

According to Walls, declining attendance is the main cause of British exhibs' worries. Had the level remained as it was in 1946 or 1952, entertainment duty would not be the burden it had become.

Bandido

comes a widow before the shooting is over.

Below-the-border locationing was a wise move on the part of producer Robert L. Jacks, giving the picture any number of strikingly beautiful scenes as lensed by Ernest Laszlo. In addition to the foursome already named, acting assists come from Douglas Fowley, in a good bit; Henry Brandon, aide to a well-played Mexican officer; Rodolfo Acosta and Jose I. Torvay, two colorful Mexican rebel-rogues. Other native players react well, too. Max Steiner's background score inject a Latin flavor and there's a snatch of a title tune heard here and there. Brog.

Well-made, well-played western.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Universal release of Howard Christie production. Stars Jock Mahoney, Martha Hyer, Lyle Bettger; features David Janssen, Grant Williams, Ted de Corsia, Harry Harvey Sr. Directed by Charles Haas. Screenplay, Berne Giler; story, Clarence Upson Young; camera, Irving Glassberg; editor, Ray Snyder; music supervision, Joseph Gershenson. Previewed Aug. 7, '56. Running time, 80 MINS.

A standard western plot undergoes a good polishing job in "Showdown at Abilene," making it an interesting actioncr. Via excellent playing, sound direction and a script that makes its characters believable, film comes off as good entertainment for the playdates at which it is aimed.

Jock Mahoney, former sheriff of Abilene, returns from the Civil War gunshy and with a troubled conscience to find an old friend has won his girl and is taking over the range from the farmers. On that plot from the Clarence Unson Young story, Berne Giler builds a logical scries of events for principals Mahoney, Martha Hyer and Lyle Bettger to enact under Charles Haas' firstrate direction.

By the time the climax comes around, Mahoney has righted his troubled conscience (he'd accidentally killed Bettger's young brother in the war) gets back his gun hand and rewins his girl, all to the tune of an actionful pace that moves along but still finds the time to make things believable.

Cast in the good Howard Christie production is an excellent one. Mahoney comes over well as the hero, giving the character a bit more than just the usual strong man handling. Miss Hyer is a gracious heroine with ability above the level into which most sagebrush femmes fall. Bettger is a topnotch heavy, underplaying it for additional menace. Among the others who help keep the footage entertaining are David Janssen, Grant Williams, two improving young male actors; Ted de Corsia and Harry Harvey Sr.

Technicolor lensing by Irving Glassberg achieves some smart pictorial values, while editing, background music and other work is good. Brog.

A Cry In the Night

Poorly - done meller about young girl kidnapped by psychopath; familiar names to offset production mediocrity.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Warner Bros. release of George C. Bertholon (Jaguar) production. Stars Edmond O'Brien, Brian Donlevy, Natalie Wood; features Raymond Burr, Richard Anderson, Irene Hervey, Carol Veazie. Directed by Frank Tuttle. Screenplay, David Dortort; based on a novel by Whit Masterson; camera, John Seitz; editor, Folmar Blangsted; music, David Buttolph. Previewed July 31, '56. Running time, 75 MINS.

| Marie Holzapple | Tina Carver |
| Jensen | Herb Vigran |

It will have to be the familiar cast names that carry "A Cry in the Night" through its programmer playdates because there's little in the way of entertainment to recommend.

The Jaguar production supervised by George C. Bertholon is a poorly-executed melodrama involving the kidnapping of a young girl by a psychopathic mama's boy. David Dortort's scripting fails to develop the suspense and excitement needed to carry such a plot, and Frank Tuttle's direction can make very little of the unbelievable characters and situations. The cast is similarly handicapped.

Natalie Wood is the teenager who's kidnapped by peeping-tom Raymond Burr after the latter knocks out her fiance, Richard Anderson, in a lover's lane incident. She's the daughter of Edmond O'Brien, too-stern father, but first-class police captain, and the forces of law and order are turned loose under the direction of another police officer, Brian Donlevy, to run down the kidnapper before he can harm the girl. They catch up with Burr and his victim in an abandoned brick yard and a few blows to the chin reducc the kidnapper to a blubbering hulk, crying pitifully for his mama.

Seen as O'Brien's wife is Irene Hervey, while Mary Lawrence plays his old-maid sister. Carol Veazie appears as Burr's mother. One fairly bright spot in an otherwise dull show is the jail house scene involving the booking of Tina Carver, a lady of easy virtue. Photography by John Seitz and the other technical credits are standard.

The Amazon Trader

Documentary-type featurette, enacting tales of the Amazon. Well done. Replacement for regular lowercase features.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Warner Bros. release of Cedric Francis production. Stars John Sutton; features Maria Fernanda, Zygmunt Sulistrowski, Anthony Ryan, Guido Wolff, Janet Albuquerque, Yves Manciet, Maitland Stewart, Therenzena Prates da Costa, Padre Agostinho Liebst. Directed by Tom McGowan. Written by Owen Crump; camera (WarnerColor), Anthony J. Ryan, Maitland Stewart; editor, Leo Shreve; music, Howard Jackson. Previewed Aug. 8, '56. Running time, 42 MINS.

Warner Bros. launches a new series of featurettes of approximately 42 minutes for bookings as a replacement for the usual lowercase feature. In the instance of "The Amazon Trader," the novelty is such that viewers will find it an interesting account of scveral tales native to that jungle region. It's a good, and different, supporter for regular dual bills.

Four such tales are strung together in this Cedric Francis production under Tom McGowan's direction, with John Sutton, in the title role doing the narration while assorted players, mostly non-pro recruits, enact the Owen Crump script. Locales are authentic, with the WarnerColor lensing by Anthony J. Ryan and Maitland Stewart being responsible for many vivid scenes of jungle life, waterways, even some half-nude natives of both sexes.

First tale finds Zgymunt Sulistrowski, medical student, getting himself lost in the jungle and then being rescued and miraculously cured of fever by native witch doctors. The second, the trek of Anthony Ryan and Maria Fernanda into the jungle in search of a mysterious tribe, never gets anywhere because the couple is forced back before ending the search. Third has Maitland Stewart and Therezena Prates da Costa playing a man and wife, he a naturalist and she a game hunter. Sequence in which she saves a native boy from the deadly Piranha has its excitement. Fourth tells the most story, dealing with Yves Manciet, a thief and murderer escaped from Devil's Island who doublecrosses the Indians who take him in and has his head shrunk for the dirty work.

Footage was shot entirely in the South American Amazon region, with Sulistrowski handling the production supervision in that country. Editing by Leo Shreve and the music by Howard Jackson are okay. Brog.

'Satchmo' Documentary Edited as Theatrical Pic

United Artists has a deal to release "The Saga of Satchmo," feature length production on Louis Armstrong's tour of France and Africa last year. Under the Edward R. Murrow-Fred Friendly production aegis, five hours of footage was shot on Armstrong's goodwill junket and this was cut for presentation on CBS-TV's "See It Now."

Armstrong and Grandma Moses shared the spotlight on the hour-long program which was subtitled, "Two American Originals." Some additional new material, including an introduction may be lensed for the theatrical feature.

Where Are Stars?

eted an unknown to national acclaim is missing. Despite opinions to the contrary and in spite of changing industry conditions, the major studios are still exerting efforts to build boxoffice giants.

Taking a leaf from the industry's glamor heyday when romantic teams flourished—Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, as four examples—Warner Bros. is attempting to build a modern love duo. Selected for the honor are two young players—18-year-old Natalie Wood and 25-year-old Tab Hunter—whose main appeal has been to the teenage audience.

WB has teamed the young players in two pictures—"Burning Hills"—and "Girl He Left Behind"—and if the resul's prove successful, it hopes to star the pair in additional films. As part of the buildup, the film company is sending Miss Wood and Hunter out on tour together for joint interviews and bally activities. WB has even gone to the extent of billing the young performers as "the greatest love team since Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell."

The policy appears to fit in with the desires of some exhibitors who have called for the development of star performers who appeal to the younger trade, rated in most polls as the most frequent ticket buyers. WB's effort will be looked upon with more than passing interest by the trade. Company's decision re Miss Wood and Hunter is based on the reception each received recently in personal appearances in connection with premieres. In a recent outing, WB publicists had to barricade and rescue Hunter from a swarming mob of adoring teenagers.

Near-Riot

formed (Domino is a Negro), dancing privilege was accorded only to Negroes; whites were admitted to sessions but could only listen and watch. Dancing, for them, at this type of session was verbaten.

The promoters of the session said the change in policy came because of the four-to-one ratio of whites in attendance. Shortly after announcement of the change in hoofing privileges, a rumor swept the hall that refunds would be made. A boxoffice worker attempted to make refunds, but when several persons began kicking at the door she and the ticket takers in the booth, along with the musicians, retreated to a locked room.

Meanwhile an unidentified man said the session was resuming and urged the teenagers to return inside. They started to do so but were swiftly hustled through the exit by policemen. An officer told the youngsters, "Elvis Presley is across the street—run over and see him." He wasn't.

Domino told police he could not play if Negroes were not allowed to remain and dance. He was quoted as saying his reputation would be hurt if he followed any other policy. Police said they had no other choice but to stop the dance under the tense situation.

Most of the resentment of the crowd seemed aimed at police officers and the promoters. Several witnesses said there seemed to be little interracial tension. A dozen youths were arrested for cursing and threatening the police officers.

What Dior Has Stirred Up

Gina and Marilyn can now breathe freely.

There are several themes:

The Magnet: Dior's silhouette is the triple magnet (three horseshoes): head, torso and hips—each tapering at the bottom. High round hats, closely fitted around the ears, emphasized bosoms fading into a narrow belted waistline "hipped" skirts with unpressed folds rounding out the hipline like a Dutch boy's costume. The ampler line modifies coats, thick woolen mess-jacket suits and the ever-popular sheaths, now fuller, softer and feminized.

Capes: Long, medium, short, hooded furlined, they are featured everywhere especially at Lanvin, the only collection Grace of Monaco saw before returning to her palace last week. Countess de Polignac, Lanvin's daughter, is now her cousin by marriage, and capes may prove useful to Grace in the future.

Russian Infiltration: The French couture may not affect the taste of Russian women, but B. & K. have obviously influenced the French couture: fur collars up to the ears, fur Cossack hats right out of the steppes, Catherine the Great capes, coats and dresses trimmed, lined, edged with fur and named Vodka, Bortsch, Troika . . . Large multicolored stones and strange makeup reminiscent of the Diaghilev Ballets.

"My Fair Lady" Influence: Flowing chiffons; slinky, draped gowns; feathers, egrets; trailing furs; mauves, greens, peach colors; black and white . . . the mysterious "Femme Fatale" Look of Paul Poiret—the Dior of 1912.

The piracy of pix and sketches is still a hot topic. The London Daily Express has caused a crisis. Not invited to the shows, the Express bootlegged stories and sketches, published them before the release date and is being sued by the Paris Designers Union (already engaged in a legal battle with a N. Y. sketch service). A designer supported the Express and resigned from the Union. Givenchy and Balenciaga, persisting in their last season's sulk, solved the problem by again shutting off the press for one month. But Coco Chanel has another angle: "Who cares about being copied? You can't keep fashions on ice. To be copied is the best kind of flattery. I want my dresses out in the street as soon as possible!"

Yanks' Looksee

day each in Florence, Venice, Rome. Two days in Madrid and two in London. They'll be back on the farm in two weeks—having spent little more than they would have if they'd gone to Florida or Atlantic City.

The travel boys and the tour agents snap, "What's wrong with hopping around, seeing many places? It brings more tourists over, doesn't it?"

"Sure," say the hotelmen, "But it brings less cash to each of us individually. We need more rooms at the height of the season to accommodate more clients. But at adding-up time we have less left. Constant turnover is a problem; it means more work, more help, more bookkeeping—and less profit."

The restaurants, too, are beefing—for the same reasons. The lads and lassies who are interested in a quick look and scram haven't time to relax and eat in style, as the oldtime tourists used to do. At least that's what they claim.

As for the manufacturers of souvenirs and trinkets—they are happy. You can buy the same junk jewelry and gadgets in the shops and booths of Long Beach, Calif. or Santa Margharita, Italy. And now both places are selling more of it.

The Hotelmen's Association in Paris says that Paris hotels today have a 70% annual occupancy. London is closer to 80%. In both cities there is constant talk about the need of more large hotels—but in both cities, the hotelmen say that if run-as-you-pay tourism continues at its present pace, they can't possibly build, they'll be going bankrupt too soon. Or raising their rates. And an American in Paris, listening in, sneered, "Raise the rates in Paris even more? How is that possible?"

HOT FROM HOLLYWOOD!

EYE-WITNESS REPORT FROM THE M-G-M AD MAN!

HOT! "HIGH SOCIETY"!

I was there when the World Premiere engagement of Sol C. Siegel's production starring Bing Crosby, Grace Kelly, Frank Sinatra and Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong, started the nationwide box-office fireworks now blazing across the nation. At press time, biggest first 4 days of all time at Music Hall, N. Y. Every new opening sensational! Every continued engagement a wow!

HOT! "TEA AND SYMPATHY"!

I was there in Projection Room "A" for the special public-relations screening that confirmed trade forecasts of a box-office blockbuster. The stage hit, with its original stars Deborah Kerr and John Kerr, is now a mighty screen attraction. Big campaign in magazines, newspapers, radio, TV—the works!

HOT! "RAINTREE COUNTY"!

I was there on Stage 16 when they showed seven amazing reels of this great production starring Montgomery Clift, Elizabeth Taylor and Eva Marie Saint. Filmed in M-G-M's new and revolutionary Camera 65 process, with the top budget in the studio's domestic production history, it will rank among the most important films in screen annals. The scope of the book's Civil War background endows it with the nostalgic bigness of "Gone With The Wind."

HOT! "THE OPPOSITE SEX"!

I was there at the Picwood Theatre when this star-studded entertainment rocked a packed and enthusiastic house at a sneak preview. From the first man-trap to the last hair-pull they roared at this "low-down on dames—with music." The dames: June Allyson, Joan Collins, Dolores Gray, Ann Sheridan, Ann Miller. The guys: Leslie Nielsen, Jeff Richards. It's a top money show.

HOT! "THE POWER AND THE PRIZE"!

I was there at the Encino Theatre when this exciting picture launched the first really great new box-office name, Elisabeth Mueller. A Continental star, beautiful, exciting, she is destined to join the Garbos and Bergmans in the screen Hall of Fame. Co-starred with Robert Taylor, Burl Ives, Charles Coburn, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Mary Astor and Nicola Michaels.

HOT! "JULIE"!

I was there in Projection Room 1 for the first breath-taking Studio showing of this Arwin Production which takes its place among the industry's triumphs of SUSPENSE! Doris Day, Louis Jourdan, Barry Sullivan and Frank Lovejoy keep you in a state of delirious tension from Main Title to the nail-biting End as Julie flees from a honeymoon of terror.

HOT! "THE WINGS OF EAGLES"!

I was there to see a future Big One take off into production starring John Wayne in a box-office-perfect role, with John Ford directing a sure-fire and spectacular story.

HOT! "DESIGNING WOMAN"!

I was there to hear the magnitude of this big-time show as it was being readied for production with Gregory Peck and Lauren Bacall starring. It will be made here and abroad, with no holds and no expenses barred.

HOT! "SOMETHING OF VALUE"!

I was there to see the first pulsating footage flown in from East Africa where Rock Hudson, Dana Wynter and Wendy Hiller are starring in this King-size picturization of the explosive best-seller.

HOT! PRODUCTION IN HIGH!

I was there to see the blue-print of accelerated activity spring to life, following the Studio announcement of twelve M-G-M pictures, an average of three a month, scheduled for production during a period of sixteen weeks.

Italy Limiting 'Foreign' Films Sales-Serviced by Yank Firms

Italian Goverment has made it plain to the American distributors that it intends to restrict the number of "forcign" films each of the U. S. releasing organizations can handle in Italy. Plan is to keep the number of such pictures on the American release roster to 15% of the total handled by each company.

Purpose is to prevent a glutting of the local market. Move isn't a part of the new film agreement, but the Government has made it plain that, unless the Americans comply, a regulation will be forthcoming.

Meanwhile, while somewhat apprehensive over future Italian moves, the American companies have found a boon in the new pact which raises the dubbing fee from 2,500,000 lira (about $4,000) to 5,500,000 lira (close to $9,000). The same agreement, however, authorizes the Americans to remit an equivalent sum from blocked funds, each time the dubbing fee is paid. That fee, incidentally, is in the nature of a loan and is paid against a 10 year, non-interest bearing certificate.

Since the Americans import over 200 films a year into Italy, this means that they are entitled to remit from their blocked earnings around $2,000,000 instead of the former $800,000. It's conceded that this represents a pretty good deal for the American interests, even if the certificates are discounted or redeemed at much less than their actual value.

The remittance from blocked earnings is at the official 630 lira to the dollar rate. That's the same rate that is applied to the regular $3,000,000 a year remittance and to the 5% which each company is allowed to remit from frozen funds at the end of each year.

In addition, the Motion Picture Export Assn. has a longstanding compensation arrangement with the Finmeccanica and Poggia shipping outfits. Many millions have been thawed under that deal. Considering that the U. S. outfits must also have lira to cover their withdrawals and the dubbing fee expenses—plus local expenses—it's felt that the agreement will leave comparatively minor funds blocked in Italy.

Eitel Monaco, the chief of ANICA, the Italo trade org, is due in the U. S. from Rome soon for the double purpose of attending the "War and Peace" preem as a guest of the Italian producer, and also to huddle with the MPEA's Eric Johnston on outstanding questions.

Among other things, Monaco intends to take up the question of color printing in Italy (the Italians want the Americans to print 50% of their local color releases in Italian labs), and he'll talk about the restrictions applying to American distribs handling non-U.S. product.

Total U.S. quota for Italy now stands at 192 feature pix for eight MPEA members, plus an additional 35 for United Artists and Allied Artists. There is nothing, however, to stop an American company from taking on non-American films for distribution. The government wishes to limit this excess product to 15% of each company's release sked.

Ad Films

ago. He attributed the increase to the drive-ins.

Study prepared by the Albert Sindlinger research outfit for Assn. of Theatre Screen Advertising Companies and covering the week ended July 28 showed that 55,946,000 persons were exposed to ad plugs in that period. Ozoners accounted for more than 50% of the total.

Motion Picture Advertising Service Co. ships all its prints out of New Orleans where its also maintains busy studios. It covers the esatern half of the nation, with its subsid-United Film Service, covering the western half out of Kansas City. Other ad film distribs in the field include A. V. Cauger Service out of Independence, Mo.; Alexander Film Co., Colorado Springs; Reid H. Ray Film Industries, St. Paul, Minnesota, and Ad Films Ltd., Toronto, Canada.

MRS. GOLDBERG SETS TED EMERSON AS G. M.

Omaha, Aug. 14.

Ted Emerson, vet Omaha theatre man, Saturday (11) was named general manager of the Ralph D. Goldberg theatre chain here, succeeding Jack Springer. Latter resigned to accept a new position in Chicago.

Emerson had been with Tri-States the past 20 years here, doing special assignments the past two after managing the Omaha Theatre.

Two other changes in the Goldberg org were revealed, with Patrick McBride assuming management of the Ames Theatre and Keith W. Chambers the Military Theatre. Both are nabe houses.

Other theatres in the Goldberg chain and their pilots are the State. Harry B. Ashton; Avenue, William Kirby; Dundee, Ben Magzamin; Town, Charles Kopp; and Broadway, G. Allan Schrimpf.

Changes were announced by Mrs. Goldberg, following the death of her husband two weeks ago.

As U.S.-Italian Pact Shapes Up

Following protracted uncertainty, the Italian government and the Motion Picture Export Assn. have finally welded a new agreement spelling out in detail the terms under which American films will continue to play the boot country. New pact, which runs for three years effective Sept. 1, awaits only signaturing by Eitel Monaco, head of ANICA, which is Italy's top trade association, and/or Under-Secretary of State Brusasca, both of whom are now en route to the States from Rome.

Actually, Monaco wears two hats, being, in effect, on the government level as well as functioning as Italy's top film trade figure. Thus, whether he or Brusasca, or both will do the actual signing with the MPEA is neither clear nor important.

As had been anticipated, the new deal raises the dubbing-in-Italy license fees for American films to the equivalent of about $8,000 per picture. Previously, it was slightly less than half that amount.

But the quota on the number of films which are permitted entry in Italy apparently remains about the same, amounting to 190 features from the major companies and 30 to 35 from independent producers.

MISSOURI-ILLINOIS EXHIBITORS MEETING

St. Louis, Aug. 14.

Discussion between exhibs towards a solution of their ills and the full co-op with distribs, producers, etc., will be stressed at the annual meeting of the Missouri-Illinois Theatre Owners here Aug. 27-28. L. J. Williams, Union, Mo., prexy of the organization and other execs have asserted that a policy of "All for One and One for All" will be the panacea that will relieve the exhibs of their headaches.

Among speakers skedded for gabbing are Mrs. Arretus F. Burt, St. Louis, founder of the Better Films Council of Greater St. Louis, and Claude Mundo, an exec of the Theatre Owners of America. Of additional interest to the shindig is the selection of Miss Film Row for 1956 with an all expense vacation trip to Florida, possession of a tiara and time off with pay from her employer.

Bob O'Donnell Pioneer of Year

Robert J. (Bob) O'Donnell, veteran exhibitor and one of the most active figures in trade projects, this week was named 1956 Pioneer of the Year. Exec is v.p. and general manager of Interstate Theatres, Dallas; International ringmaster of Variety Clubs and board chairman of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, Saranac Lake, N. Y. He was chairman of the industry drive against the Federal admissions tax which recently resulted in the exemption on tickets costing 90c and under.

Motion Picture Pioneer, headed by Jack Cohn, will salute O'Donnell as the 10th recipient of its annual award at a Nov. 30 dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

Previously selected as the industry's outstanding citizen were Cecil B. DeMille, Adolph Zukor, Harry, Jack and Maj. Albert Warner (jointly), Spyros P. Skouras, Barney Balaban, Gus Eyssell, Nate J. Blumberg, S. H. (Si) Fabian and Herman Robbins.

Praise From Senator

Council of Motion Picture Organizations did a "wonderful job" in pressing for and winning the Federal tax exemption on tickets costing 90c and under, in the opinion of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnestoa, chairman of the Subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee.

"You and your organization (referring to COMPO) are to be congratulated," Humphrey stated in a letter to Robert J. O'Donnell, chairman of COMPO's tax campaign. Earlier this summer Humphrey's Senatorial unit conducted hearings on film trade practices and recommended removal of the admissions levy.

Clenched Fists Across The Seas

Filipinos Rude to Yank Films — Burma, Germany, Italy and Argentine All Troublesome

Foreign market situation, long the bright spot in the film industry, has suddenly worsened with dark clouds looming in various parts of the globe.

Latest problem country is the Philippines, normally an excellent market for Hollywood features, which is "throwing the book" at the Americans, with threats for the imposition of a quota, special import duties, back taxes, tightened censorship and new labor demands.

Elsewhere, Burma wants to impose a quota, the Germans are clamoring for a limitation of Hollywood imports, Italy is figured a potential trouble spot and the situation in Argentina has suddenly worsened. Apart from that, the Motion Picture Export Assn. maintains its boycott of Spain and Denmark, with no solution in sight.

Company execs are greatly concerned over the situation in Britain where attendance and grosses have fallen off sharply and continue to drop under the impact of commercial tv.

At the MPEA exec committee meeting in N. Y. last week, president Eric Johnston warned of a rough course ahead. At the same time, it's understood that the companies' foreign billings since the first of this year have continued on a par with 1955, and—with the exception of the important British market—are ahead of last year in many cases.

Threatened Philippine restrictions are the most severe the MPEA has faced in a long time. Among them is a demand that remittances be slashed to 25% of the N. Y. share, which works out to 17½% of gross billings. In the past, U. S. companies could remit up to a ceiling of 72% of the N. Y. share of 1949, which was a good year, if not a top one.

Philippine government, plagued with deteriorating economic conditons, also threatens with back taxes which, if collected, would put the American distribs out of the market. MPEA companies last year did an estimated gross of 14,000,000 pesos (about $4,600,000) in the Philippines.

There have been tentative discussions of a possible American film loan to the Philippines along the lines of the loan Hollywood gave to the Japanese. However, it's considered highly unlikely that this will come to pass.

A JOB WELL DONE

By ABEL GREEN

In these sensitive picture business times, the terrific job done by COMPO, Bob O'Donnell, Bob Coyne, Sam Pinanski, et al. is another manifestation in the half-century history of the industry of the good results from coordinated teamwork. The 10% tax exemption up to 90c. admission may well prove a lifesaver to thousands upon thousands of theatres and spell the difference between profit and loss to virtually the entire exhibition branch. If the theatres stay in the black, the chain-reaction values to production and distribution are obvious.

The luncheon tomorrow (Thurs.) by the Independent Theatre Owners Assn. of New York to Messrs. Coyne and O'Donnell is but one of a series of victory celebrations, and rightly so. O'Donnell, Pinanski, Eric Johnston, Joe Vogel—any and all others who were so vitally concerned in the 10% admish tax cut campaign—are particularly generous in their cheering of the tough job that Bob Coyne, of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations did. The victory luncheons and dinners and bouquets will automatically fall in line, and should rightly take shape in the manner that they will, with posies to both Bobs—O'Donnell as chairman and Coyne as the executive sparkplug (and indirectly to Charles E. McCarthy for the important desk work in N. Y.)—but more importantly, trade-wise is the realization that concerted industry thinking can help solve basic problems.

The trade has plenty now. Fundamentally it's boxoffice, or more specifically the sufficient lack thereof. Whatever the end-result—keep the production-line flowing, make blockbusters, don't make only blockbusters but turn out more bread and butter product, etc.—the problems can be resolved with some judicious coordination.

Fighting intra-trade problem is always easier than bucking Governmental edicts. Or maybe it's not as pat as that. Maybe the giants of the industry whose shadow has long been so potent in everything, might unbend and even defer to aggressive younger energies. That's for the immediate future to decide, because there is no time for stalling. Not the way the business is going.

But back to the 10% tax thing. Shrewd generalship combined to achieve the excellent end-result in face of (a) a Governmental cut that this "was the wrong time to try it" and (b) internecine exhibitor battling (Allied's withdrawal, etc.). None the less the exhibitors approached the Washington hurdle from the grassroots basis, combined with Pinanski's knowledge (John Hancock Insurance Co.) that the budget stood a chance of being balanced this year. That was the fundamental hurdle—that, based on 1955 picture theatre returns, between $65,000,000 and $80,000,000 in taxes had been collected on tickets up to 90c. According to data updated this past week, the easeup on Federal levying will mean a yearly saving of $51,800,000 to the trade, $35,400,000 of which will remain with theatres and the balance going to exhibition. COMPO's first tax win in 1954 brought an increase of $123,500,000 in industry income, for a combined total of $175,300,000.

Coyne, O'Donnell, Vogel, Pinanski and Johnston argued that 97% of America's cinemas are under that 90c. admission—there are only about 350-400 theatres which have scales at all times exceeding $1—and that that was the life-blood differential to these many picture theatres. Secondly, when Roger Babson forecast that the fiscal budget would be balanced this year, they were successful in getting a more sympathetic ear in D. C. which combined with the grassroots campaign via their local representative, paid off. Actually the budget, under Ike was $1,800,000,000 over the top.

Let this be a cue to the picture business on all fronts—from Hollywood to distribution to exhibition—that good teamwork can pay off.

Seagram in 7 Reels

"The First 99," a documentary produced by Louis deRochemont Associates for the House of Seagram on its 100th anniversary, is a full-length, 7-reel 35m industrial feature in Eastmancolor which cost the Canadian distiller almost $500,000. It comprises newsreel, live-action, cartoon and general welding of historic footage into a cavalcade of the liquor business, from London to Canada where Seagram is based.

Morton Wishengrad authored. Robert McCahon (who produced the Field & Stream sports series) produced, and Tom Orchard represented deRochemont. Frowde Seagram, grandson of the founder, is still on the Seagram board, of which Samuel Bronfman is board chairman and chief executive officer. Present-day Seagram concerns himself chiefly today with Dominion Life Ins. Co., of which he is president.

Seagram's sells one-third of the whiskey in the U.S., and the film, to be shown to captive audiences of dealers, salesmen and other tradesman, along with a hoped-for theatrical segment, concerns itself with the social aspects of drinking.

Warner Moving

ing, on 44th St. between 8th and 9th Avenues, will be put up for sale. Building, a sprawling 10-story unit, has been something of a problem for Warners since Stanley Warner, the theatre offshoot of WB, moved out to its own headquarters on Broadway. Film company has been making a determined effort to rent out space to outside companies. It has leased whole floors to the Army Motion Picture Service and to an instrument manufacturing company.

The trend to New York's eastside was started several years ago with Universal's move to Park Ave. Columbia takes the eastward trek this fall, moving into a completely refurbished building on Fifth Ave. in the 50's.

'War & Peace' Regular Scale At N.Y. Capitol

New York's Capitol Theatre is holding the line on admission prices for the run of "War and Peace," perhaps establishing a precedent that might be followed around the country. That the Cap would tilt the scales had been expected in view of the king-sized production, which runs three and a half hours. But instead the scale will continue at $1 to $2.50, the latter for the limited divan section. Pic runs sans intermission.

Par reportedly is agreeable to the un-hiked tariff on the theory that this automatically will avert any possible public resentment and will assure a longer run. While large situations across the nation might stay with their regular prices, chances are theatres now posting low rates may go for a boost because of the lesser turnover to be caused by the "W & P" running time.

Par, incidentally, is spending about $75,000 for promotion of the film's Cap opening Aug. 21. This is high but not exceptionally so, for it includes extra charges entailed in staging the benefit preem for the Tolstoy Foundation.

National ad-pub budget for the ad-pub buildup has yet to be determined.

Cohan Succeeds Malisow

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.

After 13 years with 20th-Fox, Saul Malisow has resigned as branch manager.

He's being succeeded by Jack Cohan, a former 20th-Fox branch manager and salesman here whom Malisow replaced when Cohan quit to enter another business line. Cohan is being brought in from the Kansas City branch where he was sales manager.

Malisow's future plans are unsettled.

ALLIED QUEST FOR EFFECTIVE LEVERAGE; MAY 'DOGHOUSE' ONE SALES MANAGER

"Surprised" and somewhat shaken by the report of the Senate Small Business Subcommittee probing industry trade practices, Allied States Assn. now—in second wind—regards the result "as only a temporary setback in Allied's fight for better conditions for independent exhibitors."

Leaders of the exhibitor association met yesterday (Tues.) and today (Wed.) in Louisville to map future strategy in light of the committee's report which is generally regarded in trade circles as an important victory for the major film companies.

Failure to achieve its aims via government intervention may force Allied to resort to other means in its effort to alleviate the alleged malpractices of the distributors. Some of Allied's less temporate members may again urge unofficial boycotts of one or more of the major companies. Another technique that has been urged by one Allied leader may also be considered. This involves the "knocking off" of one sales manager. The expression as employed by the Alliedite, refers to a concentrated drive among Allied members to make life so difficult for a sales manager that he'll either resign or be fired. This can be accomplished, it's said, by the simple expedient of refusing to book the pictures of one company selected for the dubious honor.

Roundtable Plea

Via prexy Rube Shor, Allied has renewed efforts for a meeting between the presidents of the film companies and the heads of the principal exhibitor organizations. The proposal, as the previous one, is not expected to be accepted by the film company toppers who have on several occasions made known their opposition to an all-industry meeting at which trade practices are discussed among rivals. However, it's expected, that each company again will state that it is willing, acting on an individual basis, to meet with theatremen to discuss industry problems. Shor made his proposal for a roundtable industry meeting in a letter sent to the company presidents and the general sales managers.

Shor said his pitch is based on the Senate committee's observation that "there is a vital need for a new spirit of cooperation between the various segments of the industry."

Shor suggested a small meeting of those in "ultimate authority" in their companies and organizations. Such a meeting, he said, would discuss ways and means and perhaps agree on principles for giving effect to the committee's recommendations.

Takes Time

In a separate statement, Shor, in referring to the temporary setback, noted that it took a long time to bring an end to compulsory block booking and to accomplish theatre divorcement. "Those things take time," he declared.

He said, however, that if the film companies carry out the recommendations of the committee "the effort (Allied's) can be written off as a total success. Allied is more concerned with the end that with the means and the committee has pointed out a direct and immediate solution of industry problems." He said the film companies' response to Allied's proposal for a round-table meeting "will be watched with interest by all concerned with the industry's welfare."

The Senate committee after weighing 760 pages of testimony, statements and affidavits of exhibitors and distributors issued a 64-page report. It recommended an arbitration system without the arbitration of film rentals, government loans to theatres via the Small Business Administration, a broadening of the definition of "clearance," restrictions on use of competitive bidding, that sufficient notice be given by the Dept. of Justice to exhibitors when a divorced chain seeks to acquire additional theatres, that pictures in new large-screen processes also be made available in standard size prints, that the industry study the effect of saturation bookings. The committee also disapproved proposal of TOA and Allied that divorced circuits be permitted to enter production, looked with disfavor at Federal regulation of film rentals, and urged a new spirit of cooperation between the various segments of the film industry.

I take this occasion to express my gratitude for the continuing confidence placed in me by my customers and friends in show business.

Only Quality Counts

Des Moines, Aug. 14.

Tri-States Theatre Corp. theatre and the Orpheum here reduced the child's admission price age bracket from 13 to 11 years a couple of weeks ago. When asked whether or not it had made for increased business the reply was that nothing makes for increased business in the film theatre today except really good pictures.

Because of television the public has become so entertainment-conscious that a truly good picture can still do capacity business any day but the public won't go for mediocre fare even if it were for free.

Curb Those Crazy Bargain Nights Of the Drive-Ins

Philadelphia, Aug. 14.

Drive-in operators of area have agreed to discontinue policy of showing three features. The ozoner ops have also decided to limit their dollar-per-carload admissions to one or two nights a week and never on week-ends.

Meeting was held in office of Jay Emanuel, trade journalist, who has been inveighing against the drive-ins "wild" giveaways as a threat to entire industry.

Pact is to hold until Oct. 15, with another meeting set for Oct. 1. Outdoor exhibs present included Earle Sweigert, Martin Ellis, Neil Heilman, Alan Iselin, Mel Fox, Charles Goldfine, David R. Sablosky, Walter Reade, Roco Palese, Claude Schlanger and Stan Friedman.

TECHNICOLOR BUYS PAVELLE OF NEW YORK

Part of its general diversification program, Technicolor has purchased the asse's and business of Pavelle Color Inc., a New York firm and the leading independent processor of amateur color film.

Technicolor prexy Herbert T. Kalmus, explains that the acquisition of Pavelle will make it possible to offer national distribution of Techni service to the consumer photographic market via the plants in Hollywood and New York. At the start, Techni offered such service only in the western U. S.

Plans are now under way to install 8m and 16m Kodachrome processing equipment in Hollywood by early next year.

POPULAR ARTS AND PIONEERING 'CRITICS'

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

"Every Schoolmarm a Critic" (VARIETY, Aug. 8, 1956) was an excellent analysis of the new look teachers are taking at the popular arts. For the benefit of the social historians who will undoubtedly be digging in your files for the full story of popular entertainment in America, however, I would like to add two points.

First is giving credit where credit is due to the pioneers of the "new look": Perhaps a decade ago, two New Jersey English teachers, Dr. Leon Hood and Morris Goldberger, started a newsletter informing teachers of the programs with most educational potential. Two years ago "Scholastic Teacher," a weekly professional magazine with a circulation of 90,000, began to print a schedule in each issue. I was also able to begin in the same magazine this year a series on drama and documentary. In all fairness, then, Messrs. Hood and Goldberger are the pioneers and Scholastic magazines have taken the initiative in publishing detailed criticism of the popular arts. I was just lucky enough to get a fellowship that made it possible for me to extend and apply what had already been started.

Secondly, we English teachers are just beginning to do in a thoroughgoing way what our colleagues in the elementary schools and in history have been doing for sometime. Actually the popular arts have something to say to every teacher.

I was delighted to see your story for a final reason: It will show people in the industry that we teachers can transcend the level of carping by helping producers build audiences. In the last analysis, we can only develop a tradition of criticism of popular culture in the schools if we have the sympathetic cooperation of the industry. I am sure your story will help elicit that kind of cooperation.

LOPERT'S 'SUMMERTIME'

11½ Times Better at O'Seas B.O. Than Domestically

"Summertime," which he made independently and released through United Artists, will gross over $4,000,000 worldwide, but will earn one-and-a-half times more abroad than in the U. S., Ilya Lopert said in N. Y. last week.

Its domestic take will be 1,700,000 and it has played 6,000 dates so far. Negative cost of the Katharine Hepburn starrer was put at $1,000,000 by Lopert. He acknowledged that the pic had been disappointing in the U. S. where it has 2,000 more dates to play off.

San Francisco Downgrades Realty Valuations on Two Troubled Houses

San Francisco, Aug. 14.

Plea of hard times has resulted in cuts in valuation of two neighborhood theatres here, may be indicative that further tax relief appeals from neighborhood house owners are in the offing.

Frisco Board of Supervisors, doubling as Board of Equalization to hear pleas on property assessments, agreed $125,000 valuation on Grace and Samuel Grim's 2,570-seat El Captain Theatre was too high, cut figure to $105,000. Fox West Coast last month refused to renew its lease on El Capitan, which it had operated since before World War II, and Grims have subsequently tried, unsuccessfully, to lease building as either a supermarket or bowling alley.

Supervisors also sliced valuation on R. J. Nasser's American Theatre from $14,000 to $9,000 after Nasser told board he may be forced to close.

Nasser said television had kept his house shut four years. He reopened it last year but claimed size of crowds has not been impressive. "I don't think it will last," he added.

Property valuation furnish base for tax assessments.

Has a Celebrity No Privacy?

Santa Monica, Aug. 14.

A public figure gives up all claim to privacy for his entire lifetime, Superior Court Judge Stanley Mosk decided in throwing out the $1,500,000 invasion of privacy suit brought by Primo Carnera against Columbia Pictures. Former heavyweight boxing champ had sued, in Santa Monica Superior Court, alleging that the Columbia film, "The Harder They Fall," held him up to contempt and ridicule, invaded his privacy and hurt his business life.

"One who becomes a celebrity or public figure," Judge Mosk ruled, "waives his right of privacy and cannot change that waiver at his whim."

Push Senate Suggestion Theatres Be Eligible for Federal Financing

Theatre Owners of America and the Independent Theatre Owners Assn. were quick to accept the recent recommendation of the Senate Small Business Subcommittee that the Loan Policy Board of the Small Business Administration consider the possibility of making loans available for theatre improvements and immediately set in motion efforts to bring the committee's recommendation into actuality.

TOA prexy Myron Blank has appointed A. Julian Brylawski, TOA v.p. and chairman of the national legislative committee, as chairman of a special committee to prepare a brief for submission to the Small Business Administration uring adoption of the Senate group's recommendation. "In light of the recent SSBS report," Blank stated, "it is the desire of our organization to take full advantage of the prospective government help and financing which has been so difficult for the small theatre owners and individual operators to obtain."

Harry Brandt, prexy of ITOA, dispatched a letter to the Loan Policy Board consisting of Small Business Administrator Wendell Barnes, Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey, and Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks urging amending of the rules which would make theatres eligible for government loans. The SBA has been granted the authority by Congress to extend financial assistance to small business in cases where the required credit was not available on reasonable terms from other sources. At present, the SBA rules forbid loans "to finance recreational or amusement facilities."

Basis of the SSBC recommendation for the inclusion of theatres in government loans is that theatres have not been considered good financial risks by banks, insurance companies and other lending institions. The b.o. decline in recent years as well as the many fluctuations and changing industry conditions has made lending groups wary of theatres. Small theatre owners in particular have been finding it increasingly difficult to obtain loans to refurbish houses and to purchase new equipment.

In making the recommendation to the Small Business Administration, the Senate subcommittee stated that "without financial aid to make these needed improvements which the public demands, many exhibitors will have to close."

Exhibitor circles also feel that the Senate body's recommendation may carry some weight among private lending companies which, it's hoped, will reconsider re-financing and mortgage plans for theatres. TOA's Brylawski, it's anticipated, will have his report ready for presentation to the TOA annual convention when it convenes in New York Sept. 20-24.

BLACKLISTEES LOSE

California High Court Declines To Hear Appeals

San Francisco, Aug. 14.

California State Supreme Court has refused to hear appeals of 23 Hollywood actors and writers whose $57,500,000 blacklist suits against major film producers have been thrown out of lower courts. Litigation originally was dismissed in Los Angeles Superior Court and the dismissal upheld by the State district court of appeals.

Hollywoodites had contended they were blacklisted for refusing to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee's probe of Communist infiltration into the film industry. Superior Court, in dismissing the 23 individual suits for $2,500,000 each, said there was no evidence of contractual relationship between the defendants and the plaintiffs.

Test Free Films, Local Merchants Paying Costs

St. Louis, Aug. 14.

After Leroy McMahon shuttered his Gran, Granville, Ill., because of lagging b.o. activity, businessmen in the town discovered their receipts were falling off as natives were going elsewhere for their amusement and shopping at these places. Several weeks ago the biz biggies held a confab and agreed to underwrite 15 weeks of cuffo films as a means of stimulating trade in the home town.

The innovation has reacted nicely and McMahon added the interest will enable him to operate the house on a profitable basis.

METRO SUGARING UP 'TEA AND SYMPATHY'

Metro has earmarked $500,000 for its advertising-exploitation campaign for "Tea and Sympathy." Budget, the largest set aside for a single picture by Metro in several years, will be poured into a saturation ad campaign in magazines, newspapers, and radio-tv.

To take full advantage of the campaign, M-G has set a saturation booking for the picture. It is slated to open in some 250 theatres late in September. The N. Y. date will be at the Radio City Music Hall, with "Tea" following the current "High Society."

LINDER SAYS IT'S HIS

Asserts Kingsley Infringes on 'Chatterley's Lover' Film.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Jack Linder, former stage producer and now a Hollywood agent, has served notice on Kingsley International, indie distrib, that it is violating his copyright in its efforts to distribute "Lady Chatterley's Lover" in the U. S. Distrib currently is embroiled in a battle with the New York censor which has refused to license the film.

Linder, who acquired stage and screen rights to the D. H. Lawrence novel several years ago, pointed out that he had produced a legit version in 1937 and subsequently toured it. Title was copyrighted in 1943.

Bergen Laments Plight of Comics

TV Burns 'Em Up Too Fast; Says He'll Be 'Washed Up in Two Years'

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Television is burning up its comedians at a rapid rate and, with few replacements in sight, there will be less and less comedy on the air waves. Edgar Bergen last week made this observation and prediction that he'd be washed up in two years, at the present pace.

The vet performer, host of CBS-TV "Do You Trust Your Wife?" said comedians who were stars for 25 years have been "washed up in six months." and asked, "Where are you going to get comics to replace them?"

"TV is not the nicest thing that every happened to a performer. I got tired of reading that I was 'too old' for tv and I finally got into it. Also, this particular format only required 12 minutes of material each week, since the contestants are on the rest of the time. I took this show because if it's lousy, you can blame it on the contestants; but when the comedian is out there alone, they blame him. Even though I use comparatively little material each week, I'm prepared to be washed up in two years," said Bergen.

"No comedian should be on tv once a week; he shouldn't be on more than once a month. But I'm violating that rule and will suffer for it sooner or later. But I don't care. The idea of a weekly show is good for the sponsor, but not for the comedian. Networks and agencies owe it to the performers who have sacrificed their careers by serving as guinea pigs in tv to give them work on radio. At least it's bread-and-butter. It's so un-

Snore-Filled Room

The tv networks, which have a $17,000,000 expense tab riding on the current political conventions, did a slow—or maybe it was a fast-burn at last week's New Yorker mag cover.

It depicted a man fast asleep in front of his tv set which was turned in to the convention hoopla.

'Omni' to Explore Gettysburg Battle

The major opus on "Omnibus" in its first ABC-TV season will be an early January presentation, probably based in its entirety on "The Battle of Gettysburg." Delbert Mann has been hired by producer Robert Saudek to direct the "examination" of the battle's competing strategies.

It's understood that the show, which will be almost entirely live, will be one of those large-cast, highly-complicated cueing affairs, a la "Night to Remember" on Kraft. Marginal film will be used for wide-angles of battle scenes, with live cameras segueing into closeups of the same scenes.

It's not the first time for a Saudek-Mann collaboration. The director did the Harvard U. stanza last semester and other "Omnis," including the Hal March-starrer, "Bank of England Forgery."

January program will highlight "Omni's" Americana offerings. Stanza, to show "why the battle ended the way it did," is timed to coincide with the increasing "Civil War-consciousness" since the publication of MacKinlay Kantor's "Andersonville."

GM's $4,000,000 Stake in 'WWW' Heartens Webs

There was something akin to rejoicing at NBC last week when General Motors broke the ice on the current standoffishness of the automotive industry on tv sponsorship. GM came through with a $1,500,000 order for the remaining one-third sponsorship of the network's Sunday afternoon "Wide Wide World" display. As result "WWW" now enjoys an SRO status with upwards of $4,000,000 in corporate GM billings for the 20 alternate-week 90-minute offerings.

Big question now is when, if and how the remaining aloof auto companies will join in the return-to-tv swing. There's little available prime time left and it's the feeling in some quarters that the companies will turn to saturation spot campaigns timed for the major fall-winter push on new models.

Depending on how big these drives are, spot tv billings could be in for an unprecedented windfall, since it's estimated that there is still about $20,000,000 in uncommitted Detroit tv coin.

Was Leo Rosen Fired Or Did He Resign As Gen. Mgr. of WPTR?

Albany, Aug. 14.

Albany dailies gave a play last week to conflicting explanations of Leo Rosen's bowout as general manager of the Schine-owned WPTR.

Rosen, former theatre manager and later a television consultant for Fabian, was quoted as saying, "I did not resign. I was fired." Rosen also claimed he was dropped from the WPTR payroll on the June day he suffered a heart attack.

A Schine spokesman in Gloversville declared, "He was not fired. He submitted his resignation, which was accepted."

Jack Barrett, news editor of WPTR, had issued a brief statement that Rosen resigned "as of last Thursday (2)" and that a successor would be named "in the near future."

A YOUNG MEDIUM GROWS A BEARD

By GEORGE ROSEN

The tv networks' programming roster for the 1956-57 semester, as broken down chart-wise in last week's VARIETY, is singularly revealing from this standpoint — there is a virtual total blackout on anything that can be labelled either imaginative or creative-in-concept.

In pursuing the patterns of the preceding year, the networks, it would seem, are primarily dedicated to a glorification of those shows which, whatever their merit in the realm of qualitative programming, came off best on the Nielsen and Trendex returns.

Thus for a medium still flaunting its "First Decade" banner, the raising of the '56-'57 curtain will show unmistakable signs of bearded formats and program content more suggestive of an age-old industry struggling to stay alive. It's only two short years since the Pat Weaver era of spectacularizing the spectrum upset the hoary patterns which were a carryover from the less- inspired radio days and which gave promise of a permanency in exciting and stimulating video fare. But, either because spec sponsors are hard to come by these days (particularly since the automotive industry, their principal underwriters, have gone into temporary retreat) or because of the time-honored sliderule bugaboo (cost-per-thousand), the spec has already gone into a period of decline.

Yet in the whole roster of programming designed for network showcasing next season, it's only in the area of the big-big-big show that one has to look for even a modicum of enthusiasm. It's the 10-show roster of "Producers' Showcase" with its Sadler's Wells, its Old Vic presentation of "Romeo and Juliet," its John Huston-Anatole Litvek-William Wyler directorial "firsts," its Audrey Hepburn-Mel Ferrer and Lynn Fontanne-Alfred Lunt casting parlays that hold the promissory notes on stimulation and elevating the tastes of the viewer.

Or again the emergence of "Playhouse 90" as a 90-minute dramatic entry on the CBS-TV roster which represents a laudable breaking away from established weekly formula (made even more challenging by its slotting as a back-to-back entry with the hour-long "Climax" series). Or yet again in some of the projected "Omnibus" chapters designed to match last season's "Constitution" series, plus the ambitious "See It Now" assignments.

TVariose Veins

Save for these and a few other notable exceptions, however, the Trendex & Nielsen-consciousness on the part of the networks was never more pronounced. Because CBS-TV's "$64,000 Question" still rules the rating roost, the giant jackpot quizzers will be all over the lot next season, with NBC utilizing them as a major source of attack against the formidable CBS competition. NBC, in fact, has

JOE CATES SIGNS 7-YR. NBC-TV PACT

Joe Cates has been signed to a seven-year deal by NBC under which he'll operate as a producer-director and as a general program development and creative factotum. Cates, who ankled his post at Entertainment Productions Inc. (ex-Louis G. Cowan) as producer-director of the "$64,000 Question-Challenge" brace of shows over the weekend, starts at NBC-TV Sept. 1, with his first assignment that of producer-director for the "High Button Shoes" spec on Nov. 24, a Saturday night venture.

Deal was signed largely on the strength of Cates' showing with "The Bachelor" spec earlier this summer, which he packaged and produced-directed. John Greenhut agented the deal.

There's a Big Ford Motor Plum In Some Television Network's Future

A. C.'s Low Current

Another spec hit the Trendex dust over the weekend, with NBC-TV's "Atlantic City Holiday" going under by a 7:30 to 9 Sunday (12) score of 12.1 to CBS-TV's 19.1 average. Situation was far worse in the 8 to 9 hour, with Phil Silvers (subbing for the recuperating Ed Sullivan) almost doubling the NBC score with a 24.1 average to the spec's 12.5.

ABC as usual ran last, with the average for the hour and a half (comprising a convention preview and an hour-long "Famous Film Festival") at 3.5 but the 8 to 9 hour an improvement at 4.2.

Ford Motor Co. has thrown an unprecedented plum at the three television networks, in effect telling them to write their own competitive ticket for one of the juiciest sponsorship contracts yet to hit the medium. Ford has asked each of the webs to come up with a creative and prestige-type—yet commercial—format which would be used to sell all types of Ford products, not limited to the car lines alone but extending to accessories, motors, etc. The word from Ford is that the "sky's the limit" on budget, provided the format is right.

Auto company hasn't made any specifications to the webs—format could range from a half-hour to 90 minutes, from dramatics to cultural. The only specification other than that it be creative and commercial is that it be ready for this fall, a matter of a couple of months at the outside.

Ford had already broached one such idea to CBS, the "Seven Lively Arts" series patterned after "Omnibus." Now it has gone to NBC and ABC as well, asking them to come up with something. Show would not be used for strictly institutional pitches, as Ford used "Producers' Showcase," but would involve direct and hard-sell commercials.

Kraft TV Budget To Hit $6,000,000 On Super Dramas

"Kraft TV Theatre," which is produced by J. Walter Thompson agency, is upping its budget from $4,000,000 to at least $6,000,000 next season for its 60-minute Wednesday night NBC-TV drama series. Taking its cue from last season's memorable "Night To Remember" drama based on the sinking of the Titanic, the Kraft stanza will shoot for a continuing cycle of superdramas designed to give the Wednesday hour an aura of bigness. (Total production cost on "Night To Remember" came to $150,000.)

Initial entry under the expanded cost-no-object framework will be an original teledrama based on the life of Mickey Mantle. It will be done on Oct. 3, the night of the opening of the World Series, with an origination from whatever National League city wins the pennant. Mantle, of course, will be recruited for the performance.

JWT producers are currently scouting all property availabilities which will fit into the "big concept" of programming. Kraft, which was the first of the major tv drama series, marks its 10th anni on the air next May.

WRCA-TV Tinting Up New Hy Gardner Seg, John McCaffery News

As a keystone in its fall color programming scheme, WRCA-TV, the N. Y. NBC-TV flagship, is slotting New York Herald Tribune columnist Hy Gardner in a new 10-minute strip at 11:20 p.m., leading into the network's "Tonight" show. At the same time, station is converting the John K. M. McCaffrey "11th Hour News" to tint, giving it a complete 11 to 11:30 nightly tint block, since Tex Antoine's weather cast are already in color at 11:10-11:15.

New Gardner show, which is in addition to his Sunday half-hour on the station, will replace the 10-minute local-only Steve Allen segment that segues into "Tonight," reason being the tint conversion. The new Gardner series will have a format that opens with simulated phone call by Gardner to the Trib, giving the paper last-minute column items, then switching to a VIP interview. New show, together with the newscast conversion to tint, preems Sept. 10. There's also the possibility that the Gardner show may be extended to other NBC-TV o&o's.

As to the McCaffrey newscast, idea is to do the live segments in color but with newsfilm in black and white, since newsfilm isn't being shot in color these days. Eventually, station hopes to get at least part of the footage in tint too.

'War & Peace' On NBC Opera Roster

NBC Opera Theatre has firmed up its six offerings for next season, with the lineup highlighted by two premieres, one of them the world premiere of a new work commissioned by the network and the other the American preem of Prokofiev's "War and Peace." The world preem carries the working title of "La Grande Betesche," written by Stanley Hollingsworth on commission from NBC and based on a Balzac story.

All of the operas with the exception of the now-traditional "Amahl and the Night Visitors" will be done for the first time by the NBC Opera and all will be in new English versions. The Gian-Carlo Menotti work, of course, will be carried for the Christmas season, on Dec. 16 and will be in color. At least two others will also be tinted, comprising the first three of the season.

Schedule kicks off Nov. 18 with a new English version of Puccini's "La Boheme." Work has been done in English before, in the Howard Dietz version on "Omnibus," but the NBC Opera presentation will use a new English libretto. Following "Amahl," on Jan. 13, will be "War and Peace," and this will represent only the second presentation of the revised version outside Russia, the first having been at the Florence Festival a couple of years back. Prokofiev, aside from composing the score, co-au-

Sullivan Laying Off A Few More Weeks

Ed Sullivan will be off his Sunday night CBS-TV hour for another three or four weeks. No complications following his auto injury of a couple of weeks ago, but he's described as generally run-down and has been ordered to rest by the medics.

Meanwhile, Sullivan's producer, Marlo Lewis, is busy rounding up replacements. Phil Silvers subbed last Sunday night, but nobody's been set yet for this coming Sunday. Hal March was considered, but was ruled out because he's slated to do a show for Chevrolet in the fall resulting in a conflict with Sullivan's Lincoln-Mercury sponsors. Lewis is talking to William Holden, among others, about replacement stints.

Jean Shepherd Sounds Off About Radio—And Everybody's Listening

By BOB CHANDLER

Is there a mass audience for radio anymore or should the medium tailor itself for highly selective audience groups? The issue, one of increasing importance, was thrown into sharp perspective last week with the bouncing by WOR, N. Y., of Jean Shepherd, the 1 a.m.-to-dawn gabber who's become a literary celebrity because of a hoax inaugurated on his show and who typifies the "selective" personality via a fiercely loyal following running largely in the intellectual bracket.

WOR dropped Shepherd on the basis that he wasn't "commercial." But Shepherd points in turn to the literary hoax started on his show that's turned into the real thing with an initial Ballantine Books (130,000-copy) press run on the "Frederick R. Ewing" (Shepherd and Theodore Sturgeon) novel, "I, Libertine." Last April, Shepherd, who mostly talks on his show on a wide variety of subjects, told his listeners to go out and buy a non-existent book, "I, Libertine," by the non-existent Ewing. Listeners started a run on bookstores and libraries to the point where Ian Ballantine came to Shepherd and asked him to sit down and write the book, which he did in collaboration with Sturgeon. The result has been a world-wide publicity payoff and an initial order of 130,000 copies.

If that's not being commercial, Shepherd states, what is? It's about time, he declares, that the radio industry realized that it's no longer a mass medium and that it must program accordingly. "There's a difference between thinking and belief," says Shepherd (who incidentally is being wooed to return by WOR on the basis of listener protests and who meanwhile is mulling three other offers, one from CBS). "The radio industry operates on belief, not on thought. It believes it's a mass medium with a mass audience, but it's not. People simply don't listen to radio anymore unless it can give them something they can't get anywhere else.

'Teeners Don't Buy Chevys'

"This whole pop music and rock 'n' roll pattern is way off base," he maintains. "The entire industry is programming for the teenager. But the teenager isn't the one who buys the Chevrolet that's being advertised, and anyone who thinks he can sell autos through the teenager is just kidding himself. Sure, the teenager

Gotta Figure 3-Year Longevity for the Best Of Them, Sez Jordan

Wallace Jordan, head of the tv-radio department of William Morris Agency, is attuned to the idea that talent negotiations hereafter might be predicated on a two-or three-year longevity of a star, particularly a comedian, if the history of television's fickleness is any criterion.

After the first-year flush of newfound fame, wherein the public is enthused about the "new," for-free entertainment favorite whom it permits to come into its homes, the second year becomes the challenge to stay up there; and the third year may well prove the beginning of the decline, if not the actual eclipse.

As Jordan surveys the current video screen, and with a potent stable of talent in his own agency, the realization looms that the stars who can make those long-term deals are smart. "But," adds Jordan, "those lifetime deals are a thing of the past now."

In actuality there are any number of household favorites faced with the task of a grim uphill climb back into public favor, and for most of it may only be achieved with a complete reversal or, at the very least, a rewrite of the basic pattern or formula which first brought them to attention.

All of which is another way of saying that the performer is the least to blame—the public is so show-wise, and so hip to new values, that their loyalties are fleeting and ever vacillating.

'Charlie's Aunt' for '90'

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

CBS-TV producer Martin Manulis has acquired the radio-tv rights to the perennial "Charlie's Aunt," by Brandon Thomas.

It will be aired on CBS-TV's "Playhouse 90" this coming season.

NBC-TV Mulling Half-Hour Format 7:30 to 8 Period

NBC-TV is actively exploring the possibilities of programming the weeknight 7:30 to 8 strip with half-hour entries, while pushing back its "News Caravan" to 7:15 p.m. and dropping its music strip, as CBS-TV did last year. The most pressing reason is the current sponsorship status of the music-and-news setup, with what's tantamount to three open quarter-hours a week at a time when sponsors are clamoring at the door to clear time in the rest of the nighttime schedule.

Ostensibly, the "News Caravan," with Chet Huntley as the new commentator vice John Cameron Swayze, is SRO for the fall, with National Carbon pencilled in to replace R. J. Reynolds as the Monday-Thursday sponsor. There's a joker, however; National Carbon is only in for four weeks—after Nov. 1, the two nights open up again. This, combined with the one (Monday) open music quarter-hour, means that NBC's got its 7:30-8 problems, and this is highlighted by the very fact that the web would sell a multi-million dollar proposition like the newscasts on a four-weeks-only basis.

Militating against such a move to 7:15, however, are several factors, the key to which is the fact that the show would no longer be in network option time but would fall into station time. This poses a number of questions, not the least of which is the matter of station clearance. There's no doubt that NBC would lose some stations, though it's not predictable how many, and this might well affect any sponsor pitches. For another thing, NBC has its longrange consideration the matter of whether it is justified in not providing a national news service within option hours, and is reluctant to change on the basis it might not be fulfilling its proper functions and services to stations.

Final factor is the time considerations involved with delayed broadcasts. It's pointed out that in Milwaukee, for example, the current 7:45-8 "News Caravan" is aired at 5:45, and a half-hour earlier would stand little chance of getting the male portion of the family. Even if tape gets to the point of perfection where NBC could feed newsfilm by tape to stations for use on local newscasts, it's not in effect providing the kind of national coverage it feels it must.

LUX'S $6,500,000 'TV THEATRE' TAB

Lever Bros. has formally signed its renewal with NBC-TV for the Thursday night "Lux Video Theatre" series, which comes as no surprise. But the coin for time and program is at a new high—$6,500,000 for the 52 weeks.

Renewal was set via J. Walter Thompson, which will continue to originate the stanza from the Coast..

CBS-TV Ups Winkler

CBS-TV upped E. Carlton Winkler to the post of director of production operations under operations v.p. Edward L. Saxe last week, and named Robert Milford to replace Winkler as production manager of the program department. Winkler held the latter post since March of 1953.

WINS' Major Bid As Sports Station

Indie WINS is out to become radio's topdog in sports in the N. Y. metropolitan area. A large sports schedule for fall, which the station is still negotiating, will soften slightly the music policy developed under the old manager, Bob Leder. He moved over to WOR, the Mutual key, recently.

A rival indie, WMGM was the big gun in radio sports coverage until the end of the 1954-'55 season. Last season, WINS had the Ranger hockey sked from Madison Square Garden plus a few Knick pro basketball games, and it's continuing through the summer with its regular Yankee baseball. Going places in sports, WINS will carry the entire Knick lineup of 72 games this season, plus 12 regular season and six exhibition games by the football Giants, for a greatly extended athletic setup.

Jock Fernhead, new manager of the station, also pacted for the Navy football games in the fall.

To strengthen the station's sports stature, Marty Glickman is being brought over to WINS for the first time, to regularly co-announce the Giant football frays on Sundays. Les Keiter, WINS sports chief, will also be in on Giant play-by-play. Keiter and WINS ayem deejay, Pat Hurley, will cogab the Knick games, it's understood.

FAULK WINS ROUND IN SUIT VS. AWARE

First round in the legal battle between WCBS (N.Y.) gabber John Henry Faulk and AWARE, INC., anti-Communist organization, went to Faulk. Last week, a Supreme Court Justice threw out AWARE's challenge to the libel suit.

Justice Saul S. Streit ruled that when AWARE, in its publication, listed Faulk's "various types of participation in activities sponsored by Communist front organizations," it might be construed that the plaintiff was either a Red or that he had cooperated in Communist activities. Faulk brought suit against the organization, alleging that as a result of their coupling him with pinko groups he lost many radio sponsorships.

The judge, in an eight-page opinion, is said to have ruled that defendants had no right to suggest an individual was pro-Commie unless they could show their facts to be true. Throwing out the AWARE appeal, Streit gave the defendants 20 days to file an amended answer.

DuP's 'Caravan' Option

Du Pont has taken an option on sponsorship of the NBC-TV "News Caravan" for after Nov. 1. Option, terminating at the end of this week, would be for either one or two nights' sponsorship weekly. The Monday and Thursday segments of the show open up after Nov. 1, when National Carbon's sponsorship ends.

TV Makes the News

Broadcasting as a news making vehicle, now hitting the jackpot with the political conventions, has made the newspaper phrase "told a nationwide television audience" almost as familiar to the American public as the dateline appearing with the stories.

When a politico makes the headlines Monday morning . . . the discerning reader like the movie fan of Westerns finds that the politico "went that-a-way" on one of the many tv panel shows the previous day. Upsetting this Sunday-on-tv-Monday-in-the newspapers pattern somewhat is NBC's Martha Rountree "Press Conference," telecast Wednesday night.

Here are a number of examples from Monday's (13) newspapers:

Senator Hubert Humphrey, D., Minn., pushing his campaign for the vice-presidential nomination, appeared on CBS' "Face the Nation," and asked patience on the Southern bias problem.

F. Joseph Donohue, campaign manager for Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, appearing on ABC's "College Press Conference," cited the support of the South for the vice-presidential nomination for Kefauver.

Probably no previous convention has had as many question and answer tv news shows to brief the American public with the issues . . . and to create as much news copy . . . as the current Windy City conclave and the upcoming Republican one in San Francisco.

Additional newspaper clips bear this out:

Gov. Albert B. Chandler, Ky., on a recent "Youth Wants To Know" show, NBC-TV, Sundays, cited the need for a "vigorous, active" President.

Roy Wilkins, exec secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People" on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program called on both parties to implement the Supreme Court decision on integration.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy on Mutual's "Reporters Roundup," which also is filmed for syndication, saw no reason to dump Nixon.

Other news clips gathered the past two weeks on broadcasting's news making role deal with on-the-spot press conferences such as that of the departure Aug. 5 from Washington of Paul M. Butler, the Dem's national chairman. His televised forecast of Democratic unity on the civil rights platform made the lead story in the New York Times the following day

Additional consistent headline makers include: "American Forum," NBC-TV; and occasionally Mutual's "State of the Nation."

Anyone for Cyanide?

NARTB Seal Rings Down on Incestuous Faux Pas In Movie Unreeling

Huntington, W. Va., Aug. 14.

Strong men wept and hari-kari knives gleamed in the moonlight the other night at WSAZ-TV in Huntington, W. Va. A regular late program called "Movie Museum" was in progress, and on this particular night an old silent fugitive from the cutting room floor was being shown.

The meller-drammer begins with the old father-deserts-mother and child bit, and mother's clutch is beginning to slip. Desperate, she lays her baby beside a convenient haystack and dashes off the set for help. Enter farmer Brown, the breadwinner for an apparently fruitless union, who spies the kid and takes it home with him. It seems he and the Missus want a kid in the worst kind of way, and frankly, this kid is in the worst kind of way. So . . . anyway, when mama comes back to the stack and discovers her baby has been snatched, she unravels completely. After a perfunctory examination of the haystack and a quick look under a nearby rock, she gives up and splits the scene.

Eighteen years pass, the ricky-tick piano music reaches an ear-splitting crescendo, and presto! Baby has grown into a beautiful girl with lots of eligible suitors from the sodbuster set. But she has eyes for only one . . . you guessed it . . . dear old dad, slick as a whistle in his Brooks Brothers overalls and driving a Jaguar tractor. Neither baby nor daddy knows who the other really is, so they decide to get hitched. Meanwhile, mom is out of Bellevue and comes

WINNICK'S THIRD G-T PKGE. FOR BRITISH TV

Maurice Winnick, ex-London bandleader turned radio-tv packager, has been in N. Y. on a quickie to sew up "Two For The Money," his third Goodson-Todman package. He already has "What's My Line?" and "I Got A Secret" on BBC; "Money" goes commercial via Rediffusion. A fourth G-T package, "Beat The Clock," is controlled by the Grades and Val Parnell, also via British commercial tv.

"Money" debuted last night (Tues.) in London.

Tough TV Sledding For Hub Performers As Live Shows Exit

Boston, Aug. 14.

With WNAC-TV pushing toward No. 1 position as leading film station and WBZ-TV concentrating on matching it, live tv shows here look to be down the drain.

WBZ-TV, which quit its "Swan Boat" live show, has revamped its entire format with emphasis on film. Ending of "Swan Boat" left Nelson Bragg, emcee, and Cindy Lord and Lindy Doherty, singers, out of jobs.

Cindy and Lindy are deserting tv for the nitery circuit and will open in a new act at the Bradford Roof, Aug. 29.

Boston entertainers are finding little opportunity in Hub tv.

CHI'S 'ACHING BACK' CONCLAVE

Chi-to-Frisco's 'Operation Airlift'

Chicago, Aug. 14.

An "operation airlift" of herculean proportions has been mapped for this weekend to transport nearly 1,000 radio-tv staffers and upwards of 30,000 pounds of equipment when the networks and indie stations move their base of operation from Chi's International Amphitheatre half way across the continent to Frisco's Cow Palace where the Republicans take over the spotlight Monday (20).

It's a doubletime logistic maneuver that would do justice to a small army with only at best 60 hours for the crosscountry sprint between the time the Democrats finish their show late Friday night (17) and the opening GOP convention gavel next Monday. And that's assuming, as seems likely at this point, that the Dems will have their presidential and vice presidential nominees selected in time for the Friday night finale.

As with the convention coverage proper, the airlift is partly a pooled project. The networks' key newsmen and technicians will take off from Chi's Midway airport in two special planes immediately after the adjournment gavel bangs at the International Amphitheatre. Each web has been assigned 39 seats on each of these two top priority DC-7 flights.

The essential gear needed out in Frisco will be loaded into a pooled DC-6 cargo plane with each of the three tv nets alloted 10,000 pounds.

This priority transfer will operate on a tight 18-hour schedule. This means the gear must be packed and on board six hours after the end of the Dem's show, six hours are being allowed for flight time and six hours at the Coast end and to get the machinery set up.

The rest of the troops will make the trip via regularly scheduled United, American and TWA flights which will have blocks of seats reserved for the radio-tv personnel.

HST Puts The Show on The Road

Ex-President Proves To Be Darling of The TV Networks With Pro-Harriman Bombshell

Chicago, Aug. 14.

The political bombshell tossed last week by Harry Truman turned out to be a tv bonanza. The former President rescued the Democratic pre-convention period from the doldrums by announcing his candidate on the air, thereby giving tv its first big break. HST, always the darling of the newsmen, is now the hero of the webs. And they are frankly grateful.

Broadcasting industry had spent four years building up to the biggest job of electronic reporting in all history. It came to Chicago with its biggest, its best, its newest. And it came face to face with what threatened to be a lacklustre story to tell.

TV worked efficiently and smoothly as it covered the pre-convention doings. But directors and newsmen harked back nostalgically to '52. Sure, they were greener and less sure of their powerful medium then. But what a story!

Instead of the two well-mannered major presidental candidates of '56, there were at least six hopefuls last time— all bristling with hope and brimming with color. One couldn't help remembering the lineup—the gallant, tragic last stand of the late "Veep," Alben Barkley; the reluctant candi-

Pills & Shills

Chicago, Aug. 14.

They're taking no chances that the delegates might get too wound up at the Democratic shindig here this week.

Convention's emergency medical centre at the International Amphitheatre is equipped this year with a generous supply of tranquilizing pills being doled out to any and all who feel they're racing their motors.

'Big Show' Accents Tailored - for - TV Reinsch Technique

Chicago, Aug. 15.

Fact that the Democrats' convention arrangements were masterminded by a broadcaster, in the person of J. Leonard Reinsch, managing director of the Cox stations, is generally conceded to be a big boon to the networks and independent stations in bringing off the big show. Reinsch's awareness of and familiarity with the media's problems is credited with smoothing out a lot of the kinks that always crop up in an operation of this magnitude.

Reinsch of course had a strong voice in the party's councils in seeking to tailor the event along showmanly lines for the benefit of the hoped-for 100,000,000 viewers. But, perhaps more importantly, he and his staff lent a sympathetic ear to the radio-tv problems. In fact, there are beefs from the newspaper lads that the whole shindig is being overly oriented in tv's direction.

Reinsch's exec assistant, Elizabeth (Betty) Forsling, is a former ABC staffer and thus a familiar face to many. Lewis Gomavitz, longtime director of Burr Tillstrom's "Kukla, Fran & Ollie," got the assignment from the national committee to rig the International Amphitheatre convention site, and although his first thought has been the comfort and convenience of the party bigwigs and delegates, the whole setup has been framed with an eye toward tv.

Same thing goes for the speakers' rostrum, the focal point of the affair, which was specially designed by TelePrompter veepee Herb Schlafly,

Ampex Plays Key Role at Convention

Chicago, Aug. 14.

Clear Channels, which made quite a splash in '52 with 10 stations represented, is covering the Chi convention for only three clients — WCAU, Philadelphia; WLW, Cincinnati, and WHO, Des Moines. Despite the fact that all are web affiliates, they are reporting regional angles by direct feed to home bases.

Hollis Seavey, in charge of operations, attributes the falloff to anticipated lack of excitement. Saturation coverage by webs is also undoubtedly a factor.

The more than 200 indies find the cuffo Ampex Recording Center a genuine boon. Many with own taping facilities use the four booths and shipping service provided by Ampex when overloaded. Even the webs, loaded with floor activities, have been sending such

DO-IT-YOURSELF TV GADGETRY

By FARRELL DAVISSON

Chicago, Aug. 14.

"Maneuverability" keynotes the Chicago convention of the Democrats this week. If this is the convention of the sore feet and the aching backs, it's because the tv networks have gone gadget-happy in their unprecedented coverage of the big show.

When it isn't a toteable camera convention, it's a tv-on-wheels convention, with armadas of mobile units and "crash cars" all over the Chi scene.

As befits an industry that thrives on gadgetry, there are plenty of new electronic tools getting a shakedown cruise here under real battle conditions. Actually, there is some thinking the networks have gone overboard with the "men from Mars" gear, especially on the gimmicks that produce the trick effects that really add little to the smoothness and efficiency of the operation. NBC's H. V. Kaltenborn expressed the views of a good many veteran newsmen when he candidly said "There's just too much mechanics around here to suit an old war horse like myself."

There's no denying that the midget cameras, with each web bringing in its own version of same, have added to the medium's flexibility and what NBC's Bill McAndrews calls its "portability." The self-contained units are providing video with a mobility that almost matches that of radio.

Portal-TV-Portal Coverage

In fact, video's fastfooted maneuverability is the standout feature of the networks' coverage this year as they have literally blanketed every spot in town where a news story might break, whether it be the airports, depots, hotel lobbies and campaign headquarters. And when a new development starts to unfold they're ready to draw live pickups from a half-dozen or more locations.

NBC is armed with three standard mobiles and a Cadillac "hot rod" with a self-contained video unit. The radio side is tooling around in a gadget-laden Ford Thunderbird. CBS's fleet includes three mobile units, a Chrysler convertible converted into a rolling tv station, plus two station wagons carrying cameras. ABC has two regulation mobile units and a Dodge station wagon rigged for on-the-spot pickups. Mutual is using a covey of Nash Ramblers for its AM newsmen.

Much of this equipment and the

Convention Sidelights

By FLORENCE S. LOWE

Chicago, Aug. 14.

There's more than one touch of show biz rallying round the Demmy cause. On delegate-alternate list alone are following pix biz reps: Metro boss Dore Schary; producer Bill Goetz; actress and former "Quiz Kid" Vanessa Brown; filmite Rosemary De Camp; and Tennessean Alfred Starr, indie exhibitor and former TOA prexy . . . Prominent galleryites include George "Toastmaster General" Jessel and AFM prexy James Petrillo, both of whom were amongst first to gain audiences with Harry Truman . . . Film star Ilona Massey sat quietly on sidelines while husband Donald Dawson helped former boss Truman map his strategy . . . The conventioneering Peter Lawfords have a special interest in the proceedings. Mrs. Lawford's brother is Sen. John Kennedy, Mass. vice presidential hopeful . . . "$64,000 Question" spelling champ Gloria Lockerman an attention-getter in the Conrad Hilton lobby.

It was accidental, but the day of network coexistence seemed to have arrived during the dramatic televised Truman press conference. ABC camera panned to NBC star Margaret Truman a number of times, though the ex First Daughter never got in the NBC show . . . And CBS cameras, focussed on Gov. Harriman, carried a clear, steady image of an ABC button on the lapel of a staffer for the rival web.

Margaret Truman, whose new NBC contract becomes effective Sept. 1, spent only two days with almost two weeks scheduled in the GOP 'Frisco camp. Reason was her own Demmies in Chicago—vs. that her husband, New York Timesman Clifton Daniel, was responsible for his paper's special convention edition for the Republican conclave, so had to head west well in advance to do the spadework.

Public Spanking of CBS for Nixing Of Demo Film Draws Stanton Fire, Raises Issue of Program Control

ABC Defends CBS

Chicago, Aug. 14.

ABC prez Robert E. Kintner backed CBS-TV's action in not carrying a portion of the Democrats' keynote film with a declaration that CBS "was perfectly within its rights to broadcast what it believed to be of the greatest public interest."

Kintner said ABC believes that each network must exercise "its own editorial judgment" in the coverage of conventions and other news events, and the right to exercise this judgment "is as basic as freedom of the press and freedom of speech."

Chicago, Aug. 14.

Issue of control over televised coverage of the conventions blew into a fullscale hassle between the Democratic National Committee and CBS-TV here following an attack on the network by National Chairman Paul Butler and a counterattack by CBS prez Frank Stanton accusing the politicos of trying to stifle freedom of the press. Stanton's statement came this morning (Tues.), following Butler's floor attack and subsequent press conference blast at the web for carrying only a portion of the Democratic keynote film.

Stanton stated he was "shocked" at Butler's "inflamatory attack" and charged he is in "fundamental error both on the facts and on the principles of free press which are deeply involved." Declaring that there was never any agreement or commitment to carry the film, Stanton stated that "far more important is the vital issue of freedom of the press which you raise. Those who make the news cannot, in a free society, dictate to broadcasters, as part of the free press, to what extent, where and how they shall cover the news. Television and radio, in covering the conventions as well as all other news events, are not mere conduits which must carry everything which the news maker demands. On the contrary, we insist most vigorously that we are, and must remain, free to exercise our news judgment.

"You may disagree with how we exercise our news judgment in this case but we in turn must retain that basic right which is guaranteed by the Constitution. We believe that if you examine our record over many years, you will find that we have met the basic criteria of fairness and objectivity in the political, as well as other controversial areas."

It was an angry Democratic National Chairman who put the spark to the fuse when he unleashed a bitter blast at Columbia for its failure to beam all of the special film which was a feature of last night's (Mon.) keynote session of the party's national convention here.

Butler's public spanking of the network, claiming it was not living up to its commitments and implying it was unfairly editing the political hoopla, was delivered from the speaker's rostrum at the International Amphitheatre and carried by CBS and NBC. ABC-TV was pulled away for a commercial.

Democratic topper's bombshell brought CBS president Frank Stanton up out of his box where he was watching the live show. And after he and veepee Richard Salant huddled with Sig Mickleson who is helming the CBS conven-

It's Field Day For Freeloaders At Dems' Conclave

Chicago, Aug. 14.

Media reps never had it so good.

Freeloading for radio-tv-press, which has been mounting at political conventions past dozen years, has reached a new high at the current Demmy conclave. Newsmen can eat, drink, ride, relax, all by courtesy of some sponsor.

Flashiest addition to the convention scene this year is RCA-NBC's press "trailer park" set up inside the International Amphitheatre immediately adjacent to the working press area. Press credentials, even those of a rival web, will get a newsman inside one of seven plush, airconditioned two-room trailers. Complete with telephones, typewriters, tape-recorders, tv receivers, each one is a complete work room. For those who prefer to relax, there are comfortable chairs and sofas, fruit, soft drinks, and even hi-fi record players. Final touch of luxury is a hot buffet flanking tables set in the trailer enclosure in format of a sidewalk cafe. And final note of hospitality

What Happens If Dems Run Over?

Chicago, Aug. 14.

The network's convention braintrusts are busy today (Tues.) mapping their strategy against the possibility they'll be caught in a political squeeze play should the Democrats run overtime here in Chicago while the Republicans are waiting in the wings to launch their hoopla Monday (20) in San Francisco.

Most everyone at this early stage is taking the optimistic view that the Dems won't get bogged down in a marathon round of balloting for their presidential and vice presidential candidates and will be ready to disband some time late Friday night (17) per schedule. But with a real donneybrook shap-

Key TV Operators Set 120G Budget For a 'Crash Research Program'

Chicago, Aug. 14.

Newly-formed Assn. of Maximum Service Telecasters has budgeted $120,000 for a comprehensive engineering study of both VHF and UHF television as the follow-up to the plea made at last spring's NARTB convention by FCC chairman George C. McConnaughey that the industry launch a "crash research program" for the ultra high frequency.

Action came at AMST's first membership meeting here Friday (10) which brought together 98 of the nation's key telecasters who are apprehensive that their full-power stakes in the tv spectrum may be curtailed in any rejuggling of the national tele blueprint that may emerge from the current grappling with the "UHF problem."

Organization is avowedly non-partisan in the V vs. U controversy with three of the four UHF stations eligible under the maximum transmitting power proviso in the ranks. Bulk of the recruits, however, is drawn from the 150 VHF outlets now beaming on the maximum strength granted by the FCC.

First engineering studies will be conducted in New Orleans, Portland, Ore., and Wilkes-Barre, where full-power UHF'ers are operating. AMST engineering committee headed by John DeWitt, WSM-TV, Nashville, will work closely with FCC engineers in plotting the survey which eventually will encompass 30 markets.

Project will cover the transmitting and receiving efficiencies of both frequencies. Two mobile units will be bought by the accociation for the survey.

As outlined by newly-elected prexy Jack Harris, KPRC-TV, Houston, the outfit "is not dedicated to the status quo. But it is committed to fight any changes the status quo which would constitute lessened service than is available under the present arrangement."

"It is further committed to en-

33 1/3% Rate Hike Set For WOR-TV

WOR-TV, N. Y., will raise rates 33⅓%, effective Sept. 1. Under the new rate structure one hour of Class A time will sell for $2,000 as compared to the current $1,500, while one-half hour of Class A time will be $1,200, against $900 formerly, and 15 minutes of Class A will be $800, against the current $600. Class B and Class C time rates will be boosted proportionately.

The RKO Teleradio New York flagship, now pinning down last details of its fall program lineup, as well as aligning the sponsors of its "Million Dollar Movie" show, will spell out its fall programming schedule next Wednesday (22).

Another Album Week presentation of "Million Dollar Movie," consisting of repeats from past top "MDM" features, will begin Monday (20). As in the initial Album Week show, telecasts will be 7:30 and 10 p.m. nightly as usual, but a different feature will be presented each evening.

'Telephone Hour' Signs Lorin Hollander, 12

Lorin Hollander, 12-year-old N. Y. pianist, will take a place among the host of adult pros on next season's NBC "Telephone Hour." Donald Voorhees, conductor of the radio stanza, caught Hollander performing with the National Orch at Carnegie Hall, so he'll again appear at Carnegie, via the broadcast Labor Day Night (Sept. 3), keyed to the observance of "Salute to Youth Week."

Prodigy, who studied under Edward Steuermann at the age of eight, will make a third Carnegie appearance on Jan. 12, next year, in the N. Y. Philharmonic's Young Peoples' Concert. He's the son of Max Hollander, for years first violinist and asst. concertmaster with Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra.

DINNEEN GETS WBC NOD ON BRINK'S JOB

Joseph Dinneen, Boston Globe crime reporter who covered the Brink's robbery exhaustively, has been signed by Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp.'s WBZ-TV and WBZ-WBZA in Boston for exclusive coverage of the trial of the eight defendants now getting underway. Trial officially started last week, but is still in the process of selecting jurors.

Dinneen, though a Beantowner, has achieved national prominence via his books and mag articles on crime. One novel, "The Anatomy of a Crime," was a fictitious account of the Brink's holdup itself and was later made into a film, "Six Bridges to Cross," with Tony Curtis starring. His latest work, "U.S.A. Underworld," which hit the stalls only a couple of months ago, has been picked up for screen treatment by Humphrey Bogart's indie production company.

Writers Guild In CBS Coast Dickers

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Writers Guild of America West is seeking a new pact with CBS governing newscasters, with a hike in base pay, fees for commercially sponsored shows and changes in working conditions at stake.

The CBS newscasting staff belongs to the American Federation of TV and Radio Artists, but some are writers and these are also WGAW members. Bill Kenneally, Don Cubberley and Max Roby are staffers who are WGAW participants in the confabs on a staff newswriter pact. Also on the committee are Les Farber, Gomer Cool, Adrian Gendot, Carl Randall and Al Downs. Web reps are Maury Webster, KNX director of operations, and Gene Purver, coast director of labor relations.

Two month termination notice for the present pact expires on Aug. 29, after which strike action can be taken, if authorized.

Fired From 35G Disk Job, Burks Sells Own Show; Still Hates R'n'R

St. Louis, Aug. 14.

James Dillon (Spider) Burks, who was fired from his $35,000 annual disk jock stint at KXLW a month ago for refusal to play "rock 'n' roll" music, now owns his own show and resumes Monday (20) over KSTL, another local station. Burks, who has a huge following, said, "I'm freelancing now and my shows belong to me."

Asserting that "rock 'n roll" music is an ignorant type of music, Burks said, "I doubt if I'll play any of it on my new shows unless they come up with a very good one. If it sounds like most of that horrible stuff, I won't touch it."

Burks' sked calls for shows from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday and one from a Negro nitery in which he owns an interest between 4 and 5 p.m. Saturday. Discussing his income, Burks said, "I'll get an increase. Owning my own show, I've got to get more. He was with KXLW for nine years.

Garrity's Traffic News Brings In WOR Coin

Bob Garrity's "Flying Studio" reports of traffic conditions over WOR, N. Y., has garnered the sponsorship of Studebaker Dealers. Garrity's reports are featured every weekend from 4 to 11 p.m.

Mutual's New York flagship also has inked Packard Retail Stores as the local participating sponsor of the net's political convention coverage. Kohler Co., makers of plumbing fixtures, is picking up the net tab.

SIMPSON INTO MBS PROGRAM BERTH

Brad Simpson has been named program director of Mutual, a post vacated by Robert A. Monroe.

Simpson, veteran broadcaster who joined MBS earlier this year as administrative assistant to the president, will continue in that post while supervising the network's programming.

Monroe plans to devote his full time to his own station management, production and recording companies.

Simpson's background includes production of radio shows for CBS and NBC as well as Mutual, in addition to being associated with the Ruthrauff & Ryan and Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample advertising agencies, where he created a variety of network radio and tv properties.

MBS also formerly announced the appointment of Arthur (Art) Gleeson, sportcaster, as sports director for the net.

Home-Toll Video May Get Going In Cuba First

Subscription television, which hasn't figured in the news in recent months, may get a lift soon via finalization of a deal to introduce home-tollcasting in Cuba. Contracts have been drawn up between the owners of the five Cuban stations and Matty Fox of Skiatron-TV.

If the deal is consummated soon—and it looks very much as if it might—a toll service could be started in Cuba sometime next year. Presumably, the cream of Fox's RKO library and possibly also of Eliot Hyman's Warner Bros. library, would be used to get Cuban pay-as-you-see off the ground.

The decoders necessary for the Skiatron Subscriber-Vision system would be produced either in Western Germany or in Japan, where cost of making them is much lower than it would be in the U.S. It's figured that home-toll tv in Cuba would kick off with an initial 50,000 sets. Havana alone has close to 200,000 receivers.

Deal would make Cuba the first country in the world to try subscription video. Arrangement is seen of prime importance inasmuch as Havana particularly would serve as something of a test tube sample of how the public reacts to paying for shows. It's certain that U.S. interests would be watching closely the results of the Cuban run.

In the U.S., insiders feel certain that there will now be no further significant change in the toll picture until after the elections.

Firestone's 'Supporting Cast' Gets Top Billing

For the second time in four years, "Voice of Firestone" will turn over one of its Monday at 8 p.m. 60-minute showcasings to relative unknowns. Show's supporting singing cast—all eight of them—will front the Sept. 3 simulcast. And carrying the "unknown" policy one step further, one of the eight, soprano Frances Wyatt, who recently did a hasty fill-in for ailing Mimi Benzell, will co-star on the Nov. 12 program with Brian Sullivan.

First such offering on "Firestone" was done a year ago July. Margaret Broderson, Miss Wyatt, Lorraine Donahue, Betty Terrell, Bill Metcalf, Russell Hammar, Emil Markow and William Toole will do the solos.

KWG Fetches 85G

Stockton, Calif., Aug. 14.

KWG, Stockton, second oldest licensed radio station in the nation, has been purchased by Western Broadcasting Co. for $85,000, Western's president, Douglas D. Kahle, reported.

Sellers were James E. Longe and Lewis B. Saslaw, who had bought the independent outlet from the McClatchy Broadcasting Co.

Kahle, general manager of KNTV, San Jose, said he would take over the same job at KWG. Longe remains as assistant manager and program director.

German Resistance to Com'l TV Collapsing; See Network Within Year

With commercial tv to be launched in Germany Nov. 3, its promoters envision a south German commercial network to be kicked off by next summer, according to Frank Bourgholtzer, NBC's Berlin news chief operating out of Bad Godesberg and who's been in New York for a visit.

The station in Munich will be the first on the air with "money" programming, starting a 25-minute program nightly. In charge of the commercial aspect will be a corporation titled Bayerisches Werbefernsehen (GMBH), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bayerischer Rundfunk, or Bavarian Radio-TV Co. Top man in the new advertising subsid is Dr. Erwin Wittman, who's been No. 2 man in the financial setup at Bayerischer Rundfunk.

According to Bourgholtzer's information, Dr. Wittman expects the tv station at Baden Baden to go commercial in the same pattern as Munich by December or January, and the Hessischer Rundfunk at Frankfurt should follow "within a few months," to be followed in turn by the outlet in Stuttgart.

"Considering that the Sender Freies Berlin station is planning commercial programs for this winter also, there could be a respectable commercial network by a year from today," said Bourgholtzer. He declared that "such a development is considered here (in Germany) to presage the eventual collapse of resistance to commercial tv which has been strongest, up to now, in Cologne and Hamburg, the richest stations under the present non-commercial, tax-supported system."

Evolve Program Patterns

Program patterns have not yet reached the development stage, although Dr. Wittman has been "open for business" for several weeks now. It's anticipated that agencies will dominate the program development field in Germany inasmuch as the Munich plan calls for outside production under veto power of station management. The rate schedule provides a 15% commission to agencies for their services in finding sponsors and developing program material.

In theory, at least, it will be possible for one sponsor to gobble up the entire 25-minute period from 7:30 to 7:55 p.m. currently allotted for commercial viewing. "This probably will not happen, at

CBS REVENUES UP BUT PROFITS DIP

Consolidated net revenues of CBS Inc. for the first six months of 1956 rose to a new high of $174,274,387 for the period ended June 30, an increase of 16% over the comparable period in 1955, but net income for the period dropped due to losses incurred in discontinuing the CBS-Columbia set manufacturing division.

Earnings were $5,308,990, equal to 71c a share, compared with $6,327,672 or 87c. a share for the first six months of 1955. The losses on the CBS-Columbia division are provisions for estimated expenses and losses expected to be incurred in discontinuing the division, these totaling $2,600,000 or 35c a share. Not included in these losses are anticipated losses in the disposal of plant and equipment, estimated at 9c a share or about $673,000.

The 16% hike in total revenues reflect a $24,278,692 increase in sales over the $149,995,695 level of the first six months of last year. CBS board also declared a cash dividend of 20c a share on the Class A and Class B stock payable Sept. 7 to stockholders of record on Aug. 24.

Technicians Strike On Brit. Com'l TV

London, Aug. 14.

Viewers in London knew nothing about a lightning strike of technicians which took place in the studios of Associated-Rediffusion, commercial tv programmers in the London area Friday (3) lasting 28 minutes. The dispute arose over an individual claim for a higher wage rate. The strike began at 5 p.m. just before a Johnny Weissmuller film was about to be beamed over the children's program, and while union and company representatives negotiated, a substitute picture was shown.

The pother was temporarily settled, but during the evening a further strike was called in which four trade unions concerned, decided to withdraw their labor.

Weekend programs in London—handled by Associated-TeleVision would not have been affected by unions' decision, but by Saturday, Associated-Rediffusion announced that differences had been smoothed over in an "amicable settlement."

Tolchin Carries Torch For Indies; Ditto Fleischl In N. Y.-to-L. A. Swing

Sales junkets to the Coast and Chi by the managers of two N. Y. radio stations last month stress the war between indies and network affiliates. Within two days of each other, Art Tolchin, boss of WMGM, N. Y. and Mort Fleischl, topper at rival WMCA, hit agencies in Frisco and then L.A., and their pitches included a large-measure plug for other metropolitan indies.

A chief reason has been given for these gratuitous sales pitches for one radio indie by another: there seems still to be an inclination on the part of advertisers to buy network keys or affiliates first.

WMGM, Tolchin reports, has already written $50,000 worth of fall biz by means of the swing through the west, with Trans-American Airlines returning to the station after several months. Fleischl said that while no new Coast or Chi pacts have been made as a result of his trip there's a "high potential," with a lot of negotiating going on.

Houston—Byron Beasley has been named new promotion director here for KTRH. He replaces Bruce Barkis who is resigning.

Cahan to WBZ-TV In Hub Reshuffle

Boston, Aug., 14.

In the latest change at WBZ-TV, which has been undergoing complete revamping, Herbert B. Cahan, program director at WAAM-TV, Baltimore, since 1949, takes over as new program manager on Aug. 27.

Franke Tooke, general manager of the Hub tv station, said Cahan will carry out the task of gearing programming to the entertainment and education of the family as a unit.

"Cahan is keenly aware of local television station's responsibilities to the community in which it is located," Tooke said. "He further believes that while a great deal of tv programming will continue to be filmed, there will always be a place for local and network live shows," Tooke added.

Cahan received the Robert E. Sherwood Award, established by the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Republic, for programs dealing with freedom and justice. WAAM-TV won the award for "The Baltimore Desegregation Report," a live documentary giving a complete report of problems faced by Baltimore in desegregation efforts. Cahan produced the documentary.

Tooke, in outlining the new policy, said the station's program schedule has been revamped considerably during the last two months to provide the best possible viewing balance so that "entertaining television, covering a wide range of subjects is available for every member of the family."

'INDUSTRIALS' COZY UP TO TV

That 15% Agency Rap

Ad agencies' "15% problem," instead of lessening over the past few months, is growing more intense, with an increasing number of blue-chip sponsors laying it on the line to the agencies: "Show us how your 15% commission is justified or we'll do something about it." Some observers see the situation coming to a boil in six months to a year, with the agencies forced into a corner.

Only last week, it was reported that one of television's top advertisers sent out letters to its four agencies requesting each of them to "state your views" on the matter of program commissions. Apparently time commissions aren't an issue; neither are commissions on commercial production. But the real rub is with programs, where the advertiser in essence is telling the agency that, "if you have nothing to do with the production of the show, you've got no right to collect 15% on it." One advertiser wants to work out a sliding commission scale for programs in proportion to the agency's "contribution" to the program, but hasn't been able to pin down just what "contribution" means—whether it's limited to recommending a show, or supervising, or outright production.

Savage Sees Newest Pattern In 60-Min. TV Musical Format

With television's hour dramas showing signs of tiring in the rating department and as attention-getters, the next logical videvelopment will be the occasional integration of musicals into the regular 60-minute dramatic shows as a means of hypoing and freshening their appeal and their ratings. So thinks Dave Savage, prez of the recently formed Theatrical Enterprises agency and packaging outfit, who declares that several hour drama sponsors have been leaning toward the idea of an occasional musical as a change of pace. (See story on U. S. Steel Hour.)

With the 90-minute musical imbedded as a television habit, there's no reason why musicals can't be used in 60-minute lengths, Savage declares. It's true that the hour length creates some problems, but none that can't be solved, particularly in a method of use that would see them scheduled intermittently on a once-a-month or every-sixth-week basis within the framework of a regular dramatic series. The song-and-dancers have proven their worth to the spec sponsors; they'd contribute mightily toward hypoing some of the sagging dramatic stanzas, Savage believes.

As to the matter of the hour length and some past failures with musicals in that framework Savage feels it's all in the adaptation. "Every time a musical got panned, the critics all said the music was great, but the book was bad. The trouble is that we haven't developed 'Book Writers' for television yet. We've got gag writers and standup comedy writers and drama writers, but we haven't found the

John Gibbs Expansion

Expansion at the John Gibbs agency sees the creation of a new department repping producers, directors and writers for all media under Francis Head and the return to the agency of Bob Ferres as head of the talent department after two years on his own. Changes not only are designed to keep pace with expanded activities but to free agency chief John Gibbs for more packaging activities.

Both Head and Ferres will headquarter in N. Y. but will operate on a shuttle to the Coast to handle the increased volume of picture deals for Gibbs clients. Indication of the rate of expansion lies in the fact that in the past month, the agency has signed 17 thesps, eight writers and six directors.

'Matinee Theatre' Shoots 13 Tintpix

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Color filming of an initial block of 13 episodes of NBC's daytime hour strip, "Matinee Theatre," will begin next month at the net's leased space at California studio. Films will be used when "Matinee's" space at the Burbank color studio is preempted by spectaculars or other network programming.

In the past six months, Albert McCleery, executive producer of the daytime dramatic series, has put five of his shows on film to prove the success of the "cameo technique" on other than live transmission. The results moved Thomas Sarnoff, director of production and business affairs, to order the color film treatment for the first block of 13. McCleery will personally direct six of the programs and the others by staffers Lamont Johnson, Walter Grauman, Boris Segal and Arthur Hiller.

Filming starts Sept. 13, with three days for rehearsals and two days of shooting. McCleery's aides on the colorfilm project will be Winston O'Keefe, casting director; Ethel Frank, script producer, and Fenton Coe and Kent McCray of the production staff.

British Com'l TV Setup Bumps 300 To Offset Losses

London, Aug. 14.

To combat rising costs, Associated-Rediffusion, London weekday commercial tv contractors, has reorganized its setup which will involve the dismissal of 300 of their 1,200 employees, and hefty reductions in studio space and equipment. Altogether, $840,000 of the company's assets will either be sold or put into storage.

The outlet has been reported as losing well over $28,000 a week over the summer advertising slump. Lately, they summoned the assistance of a productivity team which studied the efficiency of the organization. The dismissals are expected to offest losses by $11,200 weekly and through these economy measures they also hope to meet the fall program schedule. A record amount of advertising time has been booked for fall and early winter months.

Besides the main reason given for these sudden decisions, it's assumed that he Government's recent refusal to allow the commercial outlets' controlling body, Independent Television Authority, a $2,100,000 subsidy for a proportion of cultural "relief" will increase the financial burden. ITA may soon ask for greater longhair representation which adverisers are chary about supporting because of viewer appeal.

The cuts—announced Thurs. (9)—are estimated to reduce the company's technical facilities by a third and these will hereafter be concentrated in A-R's Wembley studios replacing the present arrangement of studio dispersement. Kingsway House in central London, originally planned to be a nerve centre for A-R, has been regraded to an administrative block under the new economies. Two studios are to go dark at Television House where a $2,800,000

NEW VISTAS FOR SPONSOR COIN

Although network television has suffered in the retrenchment of the automobile manufacturers, it's gained a great deal of ground in the heavy industry field, with the number of industrial sponsors entering the medium in 1956 more than double those in tv in previous years. A cheering note lies in the fact that while the auto retrenchment is figured as a temporary thing, ascribed to oversupply and consumer resistance which will soften, the entry of the industrials into the medium is merely a forerunner of what would become an expansion in the number of such companies and the extent of their network sponsorship.

Prior to 1956, there were seven such companies in network television. This year, nine more entered the field, and indications are that number will continue to climb. One factor, of course, is diversification and expansion of these companies, which can no longer rely on their traditional advertising media like trade and business magazines. As more and more diversify into consumer products, they must hit the consumer directly. An example is Dow Chemical (which is not included in the pre-1956 total, as compiled by NBC-TV), which developed its Saran-Wrap and had to advertise directly to the public. Another is Monsanto (also not included), which with the development of its All detergent, had to communicate directly.

Nothing's Institutional

Crux of the situation is that the once-institutional sponsor isn't institutional anymore. Alcoa and Reynolds Metals, two of the seven pre-'56 sponsors, have led the way in still another aspect of "institutional" sponsorship, that being the development of new markets for aluminum, by stressing the values of the metal in the do-it-yourself market and demonstrating via tv how homemakers can use aluminum simply to fit their needs. It's a matter of creating new markets via the medium. An obvious factor is the need for better pub-relations in this era of expansion, such as Aluminium Ltd. of Canada's pitch on the abundance of power in Canada, or in the case of a brand-new sponsor, Minneapolis-Honeywell, to create good pub-relations for its automation products.

The seven pre-'56 industrial advertisers comprised Alcoa, Reynolds, Aluminium Ltd., U. S. Steel, du Pont, Johns-Manville and American Machine & Foundry. New to the medium this year are Union Carbon & Carbide, Sperry Rand, General Dynamics, Kaiser Aluminum, Minneapolis-Honeywell, American Radiator, American Viscose, J. P. Stevens and Carrier. Another factor is that of competitive reasoning with Alcoa and Reynolds pitching their names before the public in selling aluminum as a product, Kaiser couldn't very well afford to stay out of the medium.

Another factor is the development of television to the point where it can provide the kind of programming suitable to the needs

Herb Sheldon to Front 'Speaking of Animals'

Herb Sheldon, who will lose his 1 p. m. cross-the-board post on WRCA-TV, N. Y., in the fall, will be moving over to WABD as the emcee of a kid show. He'll probably remain with WRCA-TV, too, as host of a new ayem feature film strip.

Sheldon will front "Speaking of Animals" on the DuMont station. Beginning at 7:15 every weeknight, the show will comprise old Paramount theatrical shorts. Station reports the show will also make a pitch for adult lookers-in.

Sheldon will also do "Screen Souvenirs" on WABD Wednesday nights. Also out of Par's theatrical product, material will be scenes out of famous features.

KTTV's Metro Deal Monkey-Wrenches CBS' $13,000,000 O&O Negotiations

Seeds and Contentment

Interesting aspect of the deal negotiated for "Break the $250,000 Bank," which preems in its new giant giveaway form in the fall in the Tuesday night 10:30 NBC-TV slot, is how the network sales boys were completely bypassed in resolving the whole sponsorship setup.

Russel M. Seeds agency of Chicago bought the longrunning Ed Wolf "Break the Bank" package for its client, Lanolin Plus, then through Lennen & Newell succeeded in getting Benrus to become an alternate sponsor.

It was then that both agencies went to NBC and purchased the 10:30 time.

Metro's pictures-for-stock deal with KTTV in Los Angeles, which sees the studio taking 25% of the station's ownership plus cash (story on Page 1) may have the effect of killing a projected $13,000,000 deal with CBS-TV. CBS toppers William S. Paley and Frank Stanton had been huddling with Loew's Inc. prexy Arthur M. Loew on a 10-year, $13,000,000, unlimited-use deal for the 740-film backlog for the four CBS o&o stations in New York, Hollywood, Chicago and Milwaukee.

The KTTV deal immediately closes out Hollywood from the CBS talks, and any deal would be restricted to three cities.

Loew is adamant on limiting the deal to the o&o stations; and a major stalemate is not the price but the restriction against CBS farming out the product beyond those o&o markets. CBS wants to take over general distribution of the Metro backlog through its CBS Television Film Sales syndication subsid.

The dickering started at $17,000,000, got down to $15,000,000 and is now at the $13,000,000 mark. This differs from the recently rumored $15,000,000 dicker for the Loew residuals which would have had no such curtailment of markets.

CBS-TV recently made a $225,000 deal for "Wizard of Oz" for a single across-the-board exhibition, plus one repeat, with an option at the same 225G for a third and fourth encore. "Ozz" is slated for the Christmas '56 Ford Jubilee Show over the network.

Zingy Revamp For 'U. S. Steel Hour'; Musical Accent

A steady change of pace program content will characterize the "U.S. Steel Hour" this fall, telecast on alternate Wednesday evenings at 10 p.m. over CBS-TV.

Slated for showing is a musical version of Tom Sawyer; "Bang the Drum Slowly," a comedy-drama on baseball; "Longboat," a historical sea story; and "Man Stalker," a Mort Wishengrad original based on the five Russian seamen who redefected to the Soviet Union.

Marshall Jamison, the recently appointed executive producer of the series which is under the production reins of the Theatre Guild, feels that any regular tv dramatic program suffers unless a change of pace is adopted. In line with this approach, he is trying to get Andy Griffith, star of the Broadway show, "No Time for Sergeants," to do a commentary on a planned telecast of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Trial by Jury." He also has scheduled "We Must Kill Toni," an adaptation from a London play for airing on the U.S. Steel programmer.

Under Jamison's aegis, the three key directors usually associated with the show will be expanded to six or seven, in an attempt to cast the director with the show. This season's directors will include Daniel Petrie, Norman Felton, Paul Nickell, Elliot Silverstein, David Alexander and Don Richardson.

U.S. Steel's Christmas show will be a repeat of "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals." Gracie Fields will be starred again with the costarring role, done originally on tv by Jackie Cooper, yet to be cast. The Tom Sawyer musical, slated for the Thanksgiving season, will be directed by John Haggot, on the basis of a book and music by Frank Luther. "Longboat" will be from an original script by Alfred Brenner.

Felix Adler as Regular On CBS-TV 'Good Morning'

Another displaced performer from the folded Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus apparently has found a permanent home on television. He's clown Felix Adler, who's now appearing regularly on the CBS-TV "Good Morning With Will Rogers Jr." show.

Adler was signed for the series three weeks ago on an "experimental" basis for a couple of appearances weekly, but fit in so well that he's now appearing daily as a regular cast member. Expectation is he'll be with the show permanently from now on.

Dems in Biggest TV Buy Via NBC

Democratic Party placed its heaviest television campaign budget yet with the purchase on NBC-TV of 18 five-minute segments and four half-hour periods, all in prime evening time, running from September through Election eve. Dems had previously ordered 14 five-minute capsules on CBS-TV, where the GOP had also moved in with 12 of the same. No GOP business at NBC yet.

Layout was placed through Norman, Craig & Kummel, the Dems' agency.

WTVN-TV's 13-Film Series on Columbus Area Strategic Air Command

Columbus Aug. 14.

WTVN-TV is currently making a 13-film television series called "Mailed Fist" which will explore Lockbourne Air Force Base here and its work in the Strategic Air Command. Series is being made under the supervision of Harry Mohr, assistant program director and public service director for the ABC-affiliated station.

Mohr said the series will show how Lockbourne and the men from all parts of the U. S. who are stationed there are part of the Columbus community just as much as any other institution or citizen. It also will show how SAC is "dedicated to the defense of this country and particularly to immediate retaliation" in the event of attack.

Two Air Force cameramen are working on the assignment, and official Air Force films—mainly stock shots—will be interlarded into the films, which will be 30 minutes in length each.

Mohr said that plans call for releasing the dramatic documentary series to the SAC after its showing here. SAC could then release it to tv stations throughout the country on a no-fee basis.

Conaway Clarifies Some Points On AFTRA's Welfare & Pension Funds

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I thought it might be useful to list in writing the important facts concerning the AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds. In this way two plans, closely related and necessarily complicated so that they may apply to a wide range of human situations, may be made clear to those of your writers who may have to write about them in the future.

1. AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds are not financed by AFTRA or AFTRA members. The cost of the benefits is borne completely by the employers, based on the provisions of the collective bargaining agreements between performer's locals and broadcasting companies, stations, sponsors, advertising agencies, independent producers, and others engaged in the field of television covered by the Code.

2. At the present time the collective bargaining agreements cover the television industry only in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. Therefore, members of AFTRA who work in other sections of the industry cannot be covered at the present time by the AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds because the collective bargaining agreements which cover them do not provide for contributions to the AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds. And, as has been pointed out above, the benefits are financed by employer contributions.

3. The current 5% of a performer's earnings, contributed by an employer, is not even half used for the financing of the health and welfare program. Three per cent goes into the Pension plan and only 2% for Welfare benefits.

4. Because many AFTRA members are now covered by collective bargaining agreements which provide for the AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds want such coverage our recent annual Convention adopted, as one of its basic demands for the forthcoming negotiations in the radio and other fields, a provision which would call for employer contributions to cover these members as well.

5. The present welfare benefits which are the most comprehensive furnished in any section of the entertainment field, nationally or otherwise, cost the AFTRA Welfare Fund approximately $150 per eligible member, per year.

As you can see, this means that only members who are earning $7,500 per year or more are having enough contributed for them to the AFTRA Welfare Fund to support the cost of their welfare benefits. Yet, despite this fact, the AFTRA Fund covers thousands of members who earn less than $7,500 per year.

For example, a member who earned only $1,000 would have $20 per year contributed for him to the Fund ($1,000 times 2% equals $20). For this member and for others earning between $1,000 and $7,500 there is a substantial deficit which is represented by the difference between what is contributed for the member, and the cost of the insurance.

Now, at first glance, one might wonder how it is possible for the AFTRA Fund to cover members who earn less than $7,500 per year when the contributions made in their behalf are less than the cost of the welfare benefits. This coverage is possible because there are members who earn more than $7,500 per year and in those instances 2% on their earnings is more than the cost of the benefits. The excess in these instances is used to finance the benefits for members who earn less than $7,500 per year but more than $1,000.

Careful Actuarial Studies

The $1,000 minimum earnings figure, while obviously not sufficient to enable the Fund to receive enough to finance the benefits for members earning $1,000 to $7,500 per year, was not simply picked out of a hat. It was based on carefully thought out actuarial studies which the Trustees of the AFTRA Pension and Welfare Funds had prepared for them, before the eligibility rules were adopted. These actuarial studies showed that "the magic of averages" enabled us to provide insurance for thousands of members, because of the high earnings of other members, despite the fact that the lower income members were not having enough contributed for them to support the comprehensive program we now have in effect.

Incidentally, while it is expected that the details of the Pension program will be announced some time before the end of this year, I would like to note now that the same theory of using contributions from higher income people to help support the benefits for lower income people will also be applicable in the case of the Pension program as well.

6. Once a member becomes eligible for the AFTRA Welfare benefits he is insured for the four quarters specified in the AFTRA Welfare booklet, even though he does not have a dollar of earnings during the year. I know of no other Welfare Fund in this or any other industry where such protection is afforded for people who are subject to the hazards of unemployment.

7. Members do not have to wait a year to become eligible for benefits again, once they become ineligible. The member's earnings, as reported by his employer, are reviewed quarterly and the member can become eligible four times in the course of the year.

As you can gather from all of the above, we are deeply concerned with the problem of welfare and pension coverage for members who happen to have lower incomes in the field covered by our present collective bargaining agreement. However, this concern must be tied to the reality of the amount of money we have available in the Fund. And any discussion with respect to "permanent" insurance must, of necessity, also take into consideration where we will get the money to finance that insurance. As it now stands, the AFTRA Fund has gone a long way in providing coverage not only for the low-paid people but also eligible members who become completely

ABC-TV Mon. Extension Cues Shift in DuM Bouts

WABD's (N. Y.) coverage of "Monday Night Boxing from St. Nicholas Arena" will begin its main bout roughly 30-minutes later in the fall, because of the extension of network time by ABC-TV, in behalf of Dodge's Lawrence Welk show until 10:30. It's not the band competition for fight viewers that caused the change, but the fact that most of the out-of-town tv stations picking up the fight from WABD are ABC affiliates.

The DuMont key, in order to maintain the fightcasts, has to spread the cost out over 30 or more stations each Monday. The ABC ties have been in effect since DuMont closed its network doors two years ago. Main event, the only thing picked up on the fight network, will go on at 10:30 instead of 10 or shortly after.

Because of the new late time, WABD anticipates more stations will pick up the Teddy Brenner-promoted main bout, perhaps by getting some NBC affils.

First-Run Rank Pix As 10-Week Hypo For 'Aft. Film Festival'

ABC-TV has been working on the rerun setup for 1956-57 season of "Afternoon Film Festival," and is understood to have decided to show the still-unused 50 or more J. Arthur Rank features in 10 weeks of straight first run. This past year, network has used the initial 50 in a complicated rerun pattern, with some of the pix getting a second run the week after they initially appeared on video, only stipulation being that they didn't run the same day of the week as the original showing.

Web hopes to elevate the ratings by using only fresh material for the 10-week period. Same 50 are expected to play a second time in another 10-week peoriod. But a network source feels that ABC will try for new feature product rather than go into three runs.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

The contest fever, restricted largely to products, is moving into the program promotion field as well. Walt Framer has framed a "Big Payoff" contest in which viewers must estimate the retail value of all prizes given away on the show from the time it preemed on Dec. 31, 1951, until June 29 of this year. Framer has placed an estimate in a sealed envelope which won't be opened until Sept. 14, closing date. Winner will get a trip around the world for two, a new Plymouth hardtop and a mink, with second prize another Plymouth. Angle of the European trip is that the couple will carry only an identification card (Diner's Club, covering hotels, restaurants, etc.) and their airline tickets.

Radio is doing well in television homes. Almost half of all evening radio listening is done by tv homes, according to Nielsen. In a study made in March, the researcher also discovered that two-thirds of all daytime audio listening is done by tv homes.

Moreover, the amount of listening to radio in tv households has increased to a high point, matched only once in five years. Using March as a comparative month, Nielsen reports that the average number of minutes spent listening to audio in each tv home is 116 daily. Last year it was 113 a day; in 1954, also 116; in 1953 it was 106-minute daily average, and in 1952 it was 111 minutes.

Adam Young, Inc., has been appointed national sales rep for WGMS, Washington, the station recently purchased by RKO Teleradio Pictures, the parent company of Mutual.

Under the management of Robert F. Hurleigh, longtime Mutual rep in Washington, the station's AM program structure will be revamped to include such net shows as "Queen for a Day," "Bob and Ray, Walter Winchell and Fulton Lewis." The "good music" format of WGMS-FM will remain unchanged. In addition, WGMS-AM will increase the news coverage of the station and will include popular music.

Radio Advertising Bureau is paving the way for a flock of agency and advertiser execs at the annual National Radio Advertising Clinic. Meetings will be held at N.Y.'s Waldorf-Astoria on Oct. 29 and 30 under RAB auspices.

A by-invitation affair, the conclave will be limited to 500 agency-advertiser guests on both days. Kevin Sweeney, RAB proxy, disclosed. Executives of member stations to RAB will be limited to 350. Already, a third of the latter group have made reservations.

Motif will be a repeat on last year: "How we do it" stories by a variety of national advertisers who have success yarns to spin about radio's effectiveness. Apart from the main speeches, panel programs will be running morning and afternoon on both days.

Peters, Griffin, Woodward Inc., station rep, has devoted what is understood to be over $100,000 on a radio-tv market research project, to break next week. It's probably the largest amount devoted to a single promotion-sales scheme allocated so far in the "battle of the plusses" raging among reps.

---

As part of its expansion program, the RKO-WOR recording division is now constructing a new studio on the 25th floor of Mutual's N. Y. headquarter building. The studio will be completed for early fall business.

Division manager John B. Hayes said the new studio, which will incorporate all modern electronic advances, will supplement the organization's existing facilities on the 18th floor of the same building.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Tony Bennett Show

Third and last up in the string of singers summer-filling for Perry Como is Tony Bennett who bowed his hour on NBC-TV Saturday (11). In for a five-week stretch, Bennett has a lot of display time on his hands and from first show indications it looks like it's too much for him. (Preceding him in the summer lineup were Patti Page and Julius LaRosa.)

Bennett was topflight in several song segments but when it came to the hosting and patter chores, he was at a complete loss. It could have been preem show jitters but he never came close to showing the savvy displayed in his in-person assignments.

He got no help from producer Norman Frank, either. Show was fashioned along routine vaudeo lines and mounted with little imagination. The sets, many times, had little to do with the mood of the song in front. This was especially noticeable in Bennett's warm and appealing "Lost In The Stars." Among the other Bennett song specialties were "Happiness Street," his current Columbia etching, "Lullaby of Broadway," "Rags To Riches" and "My Prayer."

Also in the song department were June Valli with a quickie visit to work over her current RCA Victor slice, "I've Just Got Something In My Eye," and Debra Paget with a song and exciting dance treatment of "Delilah Jones." George (Superman) Reeves came down to earth for this show for a workover of a couple of Mexican flavored tunes. In civvy garb, he's just another guitar plucker.

The comedics for the stanza were handled by Harvey Stone and Ben Blue with a socko straightman assist from Sid Fields. Stone came over mildly with a hit-and-miss monolog while Blue and Fields rehashed an oldie mind-reading sketch for an okay score. In between was sandwiched The Three Goetschis with their flashy unicycle routine.

Most of the show's spirit, however, came from a lively line of boys and girls who brightened some of the songs and dances.

Kraft TV Theatre

"Kraft TV Theatre," which has been developing into one of the more qualitative and mature entrics in the hourlong video drama sweepstakes, offered up a sensitive and arresting study in its production of "Anna Santonello" last Wednesday (8) on NBC-TV. It was in particular a notable triumph for Eileen Heckart, who turned in a distinguished performance in the role of an Italian-American girl who fell in love with an Irish repairman and is thwarted by her three older brothers. The story was that simple, yet as written by Robert Crean (tv critic for the Washington, D. C., Standard) and delineated by Miss Heckart and a fine cast, it had depth and conveyed an emotional sweep usually limited by the bounds of the conventional hour presentation.

Dealing primarily with a tradition-bound Italian-American family, proud and bigoted in their background, it afforded a vehicle for many interesting facets pertaining to the dominant male, rigid nationality lines, and a very charming and poignant awakening of a shy, not too young sister in the background of this all-male household. In addition, there was an unusually telling scene of an equally shy bachelor, awkward, alone and a social misfit.

Without detracting from the unusually fine and understanding performances of the entire cast and after giving due praise to direction and production in this meaningful drama, first honors must go to author Crean, heretofore a tv unknown. His capacity to conquer a mood with his simple dialog and vibrant characterizations of a people and their way of life certainly holds forth promise of an exciting addition to the ranks of topflight video dramatists.

Along with Miss Heckart, whose dramatic understanding has been broadening and deepening with each successive performance, there was a charming and dynamic portrayal of a priest by Carlos De-Angelo; a truly sensitive gem of a vignette in the role of the rejected suitor by Nehemiah Persoff and a sympathetic performance of a burly, kind Irish intruder into this Italian household by James Gregory. Richard Dunlap's direction was completely attuned to the play's nuances. Rose.

Matinee Theatre

There are no in-betweens in the music business world fashioned by Abby Mann and Jack Wilson in their hour-long teledrama, "The Old Payola," for NBC-TV's "Matinee Theatre" last Wednesday (8). According to the scripters, you either sing rock 'n' roll or Gershwin.

It's dilemma disturbing a young pop crooner (John Conte), his wife (Jeff Donnell), and his musical buddie (Jackie Coogan). For with the rockin' beat come a hoodlum manager (Lawrence Dobkin), angles, payolas and the singer's loss of integrity. Scripters had a workable premise in their topical theme but they let it get out of hand by reverting to cliche and trite attitudes. It turned out to be nothing more than a soaper with a Brill Building flavor.

Interspersed throughout the meller were some pretty caustic comments on the workings of the disk biz. References to shoving music down the public's throat, jukebox operator intrigue, disk jockey payoffs, and the tiein between rock 'n' roll and juvenile delinquency were thrown in to give the drama an aura of authenticity. The authors, however, were throwing their punches wildly and their message, that the "clean" music business was in a small Greenwich Village club singing "Someone To Watch Over Me," was unrealistic.

Sherman Marks' direction got the proper histrionic moods from the lead players and production flowed smoothly. Musical director Eddie Truman supplied the original rock 'n' roll tunes. They showed the beat off at its worst.

The production, incidentally, marked the 200th outing for "Matinee Theatre." Putting on a new hour drama every weekday is a herculean task, and bossman Albert McLeery rates a nod for keeping it all in working condition.

Ed Sullivan Show

Phil Silvers, subbing for Ed Sullivan, who was injured last week in an auto crash in Connecticut, bumped into a show Sunday (12) on which an emcee was seemingly doomed. It was a layout that for the most part was devoid of action. Dog acts and acrobats were needed to impart movement to the proceedings.

The bill carried a baseball motif that was carried on ad infinitum and with the kind of bookings that tended to create monotony. Silvers erred initially in holding forth for long periods during the opening sequence, a rather dull and windy period during which the wives of the N.Y. Yankees were presented, and then into a series of singles, which didn't constitute ideal vaudeo booking. The sole effort to get away from the succession of the solos was the quartetting of the four singles in get-together of "You Gotta Have Heart" with Jimmy Komack, of "Damn Yankees" fronting.

The baseball motif continued with Teresa Brewer in two tunes, latter of which was "I Love Mickey" dedicated to the Yank slugger. Miss Brewer apparently served her purpose in holding on to the teen audience.

Dick Shawn held a rather lengthy forum on a rookie pitcher. There weren't many laughs in the bit, but the intended pathos didn't come off either. The sole departure from baseball was Charlotte Rae in a special material bit on diets which had some rather funny moments.

Curiously enough, the rock 'n' rollers, The Platters, carried more interest. It was perhaps a relief to see more than one face at a time in front of the camera, and a familiar melody gave a needed break in the show.

The finale, a presentation of Olympic athletes, past and present, was aided by the sense of movement. The camera didn't dwell lengthily on a lot of potent personalities, including Jesse Owens, Floyd Patterson, the John B. Kellys, Jr. and Sr., Eleanor Holm, Rev. Bob Richards, Johnny Weismuller, and a lot of other greats in the athletic world. These were seemingly people of strength and stature and could have been given a little more spotlight than was allotted them. Jose.

Screen Directors Playhouse

Conjuring up memories of the past by associating them with songs of yesteryear was a device that came off fairly well in "It's a Most Unusual Day" via ABC-TV's "Screen Directors Playhouse" Wed. (8). Written and directed by Claude Binyon, the nostalgic piece obviously was replete with flashbacks as a nightclubbing couple recalled milestones in their wedded

(Fletcher D. Richards,

Although the only innocent party to the whole melange, Atlantic City suffered something of a setback on NBC-TV's "Sunday Night Spectacular" (12) when "Atlantic City Holiday" was given a 90-minute whirl in compatible tint. Even on the premise that mid-August viewers are prone to be charitable and merciful as regards summertime video, everybody concerned, and particularly the sponsors, rated a better shake than the mishmash thrown together for this glorification of the Jersey resort.

All the more surprising, too, in view of the high talent potential assembled for the 7:30 to 9 showcase. In Jack Carter "Holiday" boasted a sure footed trouper and comic of no mean voltage. Polly Bergen knows her way with a tune and how to exploit her attractiveness to a maximum degree. Parlaying a Pygmalion-garbed Rocky Graziano as vis-a-vis to Jayne Mansfield's Galatea on a visitation to the A. C. sands from the planet Venus in order to case Miss Universe suggested a potential for some pleasant moments in the laugh and sight department. And with the rock 'n' roll idolators in mind producer Ernest D. Glucksman tossed in such major exponents as Bill Haley & His Comets along with vocalist Pat Boone. For some added remote flavor there was even an on-the-spot pickup from A. C. Steel Pier for a high wire act, the inevitable comic divers and the Diving Horse.

On top of all that throw in Jonathan Winters, and that's a lot of entertainment. But unfortunately the end result was poor. The material for the most part was downright bad. Carter's standup comicalities have been seen to much better advantage. Miss Bergen had a few fetching moments in her "500 Club" chirping but, like most of the others, suffered a relapse on the story line continuity. Whatever potential the Pygmalion-Galatea business offered get lost in the George Foster-Mort Green "sketch and continuity" shuffle.

There was occasional lapses into the customary production numbers, with the usually capable Harry Sosnik orch backgrounding, but generally it adhered to the cliche. The color, at least, was good.

CONVENTION STORY
With John Daly, Quincy Howe, others
Director: Marshall Diskin
30 Mins.; Sat., 8 p.m.
PHILCO
ABC-TV, from Chicago

(Hutchins)

On the eve of the convention, ABC-TV let the public in on how it expects to cover the Democratic conclave, parading the net's newsmen from various vantage points, as well as the array of technical equipment which will be used. The preliminaries usually are never as interesting as the main event and this show proved no exception.

Although the newsmen, with John Daly acting as host, acquit themselves ably, the preview unveiled kinks in the technical end. At one point, the audio was not working, and in another remote pickup, the latter from Midway Airport, the pictures scrambled. As ever nimble John Daly put it, following the audio booboo, the dress rehearsal will help ABC-TV to discover and iron out the wrinkles.

The show had its impressive moments. Being one of two special weekend pre-convention broadcasts, the other on Sunday devoted to the theme of "These Are the Men," it underlines the extensive preparations and the costly outlay of ABC-TV. Barring further technical difficulties, it's hard to see how the eyes and ears of ABC-TV will miss any significant public development at the convention.

The Saturday half-hour took in the International Amphitheatre, the hotel headquarters of the delegations, as well as other likely newsdevelopment scenes, winding up with a brief panel discussion by ABC newsmen and others on the significance of Truman's announced support of Harriman's nomination. Horo.

Networks Strive to Be 'Different,' Bypassing Chi Convention 'Pool'

Chicago, Aug. 14.

Almost before the first "will delegates pleased be seated" chant boomed through the International Amphitheatre yesterday (Mon.), the three television networks were off and running—in every direction.

Patterns that will distinguish the webs' '56 coverage from political spreads of four years ago were quickly apparent off the sampling of a brace of warmup sessions of the Dem's whooptedoo yesterday, as CBS-TV, NBC-TV and ABC-TV swung into action after months of preparation.

This time the video trio is showing less hesitancy to use some editorial and showmanly discretion in switching to something more newsworthy when action gets dull on convention floor. They'll be debating for months the wisdom of CBS-TV's decision to bypass the Dem's propaganda film at last night's keynote bash. But most tele news experts are in agreement that the time is here to get the principle of "editorial selection" as firmly implanted in politicans' consciousness for video as it is for press.

Also this year, the nets individually are going all out to inject their own flavor into proceedings so that the hoped for 100,000,000 viewers will have really three "different" shows from which to choose. In short, shotcallers are sticking to the collective pool only when absolutely necessary and are freewheeling all over the competitive lot.

That the networks aren't content to be merely a multi-million dollar electronic soapbox for politicians and that they're ready to do frantic battle with one another for news beats was obvious from start. All three of them soon cut away from droning speeches and routine formalities of the opening round whenever one of their legmen and floating cameras had cornered some political power that might throw some light on the hectic Democratic presidential and vice presidential birth pangs.

Despite all the new gear which has added much to the medium's mobility, not all of this hop-skip-and-pumping around the Windy City comes over successfully. Political conventions, especially in these early "smoke filled rooms" stage, is like an iceberg with most of the meaty action carefully hidden from view. But tv is in there trying and if the boys get tangled up now and then in their own cables, maybe that adds to the fun.

It would be impossible to list "scoops" each claimed in just one day's shooting. Actually the scoop scorecard isn't putting the publicity lads in such a tizzy at this event in general recognition that it's pretty much a matter of luck.

'Individual' Touches

Aside from roving crews spotted at Conrad Hilton Convention headquarters and other key spots around town, mostly of "individuality" touches are being imparted by non-pool cameras shooting convention scenes from top of the hall radio booths and portable units down on the floor. As result Bob Doyle's pool leasers are playing to control room monitors to a much greater extent than in '52 as NBC's chief tv director Ralph Peterson, CBS's Don Hewitt and ABC's Sonny Diskin are sending out their own pickups.

Except for a few new touches and faces, the web's anchor setups are familiar to political fans. Chet Huntley, David Brinkley, Bill Henry and H. V. Kaltenborn as the analytical in-and-outers are doing running narration for NBC.

Walter Cronkite again is doing sole gab quarterbacking for CBS. "Electronic Window" peephole borrowed from "Person To Person" adds a measure of scope to his poopdeck but it's of dubious value.

ABC's John Daly and Quincy Howe, are the only commentators with a direct view of the floor scramble. However, their cramped working quarters are a visual handicap when they're on camera.

NBC unveiled its sidebar addenda at the close of afternoon session with cartoonist Walt Kelly coming on with his "Pogo Party" insert, followed by "Cross-Country Caucus" roundup of hometown angles from six cities. "Pogo" didn't get off the ground on this first outing and the "Caucus" sequence just added more pontificating to the heavy round of same from experts on the scene.

Much more meaningful was Kaltenborn's post-session it aimed at teenagers. Some of his younger colleagues could use a touch of the vet's gusto and enthusiasm.

NBC-TV, from Chicago

NBC-TV chose the regular "Outlook" show to expand upon for its "preview" of the Democratic Convention, and will do the same next Sunday as the warmer-upper for the GOP conclave in San Francisco. The choice of "Outlook" was logical from a couple of standpoints—it fell within the right time period for such a night-before o.o., and it's helmed by Chet Huntley, who's to be the anchor man for the convention coverage and who's the object of a big NBC buildup besides.

Apart from the NBC penchant for showiness and a few embarrassing miscues, the NBC preview went pretty well, what with live remotes all over Chicago to the various receptions, preparatory groups, hotel lobbies and even a caucus. NBC cameras got hold of Adlai Stevenson and Eleanor Roosevelt, Averell Harriman, Estes Kefauver and Stuart Symington at their various headquarters or receptions or in the case of Symington, on a stroll with WDAF-TV (Kansas City) news director Randall Jessee. If the NBC interviewers didn't get the right answers from the prospective candidates, they did ask the right questions and showed a hep approach that's bound to pay off during the coverage itself.

Other facets of the show were less effective. A series of specially shot or edited film clips of some of the sights of Chicago were merely time-fillers. Shots of "people to watch for" were useful but something of a hodge-podge of assorted stock shots (like the one of Mayor Robert F. Wagner at Yankee Stadium). Okay but poorly integrated was a clip on all the Democratic candidates since William Jennings Bryan. In the integration of film and live, director John Goetz missed a few cues, and left some embarrassing-looking newsmen facing the cameras with nothing to say. One other point—why does NBC always have to go in for gimmickry, like the "Convention Central" routine with pan shots of a studio? A waste of time and motion and not at all impressing.

As to the individual newsmen themselves, Huntley is an impressive frontman who also gave evidence of knowing his onions in his one live remote interview. Brinkley, Henry and the rest of the staff are all pros—too bad NBC buries them most of the year so there's not that audience respect and recognition that so easily accrues to their colleagues over at CBS. H. V. Kaltenborn, one of the studio team, hasn't been seen for the longest time, and before that was used only on a local N. Y. basis. If their convention work fulfills their early promise, maybe they'll be around more often in the future. Chan.

NBC-TV, from Hollywood

It's easy to see how NBC brass would figure a program spotlighting the piano wizardry and friendly personality of Frankie Carle should make a fine 15-minute summer entry. There's nothing wrong with the idea, only with the way the initial program was executed—and that's exactly what the network did—literally and figuratively.

Producer-director Jim Jordan, Jr., must have thought he had a chance to create a new Liberace the way he let the cameras linger interminably on Carle. There was little imagination displayed in the show, and what leaked through the corner of the camera's eye indicated there wasn't even good usage of some apparently imaginative settings.

Format is strictly radio with Carle at the piano, 88ing easily or parlez-ing occasional palaver with a guest. First guest, Joanne Gilbert, wasn't even photographed to advantage. Too, bad mike placement frequently had the small VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

'HURRAY FOR THE REGIONALS'

Guild to Give Matty Fox 500,000 Shares for Seven Ex-UM&M Skeins

A group led by Matty Fox is on the verge of receiving a major stock interest in Guild Films. Reub Kaufman, prexy of Guild, and Fox, head of C&C Television, are negotiating the final stages of an exchange. Guild is to receive seven telefilm series for which it will give up about 500,000 shares of common stock, it's understood.

It's reported that Fox will relinquish the seven telefilm skeins which originally were distributed by Motion Pictures for Television, controlled by Fox. MPTV gave up the pix to UM&M, which was later bought out by National Telefilm Associates, leaving distribution of these particular series up in the air. Fox, who handles them in behalf of various producers, was in negotiation with NTA some weeks ago to permit distribution of the pix on a fee basis. The Guild deal is the latest, and seems close to consummation.

The 500,000 shares of Guild are of a new issue. They will be transferred to Fox and the pic producers. At present Guild has 1,032,686 shares outstanding, but the Security Exchange Commission has authorized 2,000,000 shares. It was further reported that for the negatives of the series, Guild was allowing the Fox group options to buy another 200,000 or more shares of Guild common stock.

Vidpix under discussion are "Sherlock Holmes," "Janet Dean," "Paris Precinct," and the quarter-hour "Junior Science" pix, another 15-minute batch, "Col. Tim McCoy," and "Duffy's Tavern" and "Flash Gordon."

In recent days, trading on Guild shares has been unusually high, reaching several thousand daily. The stock was recently accepted on the American Stock Exchange board.

'Citizen Soldier' Next for Cal Nat

Operations of the reorganized California National Productions subsid of NBC are starting to click into place, with the Alan Livingston-helmed setup this week finallzing its second new property in as many weeks, this to be produced in cooperation with the Defense Dept. under the title of "Citizen Soldier." Only last week, CNP finalized a deal for the production of the "Tarzan" series.

New series, much of which will be shot on location of actual battle scenes along the Rhine in Germany with current contingents of GI's playing the roles of their World War II counterparts, will deal with the WW II civilian-turned-soldier and will include behind-the-lines stories as well as battlefield plots. Signal Corps in contributing stock footage of battle scenes to the series, as well as cooperating with the new filming.

Series will be syndicated via the NBC Television Films division of CNP. Bob Levitt, CNP general manager in N. Y., has tapped Bill Lawrence, head of the eastern program development department, to set up a staff and screen scripts for the show.

'Dr. Christian' Sold In 103 TV Markets

Sales in a total of 103 tv markets have been rung up by Ziv for "Dr. Christian," which just recently was released to the Ziv sales force for marketing.

Rapid climb of the market list is largely accounted for by strong activity among regional clients for multi-market deals. So far, the average "Dr. Christian" customer has been signing for eight to 10 markets. These include Mueller's Macaroni, Hekman Biscuits, Coors Beer, S & W Foods and Lee Optical.

Jackie Cooper Doubles As 'People's' Director

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Jackie Cooper continues his telefilm directing career, as well as starring in the next batch of McCadden-Irving Brecher's "The People's Choice" vidpix. Cooper got his first taste of tv film direction last season, when he helmed the last segment of the series.

According to producer Brecher, Cooper is the only director currently assigned to "Choice," which has 26 stanzas to film.

Telefilm Pattern Gets a Resounding Payoff at WPIX

N.Y. indie WPIX has put its programming stake on half-hour telefilms, with 35 such syndication programs now being aired, and another 25 due to bow in the fall.

To date, about 50% of the projected 60 half-hours have been sold for full or alternate week sponsorship, with the outlook good for latching on to participations in the remaining 50% of the syndicated programming area.

Among those picking up the tab are General Electric, which bought four telefilm shows, Piels Beer, inked for three, Quaker City Chocolate, for two, Ralston Purina for "I Search for Adventure," Ballantine Beer for "Highway Patrol," Clairoil for "Rosemary Clooney," and Mueller Macaroni for "Dr. Christian."

The projected 60 telefilm series for the fall represents a sharp increase when compared to the 25 telefilm programs WPIX had last fall. It also makes the New York Daily News station the top outlet in the seven-station market for telefilms, with twice as many half-hour skeins slated for fall airing on WPIX as telecast by any other N.Y. station.

Comes September, WPIX will be programming half-hour telefilms from 6:30 to 11:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and on Sundays from 4 p.m., with half-hours beginning at 6 p.m. on Saturdays.

The latest advertiser to latch on to the fast-selling participations for "Popeye the Sailor," also due to bow in the fall, is M & M Candy.

WABD GETS FLOCK OF TELEFILM CLIENTS

The telefilm sponsorship pacts are beginning to come in a rush at WABD. Last week, the DuMont o&o, in N. Y., pacted four alternate sponsors to half-hour shows for fall and firmed up several others to participate in the latest of the "Looney Tunes," stripped at 6:30 p.m.

Seven-Up bought half of "Bugs Bunny Theatre," a special Friday nght-at-7:30 compilation of Associated Artist product. Sandy Becker, "Looney" emcee, will also do this show.

Gold Seal bought alternate weeks on "Sherlock Holmes," at 1 p.m. Friday and alternates on the Ray Milland telefilms Wednesday at 8:30, plus a package of Class A spots. Other sponsor for Milland on WABD will be Rogers Mattress. Pope Tomatoes has taken skip-weeks on Ethel Barrymore's show Fridays at 8:30.

Poll Parrott Shoes, National Biscuit, Maggio Carrotts, Milani Salad Dressing, Bosco, Arnold Bakery, Chuckles Candy, Schwinn Bikes, American Pencil have bought into the five-participation-a-night "Looney Tunes." Most of them start in Sept.

GET SYNDICATORS OUT OF SLUMP

Firstrun syndication business, which has been in the doldrums for something like a year, has done a turnabout and is booming. Much of the credit for the boom accrues to big regional sponsors who are moving into vidpix sponsorship at an unprecedented rate.

There isn't a syndication outfit in the business which can recall the kind of regional business that's been compressed into the past few weeks. Deals like Esso's first-time 49 markets on "Star Performance" and Slenderella's 35 markets on the same show, also a first-time in syndication for the reducing salon chain. Also, the 17-market Chunky deal for "The Legionnaire," in the rerun vein. In firstrun, there's the five regionals on "Code 3," topped by National Biscuit, Signal Oil and Petri Wine; the "Dr. Christian" deals like S&W Foods on the Coast and Lee Optical's 14 markets in Texas; the four-way 29 market spread on "Sheriff of Cochise" on the Coast (see separate story) following by only a couple of weeks Socony Mobile Oil's 67 markets on the same show. That's only a sampling of many such deals.

Net result is that the syndicators are expected once more to put both feet into syndication, after a layoff period of over a year that's seen them leery of the market-by-market situation and concentrating their shots on a network level. Fact that Gross-Krasne, who are plenty savvy in the syndicated field after their United Television Program experience, would once against go through the cost and headache of reestablishing a sales operation and throwing production coin into their O. Henry series would indicate more than casual confidence in the syndication market.

The upbeat is reflected in other quarters as well. California National Productions the NBC subsid, is on an all-out expansion program that will see much of its new product earmarked for syndication, like the new "Civilian Soldier" package. National Telefilm Associates which foreswore syndication in light of its heavy feature film investments, got into the act with "Cochise" on the strength of its regional deals, and although NTA has been around for some time, this was its first new syndication show since it turned out a few spare "China Smith" episodes a couple of years back.

Immediate effect of the upbeat will probably see syndicators putting up for sale regional and syndicated series on which they had produced only a pilot for purposes of attempting network-only sales. Ordinarily, having been unsuccessful with a network deal the syndicators would shelve the pilots until late fall or next spring with another try for a network deal. But in view of the upbeat, it's not unlikely that many will go ahead with production of 39 films in the series after catching hold of a regional deal to defray some of the costs.

PINE-THOMAS PREP 3 TELEPIX SERIES

Hollywood, Aug. 14.

Three pilots are being prepped by Pine-Thomas for as many vidfilm series and initialler, "Outpost," will roll in mid-August, according to William Thomas.

Second property is "Johnny Pilgrim," a private eye series and third is yet undisclosed, Telepix activity will supplement P-T's feature program, which resumes with "The Big Caper."

More 'Code 3' Sales

"Code 3" sales by ABC Film Syndication keep perking along, with another two multi-market deals inked by the Fleming Co. and Top Value Enterprises in seven markets.

CBS Full of Animation, Projecting Terrytoons Into TV Programming

With most of the stock-taking and inventorying now complete since CBS purchased Terrytoons for $5,000.000 at the beginning of the year, the New Rochelle animation plant is swinging into a diversified and fullscale production effort that will embrace television programming, special effects for video, tv animated commercials on a open-to-all basis and continuation of theatrical cartoons for 20th-Fox distribution.

Under exec producer Gene Deitch, former UPA exec who recently took over the creative chores at Terrytoons, the hottest project in the works at the CBS subsid is a new series of children's cartoons under the title of a new character, "Tom Terrific." Current plans—project is in the pilot stage—are to produce five four-minute cliffhanger episodes for each story, for initial use on the CBS-TV "Captain Kangaroo" morning kidshow. Under such a formula, the five episodes could then be combined and edited into a 15-minute program for use on other kidshows and eventual syndication through CBS television Film Sales. Number of such 15-minute shows would depend on the reaction to the strip showings on "Kangaroo." Series is an adventure story, with the title character being a little boy who can turn into anything he wants to be. Allan Swift is doing the voices.

First evidence of the subsid's new work for television, however, will be seen next Sunday (19) on the Ed Sullivan show, for which Terrytoons has created eight one-minute animated introductions. Sullivan has indicated he'd like to experiment some more in this direction. The introes will concern Sullivan's international search for talent, in keeping with the general theme of Sunday's show, "Sullivan's Travels," but if these click, some more with other themes will be ordered.

On the commercial side, Deitch said Terrytoons would attempt to concentrate on "comedy commer-

'Johnny Nighthawk' On Briskin SG Agenda

The first Briskin Productions series designed for the syndication market will be "Johnny Nighthawk" an adventure series.

This series, like the other three announced Briskin productions, will be released by Screen Gems and marks the 13th new Screen Gems telefilm series for the 1957-'58 season. Other Briskin productions include "Casey Jones," "Captain Charlie's Showboat," and "Tom, Dick and Harry."

Joseph Hoffman, currently producing for the Ford Theatre, has been assigned to do the pilot on "Johnny Nighthawk."

OF Sets WCBS-TV Stu Erwin Strips; 100G 3-Yr. Deal

With its morning vidpix strip pattern now successfully entrenched, WCBS-TV, the CBS flagship in New York, has taken steps to expand the supply of product for the hour segment with the purchase of 130 Stu Erwin filmed comedy shows under a three-year deal which permits the station four runs per pic. Again the beneficiary is Official Films, which earlier had pioneered the strip pattern on the station with the sale of its "My Little Margie" bundle of 115 films.

New deal, involving approximately $100,000, gives the flagship some 320 half-hour comedy shows with which to fill the 9 to 10 a.m. hour. Station started with "Margie" at 9 a.m. and "Amos 'n' Andy" at 9:30, and that's the format that's currently holding forth. The Erwin comedies will be used to spell one or the other, more likely the "A&A" shows since there are only 78 of these. No starting date is set for the Erwin films, since station wants to see how many times the "Margie" and "A&A" pix can go round before the ratings start to decline, but the three-year pact takes effect in October. Likelihood is that it may be as long as a year before the Erwin comedies are used.

GROSS-KRASNE SET THREE SALES VEEPEES

Gross-Krasne, which is reentering syndication for the first time in a year and a half via sale of its own production of an O. Henry half-hour anthology, has firmed up its three key salesmen. All were given veep stripes.

Robert Brahm, who was eastern sales manager at Screen Gems for five years before switching to General Artists to sell 20th Fox telefilm, will become v.p. in charge of G-K's N. Y. operation, to hit Gotham agencies. G-K plan is to go after regional accounts exclusively with the hard-core sales group.

Irving Feld, at MPTV and Guild formerly, will head up the new org's western sales division. Mel Schlank, who was also hired last week, will be a veep without portfolio for the present. Schlank has been producer's representative for Gross and Krasne for some time.

Phil Krasne, co-partner with Jack Gross in G-K and the O. Henry telefilm venture, said in N. Y. last week that they will bide their time before hiring other salesmen they had in mind. First they want to see how well they click on a sale via a major agency.

Hollywood—New southern states rep for Clampet-Toon Commercials Inc., is Francis McGuire, named last week by firm topper Bob Clampett. McGuire will establish hq in Nashville.

'Sheriff Cochise' 4-Sponsor Deal

National Telefilm Associates has worked out an unusual four-way regional on the Coast for its "Sheriff of Cochise" series in coproduction with Desilu. Deal calls for four Coast bankrollers, all out of the Erwin, Wasey agency, to take on the series in 29 markets, which combined with the earlier regional deal in the midwest with Socony Mobil Oil, brings the market total sold on the western to 96 in only two transactions. NTA hasn't started selling the show on a single-market basis yet.

Under the four-sponsor deal, A-1 Beer, White King Soap, Starkist Tuna and Carnation will share the series in 29 markets. Complex arrangement calls for each of the sponsors to b.r. the show solo in some markets and on a cosponsorship basis in others. Where the sponsor's distribution pattern is unduplicated by any of the others, he'll go solo, but where duplication exists, they'll duplicate. In any case, there will be no more than two sponsors in each market, with Wasey having worked out the pattern on that basis.

Universal's TV Div. In Peak Com'l Prod.

Universal Pictures Television, the video department of the motion picture company, will hit a new peak in production of tv commercials during the next few weeks, with 120 commercials slated to be lensed.

National advertisers include DeSoto, Lux, Campbell Soups, Marlboro, Philip Morris and Pepsi Cola.

More Singing, Less Oratory To Keynote GOP's Non-Controversial Frisco Convention; Stars Move In

By BILL STEIF

San Francisco, Aug. 14.

With the three television networks geared for unprecedented coverage of the GOP convention, the big question being raised is—what is there to cover?

This is the nets' biggest problem, unvoiced but all-pervading, because of the fact that there is so little real controversy over the GOP ticket. This problem also accounts for the Republican National Committee's unusual devotion to the convention's entertainment aspects.

Result is that the Republicans are admitting, quite openly, that they'll purvey more singing and less oratory this year than ever before.

This was the word from actor George Murphy, up from Hollywood last week after lining up talent, and from Mrs. Webster B. Todd, new Jersey national committeewoman who heads the music subcommittee.

Definitely scheduled for places on the program are Ethel Merman, Jane Powell, John Charles Thomas, Lucille Norman, Brian Sullivan, The King's Men, Gene Archer and Patrice Munsel. In addition, Murphy hopes to snag Rosalind Russell, Irene Dunne, Howard Keel and possibly Helen Hayes, if she's back from Europe in time.

Three local choral groups, the Loring Club, La Golondrina Singers and Frisco Boys' Club chorus, are also billed, and more talent is in the works. Irving Berlin will also introduce the 1956 official campaign song, "Ike For Four More Years."

Murphy said "a large percentage" of televised proceedings would be given over to entertainment, and national chairman Leonard W. Hall's already made it clear that he expects speeches to run no more than 20 minutes.

A Big Frisco Com'l

With plenty of mobile cameras floating about Frisco's downtown, and not too much unusual happening at the Cow Palace, the GOP convention may turn out to be a unique commercial for this hilly, foggy city. If the home viewers will go for it, and the tv nets don't mind spending the money, Frisco's delighted.

There's one thing all Frisco knows: the GOP convention is first and foremost television's show, the year's biggest electronic binge. The fact is evidenced over and over again. Almost every preparation for the convention is angled toward tv, and the television networks have responded by pouring a treasure of time, talent and money into this vast entertainment.

The Cow Palace itself needs a monster screen to be appreciated fully. The main building, with its two wings, covers five acres of ground. It sits at Frisco's southern boundary in a small plain between coastal foothills and Frisco Bay and was built in 1935 with state funds to handle livestock shows.

The building's management has spent $625,000 in the past year for capital improvements — these are part of a long-range plan and would have to be done, anyway. Only a fortnight ago workmen finished treating the whole ceiling with acoustical material at a cost of $52,000. The 4,000-car parking lot has been improved. New drapes have been hung. New exit ramps, painting, paving, fire alarms, electrical systems, and a lot of other improvements have been introduced.

But it wasn't until last June that tv's concentrated effort began.
